The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the grant of a perpetual easement to the United States Government and the Works Progress Administration pursuant to an instrument dated November 15, 1935, and recorded on December 22, 1936, for the construction and maintenance of a dam and reservoir in Bear Canyon, on the Mimbres River, in Grant County, N. ALLOWANCES FOR LOSSES BY LEAKAGE AND EVAPORATION OF BRANDY OR FRUIT SPIRITS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6268) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make certain allowances for losses by leakage and evaporation upon withdrawal of packages of brandy or fruit spirits under certain conditions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is in any way a reduction of the internal revenue now derived from the sale of spirituous liquors?

Mr. BUCK. This has nothing to do with the reduction or increase of the revenues at all.

I may say for the benefit of the gentleman that there is in existence, and has been since 1894, a provision in our laws which allows manufacturers of distilled spirits and brandy a certain loss or evaporation leakage allowance in computing the amount of tax that they have to pay on withdrawal of their product from a bonded warehouse.

The Internal Revenue Code, section 2901 (a), provides for these loss allowances where the brandy or fruit spirits is in "casks or packages of a capacity of 40 or more wine gallons" or in "casks or packages" of not less than 20 gallons. No specific provision was made for loss allowances in the case of containers other than "casks or packages."

When normal grape and fruit distillery operations were resumed following the repeal of prohibition, an acute shortage developed in small cooperage, as well as in Government bonded warehouse facilities in California. This shortage led to the erection of a number of storage tanks for temporary deposit of the brandy or fruit spirits, until the casks or barrels became available and warehouse facilities were enlarged. The brandy or fruit spirits was only stored in such tanks a few months and was deposited in casks and barrels within a short time for further storage and aging. As the law is at present worded and as the regulations are interpreted, however, all of this brandy or fruit spirits which was stored at any time in a storage tank and then placed in a cask or package thereafter, is excluded from the loss allowance provisions.

In the revision of the liquor tax administration law of 1936 no consideration was given to the fact that the storage of brandy or fruit spirits had been made in tanks temporarily. As the member of the Ways and Means Committee who introduced that bill in its final form into the House and piloted it through the House, I can truthfully say that there was no deliberate intention to exclude from the loss allowance provision brandy or fruit spirits which had been temporarily deposited for storage in tanks. This was a legislative oversight. As a result, certain fruit distillers are called upon to pay the Federal tax of $2 per proof gallon on brandy or fruit spirits lost through normal leakage and evaporation, simply because through a brief period of time these were stored in a Government bonded warehouse storage tank. All of these spirits have been under Government lock and key at all times. No question of fault or negligence is involved. Full protection of the revenue will be afforded because the allowance for losses can only be granted where the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, finds that the loss is a proper one under the law. I may add that this bill only affects these few past transactions. It cannot affect the future in the least.

The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as shown by the report which the Ways and Means Committee has filed, and I may add that it has the unanimous recommendation of that committee that the bill be passed.

Mr. RICH. You are sure that the people of California did not drink this wine?

Mr. BUCK. I am certain they did not, because the Government officials had the key at all times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make allowances for losses by leakage and evaporation in accordance with section 2901, Internal Revenue Code, upon withdrawal of packages of brandy or fruit spirits now deposited in internal-revenue bonded warehouses, which were filled with storage tanks in bonded warehouses prior to June 26, 1936.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO DISTILLED SPIRITS ACT

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6479) amending section 2857 of the Distilled Spirits Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what this bill does?

Mr. BUCK. This is a bookkeeping proposition entirely. It deals with the records which the law requires wholesale but not retail dealers to keep in respect to their receipts and dispositions of distilled spirits.

A wholesale liquor dealer is defined by law as one who sells distilled spirits, wines, and so forth, in quantities of 5 gallons or more to the same person at the same time. He is required to keep certain records. He also may be a retail liquor dealer. It follows that there are many wholesale liquor dealers selling wine and distilled liquors, who sell them at retail on the same premises. Under the law and the present regulations of the Treasury Department such wholesale liquor dealers are required to record their receipts and dispositions of distilled spirits. The purpose of the bill is to relieve the wholesale distillers of their responsibility to report as to retail sales. It is a bookkeeping proposition entirely. It has the approval of the Treasury and was reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RICH. Is it not necessary for the wholesaler to report whom he sells to?

Mr. BUCK. It will still be necessary for the wholesaler to report his wholesale sales. It will, however, relieve him of reporting his retail sales.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so merely for the purpose of confirming what the gentleman from California has said: That so far as the Ways and Means Committee is concerned this bill and the previous one were reported unanimously by the committee. There was careful study of these bills by the committee, and the minority agrees with the majority that the bill should be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the first paragraph of section 2857 (a) be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2857. Books of rectifiers and wholesale dealers.

"(a) Requirements.—Every rectifier and every wholesale liquor dealer who sells, or offers for sale, distilled spirits in quantities of 5 wine-gallons or more to the same person at the same time shall keep daily, at his place of business covered by his special tax stamp, a record of distilled spirits received and disposed of by him, and shall render under oath correct transcripts and summaries of such records: Provided, That the Commissioner may in his discretion require such record to be kept at the place where the spirits are actually received and sent out. The records shall be kept and the transcripts shall be rendered in such form, and under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe."

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief editorial from a Washington newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6618) to provide for the registration of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill and amendments be dispensed with, the amended bill to be printed in the RECORD; and I may say in this connection that the amendments are merely clarifying, some to correct typographical errors and others make changes merely in administrative matters. They are recommended by the Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. WOODRUM]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The amended bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted etc.,

TITLE I—THE PRINCIPAL REGISTER

SECTION 1. Trade-marks used in commerce may be registered in the following manner:

(a) By filing in the Patent Office—

(1) a written application, verified by the applicant, including a statement specifying the date of first use of the mark, and the goods or services in connection with which it is used, in such form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner;

(2) a drawing of the mark; and

(3) such number of specimens or facsimiles of the mark as actually used as may be required by the Commissioner.

(b) By paying into the Patent Office the filing fee.

(c) By complying with such rules or regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner.

(d) If the applicant is not domiciled in the United States he shall designate by a written document filed in the Patent Office the name and address of some person resident in the United States on whom may be served notices or process in proceedings affecting the mark. Such notices or process may be served upon the person so designated by leaving a copy thereof at the last address so filed. If the person so designated cannot be found at the address given in the designation, such notice or process may be served upon the Commissioner.

MARKS REGISTRABLE ON THE PRINCIPAL REGISTER

SEC. 2. No mark by which the goods of the applicant may be distinguished from the goods of others shall be refused registration as a trade-mark on account of its nature unless it—

(a) Consists of or comprises immoral, deceptive, or scandalous matter; or matter which tends to disparage persons, living or dead, institutions, beliefs, or national symbols, or to bring them into contempt;

(b) Consists of or comprises the flag or coat of arms or other insignia of the United States, or of any State or municipality, or of any foreign nation, or any simulation thereof;

(c) Consists of or comprises the name, portrait, or signature of a living individual unless by his written consent;

(d) Consists of or comprises a mark which so resembles a mark previously registered or used by another and not abandoned, as to be likely, when applied to the goods of the applicant, to cause confusion or mistake or to deceive purchasers;

(e) Consists of a mark which, (1) when applied to the goods of the applicant is merely descriptive of them, (2) when applied to the goods of the applicant is primarily geographically descriptive of them, except as indications of regional origin may be registrable under section 4 hereof, (3) is primarily merely a surname.

(f) Except as expressly excluded in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of this section, nothing herein shall prevent the registration of any mark used by the applicant as a trade-mark which has become distinctive of the applicant's goods in commerce. Substantially exclusive use as a mark by applicant, in commerce for 2 years prior to the application, may be accepted by the Commissioner as prima facie evidence of distinctiveness.

SERVICE AND CERTIFICATION MARKS REGISTRABLE

SEC. 3. Subject to the same provisions relating to the registration of trade-marks, so far as they may be applicable, service and certification marks used in commerce shall be registrable, in the same manner and with the same effect, and when registered they shall be entitled to the protection provided herein in the case of trade-marks. The Commissioner may establish a separate register for such service and certification marks. Applications and procedure under this section may conform as nearly as practicable to those prescribed for the registration of trade-marks.

COLLECTIVE AND ASSOCIATION MARKS REGISTRABLE

SEC. 4. Subject to the provisions relating to the registration of trade-marks, so far as they may be applicable, collective marks, including indications of regional origin, used by natural or juristic persons, and nations, States, municipalities, and the like, exercising legitimate control over the use of the mark sought to be registered, even though not possessing an industrial or commercial establishment, shall be registrable under this act in the same manner and with the same effect, and when registered they shall be entitled to the protection provided herein the the case of trade-marks.

USE BY RELATED COMPANIES

SEC. 5. Where the mark sought to be registered is or may be used by subsidiary or related companies, or by the members of an association, such use shall be deemed exclusive in the holding, parent, or related company or in the association; and use of registered marks by companies subsidiary or related to the registrant or by the members of an association shall not affect the validity of such mark or of its registration.

DISCLAIMERS

SEC. 6. The Commissioner may require unregistrable matter to be disclaimed, but such disclaimer shall not prejudice or affect the applicant's or owner's rights then existing or thereafter arising in the disclaimed matter, nor shall such disclaimer prejudice or affect the applicant's or owner's right of registration on another application of later date if the disclaimed matter has become distinctive of the applicant's goods.

CERTIFICATES

SEC. 7. (a) Certificates of registration of marks registered upon the principal register shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Patent Office, and shall either be signed by the Commissioner or have his name printed thereon and attested by an assistant commissioner or by one of the law examiners duly designated by the Commissioner, and a record thereof, together with printed copies of the drawing and statement of the applicant, shall be kept in books for that purpose. The certificate shall state the date on which the application for registration was received in the Patent Office.

(b) The certificate of registration of a mark upon the principal register provided by this act shall be prima facie evidence of the validity of the mark and of registrant's exclusive right to use the same in commerce.

(c) Certificates of registration of marks may be issued to the assignees of the applicant, but the assignment must first be recorded in the Patent Office. In case of succession or change of ownership the Commissioner shall, upon a proper showing at the request of the owner or successor and upon the payment of the fee herein provided, issue to such owner or successor a new certificate of registration of the said mark in the name of such owner or successor, and for the original period.

(d) The Commissioner, upon application of the registrant, may permit any registration under this or any previous act to be canceled or for good cause to be amended or disclaimed in whole or in part, at any time upon payment of the required fee: Provided, That the Commissioner shall determine that when so amended it shall still contain registrable matter and not require republication, and the Commissioner shall make appropriate entry upon the records of the Patent Office and upon the certificate of registration, or if said certificate is lost or destroyed upon a certified copy thereof.

(e) Copies of any records, books, papers, or drawings belonging to the Patent Office relating to marks, and copies of certificates of registration, authenticated by the seal of the Patent Office and certified by the Commissioner, or in his name by a chief of division duly designated by the Commissioner, shall be evidence in all cases wherein the originals would be evidence; and any person making application therefor and paying the fee required by law shall have such copies.

(f) Whenever a mistake in a registration, incurred through the fault of the Patent Office, is clearly disclosed by the records of the Office, a certificate stating the fact and nature of such mistake, signed by the Commissioner and sealed with the seal of the Patent Office, may be issued, without charge, and recorded and a printed copy thereof attached to each printed copy of the registration, and such certificate shall thereafter be considered as part of the original, and every registration, together with such certificate, shall have the same effect and operation in law on the trial of all actions or causes thereafter arising as if the same had been originally issued in such corrected form. All such certificates heretofore issued in accordance with the rules of the Patent Office and the registrations to which they are attached shall have the same force and effect as if such certificates and their issue had been specifically authorized by statute.

(g) Whenever a mistake has been made in a registration certificate and a showing has been made that such mistake occurred in good faith through the fault of the applicant, the Commissioner is authorized to issue a certificate of correction upon the payment of the required fee, provided the Commissioner shall determine that the correction is not such as to necessitate republication of the mark.

DURATION

SEC. 8. Each certificate of registration shall remain in force for 20 years: Provided, That the registration of any mark under the provisions of this act shall be canceled at the end of 5 years following its date, unless within 3 months next preceding the expiration of such 5 years the registrant shall file in the Patent Office an affidavit in such form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner stating that said mark is still in use. If, however, nonuse is due to special circumstances and not to any intention not to use or to abandon such mark, the affidavit shall so state, in which case the registration shall not be canceled because of such nonuse. Forms for such affidavits shall be attached to each certificate of registration.

RENEWAL

SEC. 9. On application of the registrant, certificates of registration may be renewed for like periods of 20 years from the end of the expiring period on payment of the renewal fees required by this act if the registered mark is still in use; and such application may be made at any time within 6 months before the expiration of the period for which the certificate of registration was issued or renewed, or may be made within 3 months after such expiration on payment of an additional fee as herein provided.

ASSIGNMENT

SEC. 10. A registered mark or a mark for which application has been filed shall be assignable either with or without the goodwill of the business. Assignments shall be by instruments in writing duly executed. Acknowledgement shall be prima facie evidence of the execution of the assignment and when recorded in the Patent Office the record shall be prima facie evidence of execution. An assignment shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, unless it is recorded in the Patent Office within 3 months from the date thereof or prior to such subsequent purchase. The Commissioner shall keep a record of assignments.

SEC. 11. Any acknowledgement or verification shall be valid if it complies with the laws of the State or country where it is made.

PUBLICATION

SEC. 12. Upon the filing of an application for registration and payment of the fees herein provided, the Commissioner shall cause an examination to be made and, if on such examination it shall appear that the applicant is entitled to registration, the Commissioner shall cause the mark to be published at least once in the Official Gazette of the Patent Office.

OPPOSITION

SEC. 13. Any person who would be damaged by the registration of a mark may file a verified notice of opposition in the Patent Office stating the grounds therefor within 30 days after the publication in the Official Gazette of the mark sought to be registered. For good cause shown, the time for filing notice of opposition may be extended by the Commissioner. An unverified opposition may be filed by a duly authorized attorney, but such opposition shall be null and void unless verified by the opposer within a reasonable time after such filing to be fixed by the Commissioner.

CANCELATION

SEC. 14. Whenever any person is damaged by the registration of a mark under this act, he may, within 10 years from the date of such registration, apply to cancel the registration thereof. If a registered mark has been abandoned or its registration was obtained fraudulently or contrary to the provisions of section 2, subsections (a), (b), or (c) hereof, application for its cancelation may be made at any time. In the case of marks registered under the acts of February 20, 1905, and March 3, 1881, the 10-year period shall begin from the effective date of this act.

SEC. 15. After the period for the cancelation of the registration of a trade-mark has expired, the right of the registrant to use his mark in commerce shall be incontestable.

INTERFERENCE

SEC. 16. Whenever application is made for the registration of a mark which in the opinion of the Commissioner so resembles a mark previously registered by another, or for the registration of which another has previously made application, as to be likely when applied to the goods of the applicant, to cause confusion or mistake or to deceive purchasers, the Commissioner may declare that an interference exists. No interference shall be declared between an application and a mark the right to use of which has become incontestable.

SEC. 17. In every case of interference, opposition to registration, or application to cancel the registration of a mark, the Commissioner shall give notice to all parties and shall direct the examiner in charge of interferences to determine the right of registration.

SEC. 18. The Commissioner may refuse to register the opposed mark, may cancel the registration of a registered mark, or may refuse to register any or all of several interfering marks, or may register the mark for the person or persons entitled thereto.

(a) In all inter partes proceedings the doctrine of laches and acquiescence, where applicable, shall be considered and applied. The provisions of this section shall also govern cases heretofore begun in the Patent Office and not finally determined, and the provisions of section 21 respecting remands shall be applicable to this section.

SEC. 19. Appeal may be taken to the Commissioner in person from the final decision of the examiner of interferences. Appeals may also be taken to the Commissioner in person from all final decisions of the examiner in charge of trade-marks.

SEC. 20. If an applicant for registration of a mark, or a party to an interference as to a mark, or party who has filed opposition to the registration of a mark, or party to an application for the cancelation of the registration of a mark, is dissatisfied with the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, he may appeal to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals on complying with the conditions required in case of an appeal from the decision of the Board of Appeals by an applicant for a patent or a party to an interference as to an invention, and the same rules of practice and procedure shall govern in every stage of such proceedings as far as the same may be applicable. The provisions of section 4915 of the Revised Statutes shall apply in trade-mark cases. The same right of review as provided in said section 4915 shall be accorded to all parties to opposition and cancelation proceedings.

SEC. 21. If it shall appear that there has been in commerce an honest concurrent use of the same or similar marks for the same or similar goods or services for a continuous period of more than 5 years immediately preceding the date of a pending application by one of such users for the registration of one of such marks, without protest by any other such user within said period, the Commissioner, or on appeal the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the court in an action begun under the provisions of section 4915, Revised Statutes, may grant more than one registration of such marks, subject to such conditions and limitations, if any, as to mode or place of use of such marks as the Commissioner or said courts, or either of them, may require in order to minimize the probability of confusion arising from the concurrent use of such marks.

The provisions of this section shall also govern cases heretofore begun in the Patent Office, and not finally determined, where the provisions thereof may be applicable.

In any case in which an appeal is pending before the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals at the date of the enactment of this act, the said court, if it be of the opinion that the provisions of this section may be applicable to the subject matter of the appeal, may remand the case to the Commissioner for the taking of additional evidence or for reconsideration of his decision on the record as made, as the court may deem proper.

In any case in which an appeal is pending before the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia at the time of the enactment of this act, the said court, if it be of the opinion that the provisions of this section may be applicable to the subject matter of the appeal, may remand the case to the District Court for the District of Columbia for a new trial or for reconsideration of its decision on the record as made, as the appellate court may deem proper.

REGISTRATION IS NOTICE

SEC. 22. Registration of a mark under this act is notice of the registrant's claim of ownership thereof.

TITLE II—THE SUPPLEMENTAL REGISTER

SEC. 23. In addition to the principal register, the Commissioner shall keep a continuation of the register provided in paragraph (b) of section 1 of the act of March 19, 1920, entitled "An act to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names, made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes", to be called the supplemental register. All marks not registrable on the principal register herein provided, except those declared to be unregistrable under paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 2 of this act, which have been in bona fide use for not less than 1 year in commerce by the proprietor thereof, upon or in connection with any goods of such proprietor, may be registered on the supplemental register upon payment of the filing fee to the Commissioner of Patents and compliance with such formalities as the said Commissioners may require: Provided, That a mark which so resembles a known mark owned and used in commerce by another, as to be likely, when applied to the goods of the applicant, to cause confusion or mistake or to deceive purchasers, shall not be placed on this register: And provided further, That where the mark so to be registered is or may be used by subsidiary or related companies or by members of an association, such use shall be deemed exclusive in the holding or parent company or in the association, for the purposes of the application and for all other purposes; and use of registered marks by companies subsidiary or related to the registrant or by the members of an association, shall not affect the validity of such trade-mark or of its registration.

For the purposes of this register, a mark may include a trade-mark, symbol, label, package, configuration of goods, name, word, slogan, or phrase, but such mark must be capable of distinguishing the applicant's goods.

Collective marks, including indications of regional origin, used by natural or juristic persons, and nations, States, municipalities, and the like, exercising legitimate control over the use of the mark sought to be registered, even though not possessing an industrial or commercial establishment, shall be registrable under this section: Provided further, That upon a proper showing by the applicant that he has begun the bona fide use of his mark in foreign commerce and that he requires domestic registration as a basis for foreign protection of his mark, the Commissioner may waive the requirement of a full year's use and may grant registration forthwith. Appeal may be had to the Commissioner from a refusal of the Examiner of Trade-Marks to register a mark on the supplemental register, but the decision of the Commissioner shall not be appealable.

CANCELATION

SEC. 24. Marks for the supplemental register shall not be published for or be subject to opposition, but shall be published on registration. Whenever any person shall deem himself injured by the inclusion of a mark on this register, he may at any time apply to the Commissioner of Patents to cancel the registration thereof. The Commissioner shall refer such application to the examiner in charge of interferences, who is empowered to hear and determine this question, and who shall give notice thereof to the registrant. If it appear after a hearing before the examiner that the registrant was not entitled to register the mark at the date of his application for registration thereof, or that the mark is not used by the registrant or has been abandoned, and the examiner shall so decide, the Commissioner shall cancel the registration. Appeal may be taken to the Commissioner in person from the decision of the examiner in charge of interferences, but the decision of the Commissioner shall not be appealable.

DURATION AND RENEWAL

SEC. 25. Registrations on the supplemental register shall remain in force for 20 years: Provided, That the registration of any mark on the supplemental register shall be canceled at the end of 5 years following its date, unless within 3 months next preceding the expiration of such 5 years the registrant shall file in the Patent Office an affidavit in such form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner stating that said mark is still in use. If, however, nonuse is due to special circumstances and not to any intention not to use or to abandon such trade-mark, the affidavit shall so state, in which case the registration shall not be canceled because of such nonuse. Forms for such affidavits shall be attached to each certificate of registration. Registrations on the supplemental register may be renewed as provided in section 9 of this act.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 26. The provisions of paragraphs (a), (c), (e), (f), and (g), of section 7, the provisions of section 10 (except the provision for assignment without the goodwill of the business), and the provisions of sections 11 and 22 of this act, are hereby made applicable to registrations on the supplemental register.

SEC. 27. Registration on the supplemental register, or under the act of March 19, 1920, or expiration under section 25 hereof, shall not preclude registration by registrant on the principal register established by this act.

SEC. 28. Registration on the supplemental register or under the act of March 19, 1920, shall not be filed in the Department of the Treasury or be used to stop importations. The certificates of registration for marks registered on the supplemental register shall be conspicuously different in appearance from certificates issued for marks registered on the principal register.

TITLE III—NOTICE OF REGISTRATION

SEC. 29. It shall be the duty of the registrant to accompany a mark registered under the act of February 20, 1905, or under section 1 (b) of the act of March 19, 1920, or under this act, with the words "Registered in U. S. Patent Office" or "Reg. U. S. Pat Off." or with the letter R enclosed within a circle, thus, ®, or T. M. R. in an ellipse thus, (T.M.R.); and in any suit for infringement under this act by a registrant failing so to mark, no profits and no damages shall be recovered unless the defendant had actual notice: Provided, however, That the foregoing requirement as to notice shall be deemed fulfilled in respect to goods of foreign origin if the marks thereon which are registered in the United States carry the words or indications of registration legally used or required to be used in the country of origin of the goods.

TITLE IV—CLASSIFICATION

SEC. 30. The Commissioner may establish a classification of merchandise, services, and so forth, for convenience of Patent Office administration, but not to limit or extend the applicant's rights. The applicant may register his mark in one application for any or all of the goods included in one class, upon which he has actually used the mark. The Commissioner may issue a single certificate for one mark registered in a plurality of classes upon payment of a fee equaling the sum of the fees for each registration in each class.

TITLE V—FEES AND CHARGES

SEC. 31. TITLE VI—REMEDIES

SEC. 32. Any person who shall, in commerce, without the consent of the registrant, (a) reproduce, counterfeit, copy, or colorably imitate any mark on either register provided by this Act, or (b) shall apply such reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation to merchandise or services of such a character that the use thereof is likely to cause confusion or mistake or to deceive purchasers, or to labels, signs, prints, packages, wrappers, receptacles, or advertisements intended to be used upon or in connection with the sale of such merchandise or services, or (c) shall otherwise falsely indicate that the goods or services are the goods or services of a person who shall have registered a mark under this Act, shall be liable in a civil action by the registrant for any or all of the remedies hereinafter provided.

In such action any certificate of registration on the principal register issued under this act and owned by the plaintiff shall be admissible in evidence and shall be prima-facie evidence of plaintiff's exclusive right to the use of the mark therein described on the goods therein specified. If the right to use the mark has become incontestable under section 15 hereof, the certificate shall be evidence of the registrant's exclusive right to use the mark which can be rebutted only by proof that the registration was obtained fraudulently or that the mark has been abandoned by the registrant, or by proof of one of the following defenses:

(1) That the mark whose use by the defendant is charged as an infringment has been continuously used by the defendant or by his predecessors in business in the State or States where its use is charged to infringe from a date prior to the use by the registrant or his predecessors of the trade-mark described in the registration.

(2) That the use by the defendant of the mark charged to be an infringement is a fair use of the defendant's individual name in his own business in a manner not calculated to deceive the public, or is a fair use of the only known descriptive term for goods rightfully sold by the defendant.

SEC. 33. The several courts vested with jurisdiction of civil actions arising under this act shall have power to grant injunctions, according to the principles of equity and upon such terms as the court may deem reasonable, to prevent the violation of any right of the registrant of a mark registered under this act. Any such injunction granted upon hearing, after notice to the defendant, by any district court of the United States, or by a judge thereof, may be served on the parties against whom such injunction is granted anywhere in the United States where they may be found, and shall be operative, and may be enforced by proceedings to punish for contempt, or otherwise, by the court by which said injunction was granted, or by any other district court, or judge thereof, in the United States, or by the district court of the District of Columbia, or a judge thereof. The said courts, or judges thereof, shall have jurisdiction to enforce said injunction, as herein provided, as fully as if the injunction had been granted by the district court in which it is sought to be enforced. The clerk of the court or judge granting the injunction shall, when required to do so by the court before which application to enforce said injunction is made, transfer without delay to said court a certified copy of all papers on file in his office, upon which said injunction was granted.

SEC. 34. Whenever the plaintiff shall have established his right to relief in any civil action arising under this act, he shall be entitled (subject to the provisions of sec. 29) to recover (1) defendant's profits, (2) any damages sustained by the plaintiff, and (3) in the discretion of the court the costs of the action. The court shall assess such profits and damages or cause the same to be assessed under its direction. In assessing profits the plaintiff shall be required to prove defendant's sales only; defendant must prove all elements of cost or deduction claimed. In assessing damages the court may, according to the circumstances of the case, enter judgment for any sum above the amount found as actual damages, not exceeding three times such amount, such sum to constitute compensation and not a penalty.

SEC. 35. In any civil action arising under this act, in which the plaintiff shall have established his right to relief, the court may order that all labels, signs, prints, packages, wrappers, receptacles, or advertisements in the possession of the defendant, bearing the mark of the plaintiff or any reproduction, counterfeit, copy, or colorable imitation thereof, and all plates, molds, matrices, or other means of making the same, shall be delivered up and destroyed.

SEC. 36. In any action the court may determine the right to registration, order the cancelation of registrations, in whole or in part, restore canceled registrations, and otherwise rectify the register. Decrees and orders shall be certified by the court to the Commissioner, who shall make appropriate entry upon the records of the Patent Office, and shall be controlled thereby.

SEC. 37. Any person who shall procure registration of a mark in the office of the Commissioner of Patents by a false or fraudulent declaration or representation, oral or in writing, or by any false means, shall be liable in a civil action by any person injured thereby for any damages sustained in consequence thereof.

SEC. 38. The district and territorial courts of the United States and the district court of the District of Columbia shall have original jurisdiction, and the circuit courts of appeal of the United States and the circuit court of appeals of the District of Columbia shall have appellate jurisdiction, of all civil actions arising under this act respecting trade-marks registered in accordance with the provisions of this act, without regard to the amount in controversy or to diversity or lack of diversity of the citizenship of the parties.

SEC. 39. Writs of certiorari may be granted by the Supreme Court of the United States for the review of cases arising under this act in the same manner as provided for in cases under the patent laws.

SEC. 40. The Commissioner of Patents is authorized to make rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the conduct of proceedings in the Patent Office under this act.

CRIMINAL OFFENSES

SEC. 41. Knowingly to introduce or deliver for introduction or to receive in commerce any counterfeit of any mark upon the principal register or knowingly to transport such counterfeit in commerce shall be a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Any person who shall introduce in commerce goods bearing a legend falsely indicating that the mark thereof is registered in the United States Patent Office, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100.

TITLE VII. IMPORTATION FORBIDDEN OF GOODS BEARING INFRINGING MARKS OR NAMES, FALSE DESIGNATIONS OF ORIGIN, OR FALSE DESCRIPTION

SEC. 42. (a) Any merchandise, whatever may be its source or origin, which shall bear any registered mark or any infringement thereof, except a mark registered under section 1 (b) of the act of March 19, 1920, or in the supplemental register provided by this act, shall not be imported into the United States or admitted to entry at any customhouse of the United States unless the written consent of the registrant to such importation or entry be first had and obtained or unless such offending mark be removed or obliterated; and, if brought into the United States in violation of the provision of this section, any person selling, offering for sale, or dealing in such merchandise shall be amenable, at the suit of the registrant, to the liabilities for infringement provided in this act and, in addition, be required to export or destroy such merchandise or to remove or obliterate such infringing mark therefrom, and such merchandise shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture for violation of the customs laws. In order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this paragraph, the registrant may require a copy of the certificate of registration of his mark to be recorded in books which shall be kept for this purpose in the Department of the Treasury, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of the same to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of customs.

(b) Any merchandise, whatever may be its source or origin, which shall bear the name or a simulation thereof of any domestic manufacture or manufacturer or trader, or of any manufacturer or trader located in any foreign country which by treaty, convention, or law affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, shall not be imported into the United States or admitted to entry at any customhouse of the United States unless the written consent of such manufacturer or trader to such importation or entry be first had and obtained, or unless such offending name be removed or obliterated, and if brought into the United States in violation of the provisions of this section, any person selling, offering for sale, or dealing in such merchandise may be enjoined from dealing therein and in addition be required to export or destroy such merchandise or to remove or obliterate such name therefrom, and the merchandise shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture for violation of the customs laws. In order to aid the officers of the customs in enforcing this paragraph, any such domestic or foreign manufacturer or trader may require a statement of his business or commercial name and the locality where his business is located and where his goods are manufactured to be recorded in books which shall be kept for this purpose in the Department of the Treasury under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause one or more copies of such record to be transmitted to each collector or other proper officer of customs.

(c) The owner, importer, or consignee of merchandise refused entry or seized under paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section may have relief against the registrant, manufacturer, or trader by a summary proceeding in any United States court of original jurisdiction, in the district where such merchandise is held or where such registrant, manufacturer, or trader or a designated representative is an inhabitant or may be found, or, if the registrant is a foreigner and no such designation has been filed, then in the District of Columbia, and after such notice and upon such proceedings as the court may direct the court may determine whether the plaintiff for any reason has the right to import such merchandise under the names or marks which it bears.

(d) A decree or order of such court for the plaintiff, upon being certified to the collector of the port where the merchandise is held, shall be warrant to such collector to release the merchandise from arrest or seizure or forfeiture under this section.

(e) An order or decree for either party, whether interlocutory or final, shall be appealable within 30 days, and the court making such order or decree may, in its discretion, suspend the operation thereof pending appeal.

TITLE VIII—FALSE DESIGNATION OF ORIGIN AND FALSE DESCRIPTIONS FORBIDDEN

SEC. 43. (a) Any person who shall affix, apply, or annex, or use in connection with any article or articles of merchandise, or any container or containers of the same, a false designation of origin, or any false description or representation, including words or other symbols tending falsely to describe or represent the same, and shall cause such merchandise to enter into commerce, and any person who shall knowingly cause or procure the same to be transported in commerce or shall knowingly deliver the same to any carrier to be transported, shall be liable to a civil action at the suit of any person doing business in the locality falsely indicated as that of origin or in the region in which said locality is situated, or of any association of such persons or of any person who is or is likely to be damaged by the use of any false description or representation, or at the suit of any association of such persons.

(b) Any article marked or labeled in contravention of the provisions of this section shall not be imported into the United States or admitted to entry at any customhouse of the United States. The owner, importer, or consignee of merchandise refused entry in any customhouse under this section may have any recourse by protest or appeal that is given under the customs revenue laws or may have the remedy given by this act in cases involving merchandise refused entry or seized.

TITLE IX. INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS

SEC. 44. (a) The Commissioner shall keep a register of all marks communicated to him by the international bureaus provided for by the Conventions for the Protection of Industrial Property, trade-marks, commercial and trade names, and the repression of unfair competition to which the United States is or may become a party, and upon the payment of the fees required by such conventions and the fees herein prescribed may place the marks so communicated upon such register. This register shall show a facsimile of the mark or name; the name and residence of the registrant; the number, date, and place of the first registration of the mark, including the date on which application for such registration was filed and the term of such registration; a list of goods to which the mark is applied as shown by the registration in the country of origin, and such other data as may be useful concerning the mark. This register shall be a continuation of the register provided in section (a) of the act of March 19, 1920.

(b) Persons nationals of, or domiciled in, or having a bona fide and effective business or commercial establishment in any country, which is party to the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, concluded at Paris on March 20, 1883, or to any subsequent revision thereof, as well as to the convention between American republics concerning the protection of trade-marks and trade names and the repression of unfair competition, to which the United States is also a party, by the proclamation of February 27, 1931, shall be entitled to the benefits and subject to the provisions of this act except as provided in the following paragraphs of this section.

(c) No registration of a mark in the United States by a person described in paragraph (b) of this section shall be perfected until such mark has been registered in the country of origin of the applicant, except when such country makes no such requirement of nationals or residents of the United States or the applicant alleges use in commerce.

For the purposes of this section, the country of origin of the applicant is the country in which he has a bona fide and effective industrial or commercial establishment and, in the case of associations, the country in which the association has its domicile or its principal office.

(d) An application for registration of a mark under sections 1 or 23 of this act filed by a person described in paragraph (b) of this section who has previously duly filed an application for registration of the same mark in one of the countries described in paragraph (b) shall be accorded the same force and effect as would be accorded to the same application if filed in the United States on the same date on which the application was first filed in such foreign country: Provided, That—

(1) the application in the United States is filed within 6 months from the date on which the application was first filed in the foreign country;

(2) the application conforms as nearly as practicable to the requirements of this act, but use in commerce need not be alleged;

(3) the applicant files a certified copy of the application filed in the foreign country: And provided further, That—

(4) the rights acquired by third parties before the day of the first application in the foreign country shall in no way be affected by the registration obtained on the application under this paragraph; and

(5) nothing in this paragraph shall entitle the foreign applicant to sue for infringement of his mark prior to the date on which his mark was registered in this country unless the registration is based on use in commerce.

(e) A mark duly registered in the country of origin of the foreign applicant may be registered on the principal register if eligible, otherwise on the supplemental register herein provided. The application shall be accompanied by a certified copy of the registration in the country of origin of the applicant.

(f) The registration of a mark under the provisions of paragraphs (c), (d), and (e) of this section by a person described in paragraph (b) shall be independent of the registration in the country of origin and the duration, validity, or transfer in the United States of such registration shall be governed by the provisions of this act.

(g) Trade names of persons described in paragraph (b) of this section used in commerce shall be protected in accordance with the provisions of this act.

(h) Any person designated in paragraph (b) of this section as entitled to the benefits and subject to the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to effective protection against unfair business competition, and in repressing acts of unfair competition, the remedies provided herein against infringement of trade-marks shall be available so far as they may be appropriate.

(i) Citizens or residents of the United States shall have the same benefits as are granted by this section to persons described in paragraph (b) hereof.

TITLE X—CONSTRUCTION AND DEFINITIONS

SEC. 45. In the construction of this act, unless the contrary is plainly apparent from the context—

The United States includes and embraces all territory which is under its jurisdiction and control.

The word "commerce" means all commerce which may lawfully be regulated by Congress.

The term "person" and any other word or term used to designate the applicant or other entitled to a benefit or privilege or rendered liable under the provisions of this act includes a juristic person as well as a natural person. The term "juristic person" includes a firm, corporation, association, or similar organization capable of suing and being sued in a court of law.

The terms "applicant" and "registrant" embrace the legal representatives and successors and assigns of such applicant or registrant.

The term "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of Patents.

The term "related company" means any individual, partnership, or person within the definition above where by stock ownership, contractual relationship, or otherwise, the nature and quality of the goods upon which the mark is used is controlled by the registrant.

The terms "trade-mark" and "mark" include any mark which is entitled to registration under the terms of this act and whether registered or not. "Service marks" are marks so used as to distinguish the user's services of any nature from the similar or related services of others. "Certification marks" are marks indicating that the goods in connection with which they are used are certified by the registrant as to origin, material, mode of manufacture, quality, accuracy, or other characteristic. There may be included in the category of certification marks the marks of labor unions and other associations. "Collective marks" means marks lawfully used by two or more persons.

For the purposes of this act a mark shall be deemed to be applied to an article when it is placed in any manner in or upon either the article or its container or display or upon tags or labels or is otherwise used in the advertisement or sale thereof in commerce.

A mark shall be deemed to be "abandoned"—

(a) When its use has been discontinued with intent not to resume. Intent not to resume may be inferred from circumstances. Discontinuance of use for 2 years shall be prima facie abandonment.

(b) When any conduct of the registrant causes the mark to lose its significance as an indication of origin.

The term "colorable imitation" includes any mark which so resembles a mark registered under this act as to be likely to cause confusion or mistake or to deceive purchasers.

A "counterfeit" is a mark which is identical with, or substantially indistinguishable from, a registered mark.

Words used in the singular include the plural, and vice versa.

The intent of this act is to regulate commerce within the control of Congress by making actionable the deceptive and misleading use of marks in such commerce; to protect registered marks used in such commerce from interference by State legislation; to protect persons engaged in such commerce against unfair competition; to prevent fraud and deception in such commerce by the use of reproductions, copies, counterfeits, or colorable imitations of registered marks; and to provide rights and remedies stipulated by treaties and conventions respecting trade-marks and unfair competition entered into between the United States and foreign nations.

TITLE XI—REPEAL OF PREVIOUS ACTS

SEC. 46. This act shall be in force and take effect 60 days from its enactment, but except as otherwise herein specifically provided shall not affect any suit, proceeding, or appeal then pending. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed, including the following, namely: The act of Congress approved March 3, 1881, entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same"; the act approved August 5, 1882, entitled "An act relating to the registration of trade-marks"; the act of February 20, 1905 (U. S. C., title 15, secs. 81 to 109, inclusive), entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or among the several States or with Indian tribes, and to protect the same," and the amendments thereto by the acts of May 4, 1906 (U. S. C., title 15, secs. 131 and 132; 34 Stat. 169), March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. 1251, 1252), February 18, 1909 (35 Stat. 627, 628), February 18, 1911 (36 Stat. 918), March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. 1167), January 8, 1913 (37 Stat. 649), June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 647), March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1268, 1269), April 11, 1930 (46 Stat. 155); act June 10, 1938 (Public, No. 586, 75th Cong., ch. 332, 3d sess.); the act of March 19, 1920 (U. S. C., title 15, secs. 121 to 128, inclusive), entitled "An act to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trade-marks and commercial names made and signed in the city of Buenos Aires, in the Argentine Republic, August 20, 1910, and for other purposes"; and the amendments thereto, including act June 10, 1938 (Public, No. 586, 75th Cong., ch. 332, 3d sess.); and section 526 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., title 19, sec. 1536), except that this repeal shall not affect the validity of registrations under said acts, respectively, or rights or remedies thereunder.

Registrations now existing under the act of February 20, 1905, shall continue in full force and effect for the unexpired term thereof and may be renewed under the provisions of section 9 of this act. Such registrations shall be subject to and shall be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this act relating to marks registered on the principal register established by this act. Marks registered under the "10-year proviso" of section 5 of the act of February 20, 1905, as amended, shall be deemed to have become distinctive of the registrant's goods in commerce under paragraph (f) of section 2 of this act and may be renewed under section 9 hereof as trade-marks coming within said paragraph.

Registrations now existing under the act of March 19, 1920, shall expire in 20 years from the date of registration and may not be renewed unless renewal is required to support foreign registrations. In that event renewal may be effected under the provisions of section 9 of this act. Such registrations shall be subject to and entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this act relating to marks registered on the supplemental register established by this act. Marks registered under previous acts may, if eligible, also be registered under this act.

SEC. 47. Section 4 of the act of January 5, 1905 (U. S. C., title 36, sec. 4), as amended, entitled "An act to incorporate the National Red Cross," and section 7 of the act of June 15, 1916 (U. S. C., title 36, sec. 27), entitled "An act to incorporate the Boy Scouts of America, and for other purposes," and the act of June 20, 1936 (U. S. C., title 22, sec. 248), entitled "An act to prohibit the commercial use of the coat of arms of the Swiss Confederation," are not repealed or affected by this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second for the purpose of having the bill explained to us by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the result of prolonged work of the Committee on Patents in the study of trade-marks and is one in which the owners of trade-marks have been interested for many years. Very extensive hearings have been held by the Committee on Patents. Last year I was chairman of the subcommittee that considered a trade-mark bill. With the collaboration of other Members on both the majority and minority sides we conducted extensive hearings which were attended by most representative citizens of all phases of business having to do with trade-marks. Certain suggestions and recommendations by way of amendment were made, and thereupon a bill embodying those recommendations was introduced.

At this session of Congress extensive hearings by a similar subcommittee were held. I had the honor to serve as chairman of that subcommittee. Amendments agreed upon and adopted by this committee were incorporated in this bill, and the bill now under consideration represents the result of several years of very laborious effort to get a proper bill upon this very technical subject.

The pending bill has been endorsed by the Patent Bar Association; it has been endorsed by the National Association of Manufacturers. We have had the assistance of some of the ablest authorities on trade-marks in the United States in the hearings and in the preparation of this measure.

The purpose of the bill is to protect the owners of trade-marks which are legitimately used in business in order that they may not be subjected to piracy and unfair trade competition.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has very carefully gone over the brief I submitted to him which I received from a great corporation, and he has discussed this bill with me. Is the gentleman confident that this bill will protect that firm rather than permit somebody to use a trade-mark which this corporation has spent millions of dollars in advertising?

Mr. LANHAM. I am very sure of it. Furthermore, this bill contains a provision that if that trade-mark to which the gentleman refers should be counterfeited, a penalty is imposed against the willful, deliberate use of that mark by someone other than the registrant.

Mr. COCHRAN. I realize that under suspension of the rules a bill cannot be amended, therefore I am perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's explanation which is, that it protects the trade-mark in question.

Mr. LANHAM. In my judgment, there is absolutely no doubt of that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman and I know the officials of this corporation will be pleased to get that information.

Mr. LANHAM. And may I say that it is the consensus of opinion that this trade-mark bill, upon which we have labored so long and so hard, is a very great improvement over the existing statutes in bringing them together and correlating them, and adapting them to modern business practice.

There has been practically a unanimous demand for this legislation and the report of the Committee on Patents is unanimous.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, as amended.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ACCEPTANCE BY SECRETARY OF THE NAVY OF CERTAIN LANDS IN SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6045) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain land in the city of Seattle, King County, Wash., with improvements thereon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what this bill is?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the Secretary of the Navy may accept without encumbrance a piece of land in the city of Seattle in which there is now in process of construction a naval armory. The money has been appropriated by the State legislature.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who owns the land?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The city owns the land, so it is taking nothing off the tax roll.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The city is giving the United States Government this land?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized on behalf of the United States to accept from the city of Seattle and county of King, Wash., a site free from all encumbrances, the title in fee simple, together with the improvements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances belonging thereto, including an armory building constructed or to be constructed thereon for use of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserve: Provided, That the acquisition of said land shall be without cost to the United States, and that the grading and landscaping of said land and the construction and completion of said armory building thereon shall not entail any obligation against appropriations of the Navy Department or relief funds apportioned to it: Provided further, That the grading and landscaping of said land and the construction of said armory building are satisfactorily completed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "thereon", insert "in accordance with plans to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "further", strike out the balance of line 7 and all of lines 8 and 9 and insert the following: "That the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy shall not be made until the grading and landscaping of the said land and the construction of said armory building are satisfactorily completed."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 188) to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes, with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Judicial Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new chapter to be numbered XV and entitled "The Administration of the United States Courts," as follows:

"CHAPTER XV—THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS

"SEC. 302. There shall be in said establishment an Assistant Director, to be appointed and hold office in like manner, who shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the Director and, during the absence or incapacity of the Director or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as Director. The Director and Assistant Director shall receive annual salaries of $10,000 and $7,500, respectively. The Director shall cause a seal of office to be made for the said establishment of such design as the Supreme Court of the United States shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken of the said seal.

"SEC. 303. The Director, with the approval of the Supreme Court, shall have authority, subject to the civil-service laws, to appoint such employees as are deemed necessary to perform the functions and duties vested in said establishment by this chapter, and the Director shall fix their compensation according to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. During his term of office or employment, no officer or employee of said establishment shall engage directly or indirectly in the practice of law in any of the courts of the United States.

"SEC. 304. The Director shall be the administrative officer of the United States courts and shall have charge, under the supervision of the conference of senior circuit judges, of—

"(1) All administrative matters relating to the offices of the clerks and other clerical and administrative personnel of the courts, but nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed as affecting the authority of the courts to appoint their administrative or clerical personnel, or the authority of the Attorney General respecting United States marshals and their deputies, United States attorneys and their assistants;

"(2) Examining the state of the dockets of the various courts and securing information as to their needs for assistance, if any, and the preparation of statistical data and reports of the business transacted by the courts, and promptly transmitting the information so obtained quarterly to the senior circuit judges of the respective circuits, to the end that proper action may be taken with respect thereto, but inspections of the dockets of the courts outside the continental United States shall be made through officials of the United States Government residing within the jurisdiction, respectively, of the said courts;

The senior judge shall submit to the council the quarterly reports of the Director required to be filed by the provisions of section 304, clause (2), and such action shall be taken thereon by the council as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of the district judges promptly to carry out the directions of the council as to the administration of the business of their respective courts. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

A second was not demanded.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on this bill at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been the subject of extensive hearings in the Senate and House Committees on the Judiciary, and the work of putting the amendment in final form was done by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and myself. They have very courteously suggested that I make the explanation of the bill in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas], and I believe that the explanation will cover all the essential points of the bill.

In the play Hamlet, Shakespeare has the melancholy Dane soliloquize about the things which go to make life unbearable, and one of them is "the law's delay."

Today the litigant in the Federal courts faces that agonizing experience because of the 36,015 civil cases, bankruptcy proceedings excepted, in the United States district courts at the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1938, the latest figures available, 4,720, or 13 percent, had been pending 5 years or longer; 5,910 cases, or 16 percent, had been pending 4 years or more; 7,750 cases, or 22 percent, had been pending 3 years or more; 11,396 cases, or 32 percent, had been pending 2 years or longer; and 18,077 cases, or 50 percent, had been pending 1 year or more.

This deplorable condition of the court dockets is made the more significant by the fact that the total number of cases of all classes, criminal, United States civil cases except customs cases, private suits and bankruptcy cases, pending and unfinished in the inferior courts at the end of the fiscal year 1938 was 104,138. While this was a slight decrease in number from the previous year, there is certain to be a steady growth of litigation in the Federal courts because of the increasing number of Federal offenses, and the mounting number of quasi-judicial proceedings before administrative boards, commissions, bureaus, and departments. Furthermore, as population increases, especially urban population, controversies increase, and litigation increases.

Congress has not been unmindful of the necessity of accelerating the disposition of litigations in the Federal Courts, and this problem has been under consideration for several years. Additional judicial personnel have been provided, rules of civil, criminal, and bankruptcy procedure to expedite the trial of causes have been promulgated, the Conference of Senior Circuit Judges has been authorized by statute, and laws enabling the retirement of Federal judges have been enacted; and now the Committee on the Judiciary presents this bill designed to create an efficacious administrative machinery for all the inferior courts of the United States.

An administrative office is to be established with a director and assistant director appointed by the Supreme Court and with adequate personnel selected under the civil-service laws. The principal duties of the administrative office are specified in sections 304 and 305 of the bill and include—

Examining the state of the dockets of the various courts and securing information as to their needs for assistance, if any, and the preparation of statistical data and reports of the business transacted by the courts, and promptly transmitting the information so obtained quarterly to the senior circuit judges of the respective circuits, to the end that proper action may be taken with respect thereto, but inspections of the dockets of the courts outside the continental United States shall be made through officials of the United States Government residing within the jurisdiction, respectively, of the said courts;

The disbursement, directly and through the several United States marshals as now provided by law, of the moneys appropriated for the maintenance, support, and operation of the courts;

The purchase, exchange, transfer, and distribution of equipment and supplies;

The examination and audit of vouchers and accounts of the officials and employees covered by this chapter;

The providing of accommodations for the use of the courts and the various officials and employees covered by this chapter; and

Such other matters as may be assigned to him by the Supreme Court and the conference of the senior circuit judges.

SEC. 305. The Director, under the supervision of the conference of senior circuit judges, shall prepare and submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary for the maintenance and operation of the United States courts and the administrative office of the United States courts, and such supplemental and deficiency estimates as may be required from time to time for the same purpose in accordance with the provisions of the Budget and Accounting Act. Such estimates in respect of the circuit courts of appeals, the district courts of the United States, and the courts hereinafter referred to in the Territories and possessions, and of the administrative office shall be approved by the Conference of Senior Circuit Judge before their presentation to the Bureau of the Budget. Such estimates in respect of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the Court of Claims, and the United States Customs Court shall be approved by the judges of such courts, respectively, before submission to the Bureau of the Budget.

Several of the Attorneys General of the United States have considered it "anomalous and potentially threatening to the independence of the courts" for the chief litigant before them to have control of the financing of the courts, the budget, the accounting and the other details of that nature; and the effect of section 305 is to give the courts the power of managing their own business affairs, as well as relieve the Department of Justice of that responsibility.

Under the present system, an Attorney General wishing to do so could interfere with the freedom of the courts, and his negligence could impair the functioning of the judiciary. As pointed out by former Attorney General Cummings:

> The Attorney General personaly fixes the number and the salaries of the court clerks and their deputies, and of judges' secretaries, and the amount and character of equipment for judges and clerks. He controls the travel arrangements, the accommodations in Federal buildings, the payment of salaries of judges, clerks, and deputies, and the traveling expenses of judges and clerks. He controls even the power of judges and their law clerks and secretaries to travel on official business. He prepares and presents to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate for the expenses of courts, and is, with all of this power over the affairs of the courts, the principal litigant before them. If criminal cases are included, about 70 percent of the cases before the Federal courts are Government cases; of civil cases alone, about 30 percent.

Another purpose of the bill is to secure an improved supervision of the work of the Federal courts through an organization under judicial control. The data assembled by the director and submitted quarterly to the courts of appeals is the subject of study by a council of judges in each circuit to be held semiannually, and directions are to be given to the district judges "as to the administration of the business of their respective courts."

In addition, the bill provides for a conference annually of the Federal circuit and district judges in each judicial circuit, participated in by members of the bar, for the purpose of "considering the state of the business of the courts, and advising ways and means of improving the administration of justice within each circuit."

"The director of the administrative office is required to submit annually to the conference of senior circuit judges a report of the activities of the administrative office and of the state of business of the courts, together with the statistical data compiled and submitted by him to the senior circuit judges as provided by clause 2 of section 304, with his recommendations. Such report shall be filed at least 2 weeks prior to the annual meeting of the conference, and a copy thereof shall also be filed with the Congress and with the Attorney General. Such report shall be a public document."

Thus, with all the Federal courts, except the Supreme Court, included in the purposes of the bill, we shall have a coordinated and integrated system of judicial administration of the United States courts. Congress has created the inferior Federal courts and has the right to expect that they will function efficiently and expeditiously, but Congress thus far has failed to provide adequate administrative machinery whereby the best results may be obtained from the Federal judicial system. This bill is intended to supply that need.

This measure places the responsibility for judicial administration where it belongs—with the judiciary—and it will be an urge to the avoidance of the evil of judicial delays that the citizens of the country know that the courts have in their power the prompt and adequate disposition of pending cases.

Congress will be able to know definitely whether the country has too many or too few Federal judges; which of those judges work and which do not do their full duty; and whether changes are needed in district and circuit boundaries. The public will be enabled to know what to expect from Federal judges, the extent of administrative efficiency of the courts, and the effectiveness of law enforcement in the Federal tribunals; and the judges will be aided in their efforts to protect litigants from dilatory practices of counsel, to press the bar to bring their cases to issue and trial promptly and directly, and to abolish the continuing of causes except where extreme hardship to the litigant will result.

Ours is the most extensive judicial system that has ever existed, and by enacting this law Congress thus furnishes the Federal courts the administrative machinery for self-improvement. By including the bar in the annual conferences in each circuit, an obligation is imposed on those officers of the courts to cooperate toward the high aims to be achieved.

The administrative officer should have a staff adequate for constant inspection of the work of the different courts, and in the furtherance of his duty to secure the economical and efficient use of judge power, time should be given for independent study of administrative problems arising frequently in the evolution of judicial administration. The bill further provides that those employees of the Department of Justice engaged regularly in the audit of accounts and vouchers under existing law shall be transferred to the administrative office in the consideration of the purposes intended by the bill. It is estimated that the cost of the administrative office will not exceed $200,000 per annum, and part of this cost will be a transfer of expense from the Department of Justice.

When it is realized that the gross cost of operating the judicial branch of the Federal Government is about one-fifth of 1 percent of the total gross cost of operating the Government as a whole, exclusive of relief appropriations, and that the annual income from the operation of the United States courts, including judgments, fines, forfeitures, costs, and fees collected by the clerks and others, aggregates more than $10,000,000 per annum; and when it is recognized that the combining of activities now performed by various separate agencies of the Federal Government, and the elimination of duplication of work, will make possible a substantial decrease in the operating cost of the judicial system, as well as save those who are required to become litigants in the Federal courts many thousands of dollars now represented by loss of interest and principal caused by the delays of justice; the cost of the administrative office to be set up by the bill is negligible, especially when the inestimable value and public importance of promptness and efficiency in the administration of justice are taken into consideration. Indeed, it is not unreasonable to believe that the Administrative office can be a profitable establishment financially, through the savings, economies, and reductions which can be brought about by proper management of the business side of the Federal judicial system.

The American people will pay gladly for the benefits made possible by this measure. There are many well-informed judges, lawyers, and laymen who believe that this bill, if enacted, will represent a landmark in the development of American jurisprudence. Personally, I share that belief. The American Judicature Society, in endorsing the bill, stated:

> We have no hesitation in declaring this measure to be the most important one ever drafted for the enforcement of either State or Federal judicature.

There is ample precedent for the soundness of the plan proposed in the bill for the accomplishment of the objectives sought. The administrative office in the judicial department of the State of Connecticut is a noteworthy example in this country; and, in England, the principle has worked successfully in actual practice. In fact, it has been said that people are so accustomed to prompt termination of litigation that they write the London Times if a decision is delayed a fortnight.

To those who have expressed apprehension "as to the safety of entrusting great powers to isolated judges, subject to no check except appeal according to law, and subject to suspicion in spite of good conduct and wise decisions," this bill should be a welcome answer. Indeed, it is my own hope that, out of the investigations of the administrative office, and the deliberations of the conferences provided for in the bill, there will arise the sense of unfailing obligation resting on our judiciary to promote and abide by the highest ethical standards of which the bench and bar of America are capable, and as are reflected in the established canons of judicial and professional ethics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

AMENDMENT OF NARCOTIC DRUGS ACT

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6555) to amend the act of March 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 374), as amended, relating to the advance of funds in connection with the enforcement of acts relating to narcotic drugs, so as to permit such advances in connection with the enforcement of the Marihuana Tax Act of 1937, and to permit advances of funds in connection with the enforcement of the customs laws.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain this bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee, and simply liberalizes the present law, permitting the Treasury Department to use an appropriation we make each year for the Treasury Department to get evidence in narcotic and contraband cases. This bill permits them to authorize the agent in the field to expend a limited amount without getting previous authority from his superior officer, which frequently involves delay which may ultimately nullify the action that is to be taken.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there any restriction as to the amount an individual may incur in the way of expense?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The restriction is not carried in the bill, but it is covered by Department regulations. They give only a limited discretion to the man in the field as to how much he may expend.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I say to my colleague from Massachusetts, I think the purport of the bill is to make it more difficult to secure this very dangerous drug? I believe the bill has the approval of all better-thinking people. We want to prevent the use of this drug and this is an administrative matter bringing about that result.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I appreciate the comment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. We are making war on marihuana, which has gotten to the high-school boys and girls of this country, and the object of this bill primarily is to get evidence against the peddlers of marihuana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for advances of funds by special disbursing agents in connection with the enforcement of acts relating to narcotic drugs", approved March 28, 1928, as amended (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 529a), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Commissioner of Narcotics, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to direct the advance of funds by the Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, in connection with the enforcement of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes', approved December 17, 1914, as amended; the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes", approved February 9, 1909', as amended, known as the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act; and the act entitled 'An act to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording', approved August 2, 1937, known as the Marihuana Tax Act of 1937.

"SEC. 2. The Commissioner of Customs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to direct the advance of funds by the Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, in connection with the enforcement of the customs laws.

"SEC. 3. A certificate by the Commissioner of Customs or the Commissioner of Narcotics, as the case may be, stating the amount of an expenditure made from funds advanced and certifying that the confidential nature of the transaction involved renders it inadvisable to specify the details thereof or impracticable to furnish the payee's receipt shall be a sufficient voucher for the sum expressed to have been expended.

"SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall not affect payments made for the Bureau of Customs in foreign countries, nor the right of any customs or narcotics officer or employee to claim reimbursement for personal funds expended in connection with the enforcement of the customs or narcotics laws.

"SEC. 5. Advances pursuant to this act in connection with the enforcement of the customs or narcotics laws may be made, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 529), from the appropriations available for the enforcement of such laws. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations concerning advances made pursuant to this act as are necessary or appropriate for the protection of the interests of the United States.

"SEC. 6. When used in this act, the term 'narcotics laws' includes the 'Marihuana Tax Act of 1937'."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE OF VESSELS, VEHICLES, AND AIRCRAFT USED IN THE TRANSPORTATION OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6556) to provide for the seizure and forfeiture of vessels, vehicles, and aircraft used to transport narcotic drugs, firearms, and counterfeit coins, obligations, securities, and paraphernalia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there has been previously some slight objection to this measure, but I think if the gentleman from Virginia will explain the bill to the House there will be no objection at this time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, for a number of years we have had a provision in the law by which the Government could seize an automobile or other vehicle engaged in the unlawful transportation of ardent spirits. The purpose of this bill is to extend that law to narcotics, to contraband sawed-off shotguns, and to counterfeiting equipment, in order to bring these other subjects under the forfeiture law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in order to make a statement regarding this matter.

We had this bill under consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means. At that time I made what I thought was rather a strong objection to it, based on my experience with the enforcement of the old prohibition law and my experience as a lawyer in the United States courts. This experience taught me that that law was terribly abused, especially when it came to seizures. The officers would take automobiles and property that was encumbered by mortgages and would shift matters around so the lien holder had very little opportunity to present his case.

However, since this matter has been under consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means, I have talked with the enforcement officials in the Bureau of Customs, and they tell me they have a well-developed system by which they look after matters of this kind now and that there is very little objection to it. Therefore, having great faith in the customs-enforcement officers and not wanting to throw my own opinion in here, I am very glad to withdraw my objection in the hope that the situation will not work out as it used to work out but will develop as these men have promised it will do.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I appreciate the comment of my colleague from Ohio. The purpose of this bill is to facilitate the enforcement of law against racketeers and criminals. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has said, we feel that both in the bill and through the departmental practice we have thrown every necessary safeguard around the innocent owner of a vehicle that may be caught carrying contraband.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) it shall be unlawful (1) to transport, carry, or convey any contraband article in, upon, or by means of any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft; (2) to conceal or possess any contraband article in or upon any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft, or upon the person of anyone in or upon any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft; or (3) to use any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft to facilitate the transportation, carriage, conveyance, concealment, receipt, possession, purchase, sale, barter, exchange, or giving away of any contraband article.

(b) As used in this section, the term "contraband article" means—

(1) Any narcotic drug which has been or is possessed with intent to sell or offer for sale in violation of any laws or regulations of the United States dealing therewith, or which is sold or offered for sale in violation thereof, or which does not bear appropriate tax-paid internal-revenue stamps as required by law or regulations;

(2) Any firearm, with respect to which there has been committed any violation of any provision of the National Firearms Act, as now or hereafter amended, or any regulation issued pursuant thereto; or

(3) Any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeit coin or obligation or other security of the United States or of any foreign government; or any material or apparatus or paraphernalia fitted or intended to be used, or which shall have been used, in the making of any such falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeit coin or obligation or other security.

SEC. 2. Any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft which has been or is being used in violation of any provision of section 1, or in, upon, or by means of which any violation of section 1 has taken or is taking place, shall be seized and forfeited: Provided, That no vessel, vehicle, or aircraft used by any person as a common carrier in the transaction of business as such common carrier shall be forfeited under the provisions of this act unless it shall appear that the owner or the master of such vessel or the owner or conductor, driver, pilot, or other person in charge of such vehicle or aircraft was at the time of the alleged illegal act a consenting party or privy thereto: Provided further, That no vessel, vehicle, or aircraft shall be forfeited under the provisions of this act by reason of any act or omission established by the owner thereof to have been committed or omitted by any person other than such owner while such vessel, vehicle, or aircraft was unlawfully in the possession of a person who acquired possession thereof in violation of the criminal laws of the United States, or of any State.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to authorize, or designate, officers, agents, or other persons to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of any officer, agent, or other person so authorized or designated, or authorized by law, whenever he shall discover any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft which has been or is being used in violation of any of the provisions of this act, or in, upon, or by means of which any violation of this act has taken or is taking place, to seize such vessel, vehicle, or aircraft and to place it in the custody of such person as may be authorized or designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, to await disposition pursuant to the provisions of this act and any regulations issued hereunder.

SEC. 4. All provisions of law relating to the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, and condemnation of vessels and vehicles for violation of the customs laws; the disposition of such vessels and vehicles or the proceeds from the sale thereof; the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures; and the compromise of claims and the award of compensation to informers in respect of such forfeitures shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under the provisions of this act, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions hereof: Provided, That such duties as are imposed upon the collector of customs or any other person with respect to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels and vehicles under the customs laws shall be performed with respect to seizures and forfeitures of vessels, vehicles, and aircraft under this act by such officers, agents, or other persons as may be authorized or designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 5. Any appropriation which has been or shall hereafter be made for the enforcement of the customs, narcotics, counterfeiting, or internal-revenue laws, and the provisions of the National Firearms Act shall be available for the defraying of expenses of carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. The provisions of this act shall be construed to be supplemental to, and not to impair in any way, existing provisions of law imposing fines, penalties, or forfeitures; or providing for the seizure, condemnation, or disposition of forfeited property or the proceeds thereof; or authorizing the remission or mitigation of fines, penalties, or forfeitures.

SEC. 7. When used in this act—

(a) The term "vessel" includes every description of watercraft or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as means of transportation in water, but does not include aircraft;

(b) The term "vehicle" includes every description of carriage or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as means of transportation on, below, or above the land, but does not include aircraft;

(c) The term "aircraft" includes every description of craft or carriage or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as means of transportation through the air;

(d) The term "narcotic drug" means any narcotic drug, as now or hereafter defined by the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act, the internal-revenue laws or any amendments thereof, or the regulations issued thereunder; or marihuana as now or hereafter defined by the Marihuana Tax Act of 1937 or the regulations issued thereunder;

(e) The term "firearm" means any firearm, as now or hereafter defined by the National Firearms Act, or any amendments thereof, or the regulations issued thereunder; and

(f) The words "obligation or other security of the United States" are used as now or hereafter defined in section 147 of the Criminal Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 261).

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6832) to provide for the protection of witnesses appearing before any department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States, or the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which has the unanimous approval of the House Committee on the Judiciary, the Attorney General, the American Bar Association, the committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia, and everyone else familiar with its provisions. The bill simply throws around witnesses appearing before departments or agencies of the Government, and committees of Congress the same protection that for a number of years has been thrown around witnesses appearing before the courts. It outlaws intimidation, coercion, and corruption of other witnesses, just exactly as existing law protects witnesses called to testify in courts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. GEYER of California. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD AND THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a rule has been granted for the consideration of House Resolution 258, to investigate the National Labor Relations Board and the National Labor Relations Act. As the time for debate will be very limited when the resolution comes up Thursday, and what time there is will be in the control of the opposition to the National Labor Relations Board and the National Labor Relations Act on both sides of the aisle, I am taking this opportunity to make a few brief observations concerning the investigation.

In the first place, while it is permissible under the rules of the House and also under the rules of the Senate, for each body, by resolution, to institute and conduct an investigation of a department or an executive agency of the Government, I do not believe that such independent procedure by either House is in accord with the constitutional intent and purpose in setting up the three cordinate branches of government—legislative, executive, and judicial.

I believe that nothing less than a concurrent resolution of both Houses and a joint committee of the two Houses can accord the executive branch of the Government the treatment to which it is entitled, especially in a matter of such magnitude and importance as the subject matter of the proposed investigation. The House of Representatives has no special interest in the operation of a national law or the administration of such law. These matterns concern the Congress as a whole.

It is true that many of these investigations originating in one House might not be concurred in by the other. If so, this would be all the more reason for requiring their concurrence. The vice of the investigation of an executive agency by one House, resulting in unwarranted and ofttimes largely punitive investigations, is illustrated by the fact that they are frequently brought in in the last days of a session of Congress, and the resolutions go through more as a gesture than as the well-considered action of the House, and as a reward of the persistence of a small group who are in a position to prevail on the House leaders, who are high-pressured into according recognition to such resolutions against their own judgment.

I feel confident the House leadership cannot be in sympathy with the purposes of this resolution. The purposes of this resolution are not only to discredit the National Labor Relations Board but the National Labor Relations Act. Its sponsorship is hostile to that act and the Wage and Hour Act, which are Democratic measures, and to every act for the benefit of labor, and it is being urged by Members who are equally antipathetic toward labor.

This investigating committee, in the very nature of things, will be stacked, not by the action of the Speaker, but by the rules of the House, against the National Labor Relations Board and law. The committee is to consist of five members. Under the rules of the House the sponsor of the resolution will be the chairman of the committee. Two members of the committee must come from the minority, and be selected by the minority. They will be against the National Labor Relations Board and the National Labor Relations Act. They want to see the Board discredited and the act emasculated. They want a National Labor Relations Board and law for the benefit of the corporations, not the workers. So, before the alleged investigation starts, a verdict of guilty on all counts will have been arrived at against the defendants and, of course, the law will need much amending, that is to say, emasculation and hamstringing in the interest of the employers.

It was during the last days of the last session of Congress that a resolution went through the House practically by default setting up the Committee on Un-American Activities. The last croak that came from a member of that committee was an attempt to smear Mr. MacLeish, the newly appointed Librarian of Congress, with communism. The answer was his confirmation by the Senate with only eight negative votes. It went the way of the attempt to smear the Secretary of Labor and impeach her for communistic leanings. It went the way of the attempt to smear Governor Murphy of Michigan, who, after being duly paraded to the world as a Communist sympathizer, was appointed by the President as the chief law officer of the Nation and unanimously confirmed by the Senate. The most effective work of that committee was to smear the national administration with communism in the midst of a national election.

It will be the same with the committee to investigate the National Labor Relations Board and law. It will be a smearing committee. Slapping Roosevelt over the shoulders of his appointees. It will be, not simply anti-National Labor Board and labor law, but antilabor. I hope there are other Members of the House who feel as I do about this matter who will not hesitate to speak out. It is high time the forces of organized labor quit burying the hatchet in each other and bury it in the other fellow. Apparently they do not like the Work Relief Act of 1940, but there are some other bills on the calendar they will like a whole lot less than that.

The resolution will, of course, pass. All the Republicans and 65 percent of the Democrats will vote for this resolution, says the Washington Post in a summary of the House Calendar for this week. That, I hope, is a rather high estimate of the percentage of Democrats who think the time has come to make a Republican sideshow of the Democratic Party and drive the organized workers of America in reprisal over to the Republican Party. Responsibility for legislation rests on the Democratic majority and it cannot be avoided. We seem to be trying to make the Republicans a present of the House of Representatives. The Democrats ought to know that if we lose the big industrial States in the next election we will lose the House of Representatives. [Applause].

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNS. I should like to know whether the gentleman feels that the American Federation of Labor, which has asked for an investigation of the National Labor Relations Board and for certain amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, is insincere and against labor?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say this in answer to the gentleman; I have the greatest respect for the American Federation of Labor, but if the internecine strife in the ranks of organized labor has reached the point where a labor group will back an investigation of this character, they will find that they are going to get a lot of things out of it that they did not bargain for in the first place. I want to predict now and have it stay in the RECORD that if this investigation goes through, and I have no doubt it will, the American Federation of Labor will be appearing before Congress in opposition to the emasculating and hamstringing amendments to the National Labor Relations Act that will come out of the investigation.

Mr. JOHNS. On what does the gentleman base his idea that we should not have an investigation, when he feels that all the Republicans want it as well as 65 percent of the Democrats?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The House Committee on Labor has been investigating the National Labor Relations Board and law for the last 3 months. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor has been doing the same thing. We now propose to set up one of these little one-horse, one-sided, incompetent, inadequate committees of the House and turn it loose to keep on going from now until Christmas, smearing the national administration through its agencies. That is just exactly what you are proposing to do. It will be an inquisition, not an investigation.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it not, in the gentleman's judgment, a direct insult to the Labor Committees of both the House and the Senate that we should in the midst of their investigating the National Labor Relations Board as regularly constituted committees undertake by a special committee to take from them their regular work?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is more than an insult; it is an indictment of those committees as incompetent and undependable to carry on an investigation of this sort.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Does the gentleman know that the author of this resolution, when asked whether or not legislation was needed instead of an investigation, made the statement that there was a certain amount of agitation needed before they could get legislation?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am not surprised at that. I understand the same gentleman is getting up a bill to investigate the Wage-Hour Administrator, and he has a bill on the calendar here to abolish the Bill of Rights. You will get plenty of agitation out of this investigation.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEYER of California. In answer as to how the A. F. of L. stands on this, I would like to say that I believe the rank and file of the A. F. of L. are opposed to it. I have a letter from California in which there are over 200 organizations, most of them A. F. of L., that have gone on record as opposing this investigation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; and I know they are opposed to it in my State, and they would be opposed to it everywhere if they knew how it was loaded against them.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Has the gentleman read the resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have the resolution in my pocket, and have read it several times.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Does the gentleman know that at least six of the whereases in the resolution are mistatements of fact?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well, they will be findings of fact, I will say to the gentleman, when this commission gets through with its alleged investigation. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

STOP, LOOK, LISTEN—THERE IS DANGER AHEAD

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I want to discuss in the limited time allowed me the most intensely interesting and momentous question confronting this Nation today, and before naming the subject to which I refer I want to ask you if we ever had a depression, which is a major panic, or a panic, which is a minor depression, since the foundation of this Government, that has not been financial? My answer is "No," and your answer will be "No." Therefore, if this be a fact, there is something radically wrong with our banking and monetary system, and it is my honest conviction that our banking and monetary system is the fundamental cause of all our economic troubles.

In order that we may intelligently discuss and comprehend the money and banking question, it is necessary that we should familiarize ourselves with a little of its historical background.

On the 4th day of July 1776 our forefathers signed the Declaration of Independence. On the 2d day of September 1776 the Continental Congress passed our first financial law and made the silver dollar the unit of value at the ratio of 14½ to 1. In 1786 we changed the ratio to 15¼ to 1, but as we had no mints to coin money we were forced to recognize the Spanish mill dollar as the unit of value, and it was not until after we had won the Revolution and adopted a constitution and had become an organized government that we established, by statute enacted by the Second Congress in 1792 our first monetary system. That Congress, by resolution, requested Alexander Hamilton to submit to them a plan for a monetary system. In compliance with that resolution Hamilton drafted the bill which provided that 371¼ grains of silver should be the unit of value, and gold should be coined at the ratio of 15 to 1, which made the content of the gold dollar 24¾ grains of gold to 371¼ grains of silver. Mr. Hamilton submitted his plan to Thomas Jefferson with the following communication:

To annul the use of either gold or silver as a money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from the comparison of the benefits of a full circulation with the evil of a scanty circulation. * * * It seems most advisable not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals, because this cannot be done effectually without destroying the office and character of one of them as money and reducing it to the situation of mere merchandise.

Mr. Hamilton wisely concludes that this reduction of either of the metals to mere merchandise "would probably be a greater evil than occasional variations in the unit from the fluctuations in the relative value of the metals." Mr. Jefferson replied as follows:

DEAR SIR: I return you the report of the mint, which I have read over with a great deal of satisfaction. I concur with you in thinking that the unit must stand on both metals.

In 1834 we changed our ratio from 15 to 1 to 16.002 to 1. We did not change the content of the silver dollar—the unit value. However, the content of the gold dollar was reduced from 24¾ grains of gold to 23.2 grains to make the weight of the silver and gold coins conform to the new ratio, and that remained the ratio until 1837, when we added two one-hundredths grains to the gold dollar in order to make it exactly nine-tenths fine, which made the ratio of gold to silver 15.988 to 1, and that is the present coinage ratio today. It has never been exactly 16 to 1. For your information, I will state that from 1687 to 1873, a period of 186 years, the different commercial ratios of gold and silver coins did not exceed 16 to 1 except in 3 years. In 1837, when we established our last ratio, up to 1873, when silver was demonetized by trickery, without the knowledge and consent of the American Congress, there never was a year that the commercial value of the silver equaled the value of the bullion in the gold dollar. The demand for silver was so great that dealers in bullion would accumulate our subsidiary silver coins, half dollars, quarters, and dimes and sell them in foreign countries for a profit, which practice forced us, in order to keep our subsidiary silver, to lower the content in weight of our smaller coins in 1857 so that they could not be melted and sold at profit. In 1873, the year that silver was demonetized, the average commercial ratio of silver to gold was 15.63 to 1, but as the result of this demonetization—its destruction as basic money—it took a downward plunge, with the result that in 1932 the average commercial ratio was 73.29 to 1.

I doubt if there was a single Member of either branch of Congress, other than Representative Hooper, of Massachusetts, and Senator Sherman, of Ohio, who knew that the bill which became a law demonetizing silver did demonetize silver. James G. Blaine, who was Speaker of the House at that time, subsequently, when he was a Member of the Senate, stated in a speech on the floor of the Senate that although he signed the bill, which was passed without a yea-and-nay vote, he did not know that silver was being demonetized and President Grant said that if he had known the bill demonetized silver he would not have signed it. In 1878, when the people of the Nation became informed of the destruction, they became thoroughly aroused with indignation. Just before the resumption of specie payment in 1879, Richard P. Bland, of Missouri—"Silver Dick"—offered a bill in Congress remonetizing silver, which was adopted by the lower House, but when it went to the Senate, after a heated discussion, Senator Allison offered an amendment providing that no less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver should be purchased by the Government per month and coined as fast as purchased. This was known as the Bland-Allison bill. That law was in operation until 1890, at which time Senator Sherman, of Ohio, offered a bill repealing the Bland-Allison bill, and provided for the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces per month to be coined into silver dollars. The last fatal shot was fired at silver in 1893, when the Sherman bill was repealed. In 1900, for the first time in the history of the Government, a law was passed placing the Government definitely on the single gold standard. This law provided that all money issued or coined by the Government should be redeemed in gold and issued Government bonds payable in gold and permitted the money changers to write payment of gold dollars of 23.22 grains in their contracts when loaning money on notes, bonds, and mortgages. The international bankers were in fact running the Government. It also provided that a gold reserve of $150,000,000 should be maintained by the Treasury to redeem money offered for redemption and when the gold reserve fell below one hundred and fifty million the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to issue bonds for gold to build up the reserve to one hundred and fifty million. This provision was used under the last Cleveland administration to force the Government to issue to the money changers two hundred and sixty-two millions of bonds. Today we have suspended specie payment and neither money nor obligations of the Government is redeemed in gold, although we have more than $16,000,000,000 in gold buried in the ground in Kentucky and vaults of the Government. The question is often asked, What are we going to do with all of this gold? That is an enigma that you will have to answer yourselves, or perhaps the international bankers can give you the answer, as they generally know what is going to happen in the future in regard to financial problems.

I am now going to make a few statements of fact in regard to the gold standard. The first Christian nation on earth to adopt the gold standard was England in 1816. No other nation followed suit until silver was demonetized in 1873, then the other nations of Europe followed suit, guided by the same insidious influence of the international bankers. The 1932 report of the United States Mint listed the monetary systems of 118 nations, and 116 out of the 118 were on the single gold standard; the exceptions were China and Ethiopia, which were silver-standard countries.

In 1933 the Director of the United States Mint reported that twenty-three and one-half billion dollars of gold had been dug from the earth during the preceding 440 years, but only $12,600,000,000 was to be found in the world money stock. Nearly one-half of the gold produced since 1493 was missing. The production of gold from 1 A. D. to 1493, only a trickle, was approximately $642,000,000. Records of gold production date back more than 5,000 years, and that noted Egyptologist, Petrie, estimates from archeological exploration that in all of these centuries the total amount of gold that has come out of the ground was only $40,100,000,000. The foregoing statistics are based on the old valuation of $20.67 per ounce; therefore, you will have to add approximately 40 percent to these statistics on account of the revaluation from $20.67 to $35 an ounce. The gold standard, on account of limited quantities of gold, has bankrupted the world. Nations have toppled like tenpins, repudiated their debts, debased their money, and made this Nation of ours a land of plutocrats and paupers, millionaires and mendicants.

Today there is not a single nation in the world which is 100 percent on the gold standard. While the United States has two-thirds of the gold of the world and its unit of value is 13 71/100 grains of pure gold, it does not redeem its currency in gold and it is a criminal offense for its citizens to have either gold coins or gold certificates in their possession, a queer condition to say the least.

Before we go into the discussion of the banking system, I want to pay my respects to the bankers of this country. In my opinion, ninety-nine out of every hundred men engaged in banking are honest, conscientious, patriotic citizens. The one crooked banker out of the hundred, I am going to name a money changer and viper and feel justified in so branding this crook because he is of the same type of banker that Jesus Christ drove out of the temple, saying—

> My house shall be called a house of prayer, but you have made it a den of thieves—

And the same type that Andrew Jackson drove out of the White House with the words:

> Gentlemen, I am convinced that you used the funds of the (United States) bank to speculate in the breadstuffs of the country. You are a den of vipers and thieves.

We will now analyze our banking system which is of second importance to our monetary system, and it would not make any difference if our basic money were iron, if you, by law, permitted a private bank to hold a warehouse receipt for all of the iron, thereby controlling the volume of money and the power to contract and expand the same at will. We would continue to have panics and depressions just as we do today.

The history of our so-called Government banks, both in name and operation, is patterned after the English banking system established by the money changers of that country. To make clear to you what I mean, I quote from the following historical comments on the origin of the Bank of England which will give you a pretty good idea of the methods of the money changers in getting their schemes established. You will please note that the bank was not established by a law called a banking law, but by an act called a tonnage act.

The Bank of England was not the original scheme of William Patterson, its founder. As is usual in English political history, it came into being almost by the back door, deriving its life from the Tonnage Act of 1694, of which the preamble read:

> An act for granting to Their Majesties several acts and duties upon tonnages of ships and vessels, and upon beer, ale, and other liquors, for securing certain recompenses and advantages in the said act mentioned to such persons as shall voluntarily advance the sum of fifteen hundred thousand pounds toward carrying on the war with France.

The Tonnage Act conveyed the privilege to the corporations of issuing notes or paper money to the full amount of its capital, its capital in gold being all loaned to the Government at 8-percent interest with which to carry on the war with France. The corporations thus had the 8-percent interest on their capital loaned and all their money back in the issue of paper money to lend at interest to other people in trade and commerce. From the Tonnage Act eventuated the Bank of England, being given a name to imply that the bank was owned by the Government when it was a privately owned bank. Thus, there was established a practice of misnaming banks that has been followed by the money changers of the United States since 1792 up to the present day.

The first banking law enacted by Congress after we became an organized government was February 25, 1791. It was known as the First United States Bank, but in giving it this name it was only practicing the deception set by the establishers of the Bank of England. It was not a United States bank, in fact, but a private bank given that name. When its charter expired in 1811 it was so unsatisfactory that Congress refused to renew its charter, and it was then that Thomas Jefferson said:

> I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies. Already they have raised up a monetary aristocracy that has set the Government at defiance. The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the Government and the people, to whom it rightfully belongs. * * *

If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of their currency, first by inflation and then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will grow up around them will deprive the people of all property until their children will wake up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered.

The refusal of Congress to renew its charter did not deter the money changers in their efforts to have their charter renewed, which they succeeded in doing in 1816 by resorting to all kinds of wiles, insidious and subtle influence on Congress. The First and Second United States Banks were permitted to issue their own currency, but the Government did not make it legal tender, as they do the Federal Reserve notes. United States banks, capital stocks, dividends, and property of all kinds were taxable, in contrast to the nontaxable capital stock, dividends, and profits of the Federal Reserve banks. The money changers who owned the Second Bank of the United States began their fight for renewal of their charter which expired in 1816, and by a vote of Congress the charter was renewed, but President Andrew Jackson, a courageous, patriotic citizen and a real tribune of the people, vetoed the bill granting the charter, and when the money sharks made their last visit to the White House to importune him not to veto the charter, it was then that Jackson drove them out of the White House and branded them as a den of thieves and vipers. Oh, that we had another Jackson in the White House.

From 1836 all banks were independent organizations and issued their own currency and no money was legal tender except the gold and silver coins.

When Lincoln was elected President, the Government and the money changers began to prepare for war, and as a result specie payment was suspended. The money changers began hoarding gold and silver. The Government issued and sold for gold $68,415,000 of Government bonds, of which the money changers took a toll of $7,358,544.19. This was immediately before war was declared. When war was declared, President Lincoln called for 75,000 volunteers for 3 months. This action showed that the public had not grasped the situation. This was soon succeeded by a call for a half million volunteers for 3 years, showing the magnitude of the situation had begun to dawn upon the public mind. The call was responded to with the greatest alacrity by the people, and the ranks were soon filled. But how to feed, clothe, and equip them confronted the administration. President Lincoln called upon the money changers to come to the Government's aid. They told the President, as related in Appleton Cyclopedia, 1861, page 296, as follows:

> Well, war is a hazardous business, but we can let you have it at from 24 percent to 36 percent.

The President and his Secretary are said to have heatedly refused and stated the terms were outrageous, scandalous, unpatriotic. They were, of course, greatly disturbed and in a quandary as to what to do and how to get money to prosecute the war, and to feed, clothe, and equip the soldiers and sailors giving their lives to save the Union while the money sharks stayed at home and were growing rich by usurious interest.

It was then that Congress gave Lincoln authority to issue $60,000,000 of demand notes—Lincoln greenbacks. This was the first Government money ever issued, and these demand notes were full legal tender and were always on a par with gold.

These demand notes circulated freely among the people and throughout business, bringing prosperity in their wake. However, the fertile brain of greed set to work to overcome this prosperity of the people and create a market for their hoarded gold. These were trying times, and their work must be done on the "quiet." It was a sore disappointment to have the Government use its own credit to carry on the war. Some plan must be devised to get the Government to abandon its own credit and delegate authority to the money changers to use the Government credit. This scheme was carried through under the excitement of war and unaware to the people; even the Congress itself was unaware of the crime it had committed.

In the subsequent issue of greenbacks a bill was quietly slipped through Congress putting this inscription upon them: "Except interest on the public debt and duties on imports." What happened? The importer who had received a cargo of goods from abroad took his greenbacks and went to the customs agent to pay the duty on them. Again, what happened? He was told that the Government would not receive this greenback—its own paper or note—in the payment, but the importer must bring gold to pay. The astonished importer exclaimed: "Why will you not receive your own money or note in payment of debt to you? Why discredit your own obligation?" The agent said he had instructions from the Government not to receive it, but must have the gold. So the importer was forced, by an act of repudiation of his own Government, to go to the gold-holding money changer and exchange his greenback for gold.

Of course, at each customshouse the money sharks with their hoarded gold had an office and sold the gold to the importer for an average throughout the war of $2 of greenback to one of gold. Then they took the greenbacks and bought Government bonds at par, which practically cost them 50 cents on the dollar. Every bond sold during the war was sold for United States notes—Lincoln greenbacks.

The money changers could then take the Government bonds bought with depreciated greenbacks and establish a national bank by depositing the bonds with the Government and have issued to them 90 percent of the face value of the bonds—national bank notes—which they loaned out at usurious interest. What a racket! And yet the country stood for it.

Matters were now brightening for the money changer with his hoarded gold. It was now, by this act, bringing him an enormous profit. However, the Government was not benefited by it in carrying on the war; not a dollar of gold was ever found on the wounded or in a dead soldier's pocket. It was the greenback he sent home to his wife and little ones to care for them while he was fighting his country's battles. He was risking his life to save a country which had repudiated the very money which it paid him. Where was coward gold all this time? Safely hid away in the vaults of the money changers demanding its pound of flesh. The despised greenback was out at the front with the soldier as he stormed up the heights of Lookout Mountain, or wading through the swamps and morasses of the Wilderness, staying with the "boys in blue" until Appomattox was reached, then home to wife and loved ones. But this act of repudiation was but the beginning of the money changers' acts of despoliation.

I am incorporating in my remarks a circular letter known as the famous Hazzard letter, which was sent out by the European money changers to the American brethren in 1862 in our darkest hour of the war:

> Slavery is likely to be abolished by the war power, and chattel slavery destroyed. This, I and my European friends are in favor of, for slavery is but the owning of labor and carries with it the care for the laborer, while the European plan, led on by England, is for capital to control labor by controlling the wages. This can be done by controlling the money. The great debt that capitalists will see to it is made out of the war must be used as a means to control the volume of money. To accomplish this, the bonds must be used as a banking basis. We are now waiting for the Secretary of the Treasury to make the recommendation to Congress. It will not do to allow the greenback, as it is called, to circulate as money any length of time, as we cannot control that.

This letter met with such a favorable reception by the money sharks of America that it inspired the Rothschild brothers, at that time the money kings of England, to send their agents to this country to devise a banking scheme that would enable them to pillage and plunder indefinitely the people of this country after the war had ended, and to that end they proposed to the Lincoln administration that they would finance the war for bonds provided the Government would give them a bank charter which would permit them to deposit said bonds with the Government as collateral and the Government would issue to them 90 percent of the face value of the bonds in currency which would circulate as a medium of exchange and perform all the functions of real money. Lincoln was very much opposed to this scheme as it was his desire to continue the issuing of greenbacks without the exception clause. He was an ardent believer in the Government issuing its own money, as was evidenced by his statement on this subject as follows:

> Money is the creature of law; its creation and original issue should be maintained as an exclusive monopoly of the National Government. The needs of all can best be served by issuing national currency and credit through the operation of a national banking system.

In analyzing the above statement of President Lincoln, do not be misled by thinking that he referred to the present deceptively named national bank system composed of privately owned banks—for he said that the Government should have an exclusive monopoly on the issue of money and control of credit, therefore, he meant a real Government-owned system.

When he was severely criticized by his friends, who believed as he did for yielding to the money changers, he replied:

> What could I do when I was confronted with the Confederate Army courageously fighting for the disunion of the Nation in front of me and the avaricious greedy and unpatriotic bankers behind me?

I had to yield to the bankers to save the Union and thusly with the aid of Senator Sherman, of Ohio, and Congressman Hooper, of Massachusetts, the iniquitous national banking system was established.

At last the war was ended, with a sore and bleeding Nation, the North jubilant in its glory, but hardly a hearthstone that did not have its share of grief and sorrow for its dead or maimed soldier, brother and father. The South, crushed to remain so for many years, for a lost cause, but one in which they believed to the very bottom of their hearts was a just one. Thanks to God they were later to realize they really won their greatest victory when they lost the war, and were saved to remain a part of the future greatest nation the world has ever known.

Thanks to the money barons, the Government had been saddled with a bonded debt of billions of dollars, to be met with taxes for generations to come, instead of the Government having been allowed to continue issuing its full-legal tender greenbacks, which Lincoln lauded as "America's greatest blessing," her own paper money to pay her own debts.

I am quoting for your information an interview of Lord Goschen, eminent English monetary authority and director of the Bank of England, giving his views as to the ultimate result of the American Government using greenbacks to finance the Civil War:

What, it may be asked, will be the value of gold to them (the people of the United States) if they neither require it for internal circulation nor for payment of foreign liabilities, from which, under our hypotheses, they will be comparatively free?

If that mischievous financial policy which has had its origin in the North American Republic during the late war in that country should become indurated down to a fixture there, that Government will furnish its money without cost. It will pay off its debts and be without debt. It will have all the money necessary to carry on its commerce. It will become prosperous beyond precedent in the history of civilized governments of the world. The brains and wealth of all countries will go to North America. That Government must be destroyed, or it will destroy every monarchy on this globe. (London Times, 1865.)

The first and second banks of the United States were the "horse and buggy" days of banking—the privileges granted them by the Government were inconsequential in comparison to the privileges that were granted to future banking systems. When they were put out of business by Jackson, the American people endorsed Jackson's veto of their charter. The money changers remained dormant until the Civil War broke, at which time they became active again to take advantage of the Government in the direst days of its existence and forced upon the people a "model T Ford" banking system, which was known as the national banking system—misnamed, as it was not a Government bank, as the name implies—but a great improvement over the United States banks to rob the people by controlling the credit of the country, inflating and deflating at will. The money changers, operating the national banking system, did their dirty work by clandestine meetings and secret correspondence.

In 1877 Mr. James Buel, secretary of the Associated Bankers of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, sent the following circular letter to the members of his association. It was an astounding letter, which reads as follows:

DEAR SIR: It is advisable to do all in your power to sustain such prominent daily and weekly newspapers, especially the agricultural and religious press, as will oppose the issuing of greenback paper money; and that you also withhold patronage or favors from all applicants who are not willing to oppose the Government issue of money. Let the Government issue the coin and the banks issue the paper money of the country, for then we can better protect each other. To repeal the law creating national-bank notes or to restore to circulation the Government issue of money will be to provide the people with money, and will therefore seriously affect your individual profit as bankers and lenders. See your Congressman at once and engage him to support our interests, that we may control legislation.

(Signed by the secretary:)

JAS. BUEL,
No. 177 Broadway, Room 4, New York.

Another letter of the same character reads as follows:

DEAR SIR: The interests of national bankers require immediately financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired, and the national-bank notes upon a gold basis made the only money. This will require the authorization of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one-third of your circulation and call in one-half of your loans. Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential businessmen. Advocate an extra session of Congress for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, and act with the other banks of your city in securing a large petition to Congress for its unconditional repeal, per accompanying form. Use personal influence with Congressmen, and particularly let your wishes be known to your Senators. The future life of national banks as fixed and safe investments depends upon immediate action, as there is an increasing sentiment in favor of Government legal-tender notes and silver coinage.

After the model T Ford became antiquated, Ford built a new model, a great improvement over his original machine. Likewise, the money changers got out a new banking law, a great improvement over the original, so they came to Congress with the plea:

We have just got to rescue our country or it will all go to the dogs, but if we do this we will just have to have more money. You know money is "tight" and hard to get, and we have just about got all the money from Uncle Sam on the Government bonds that we can (and, besides, those Government bonds are too high; we simply can't afford them). But we have a whole vault full of nice yellow corporation bonds that we have kindly floated in the last 10 years, and if you (to our Congress) will just permit us to turn these over to the Treasury and issue us nice new national bank notes on these bonds, then we can loan out the nice new money and save the country. But you will have to hurry; no time to lose; never can tell what will happen.

So Congress hurried and passed the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency law, giving the money changers their law, and the Secretary of the Treasury—kindly, without any authority in the bill—changed the wording on the new national bank notes to read, "This note is secured by bonds of the United States or other securities," instead of just "by the United States bonds."

The improved machine over the old model T system, the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency law, did not work so well. Something went wrong with the brakes, with it going at full speed in turning the corner, and it went into the ditch and the people woke up one morning in 1907 and found banks refusing to cash their checks. This was an awful bad break for the money changers, as they were caught red-handed operating the money system.

Another national election off-year came around and elected a Democratic Congress which portended evil for the money changers. Then followed the national election in which Woodrow Wilson was unexpectedly nominated and elected President by the Democrats. The money changers were shaking in their boots—terrified. Who was this man, Wilson, the college professor, accidently elected as Governor of New Jersey? What was his record in regard to banking when he was Governor? In ferreting out this information, they ascertained he had convictions concerning the money changers' operation of our banking system, which was evidenced by the following excerpt of a speech he made while Governor of New Jersey in 1911:

The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly. So long as that exists our old variety and freedom and individual energy of development are out of the question.

A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the Nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men who, even if their actions be honest and intended for the public interest, are necessarily concentrated upon the great undertakings in which their own money is involved and who, necessarily, by every reason of their own limitations, chill and check and destroy economic freedom. This is the greatest question of all; and to this, statesmen must address themselves with an earnest determination to serve the long future and the true liberties of men.

The opinion expressed in this speech convinced the money changers that something had to be done to give the people a new system. The old models had worn out and had become dangerous to operate. Ever resourceful, the money sharks picked the man of the hour. Who was he? None other than Paul M. Warburg himself. The banker right from the holy of holies of all money changers—temples on the Rhine at Frankfort, Germany, the Rothschild temple itself. Well, now, maybe this fellow can "figger" out something in the way of money changing for us over here.

Paul Warburg did not fall down on the job. He threw all the old systems into the junk pile and presented to Congress, with his compliments, a new streamlined 16-cylinder Rolls Royce banking law, and he gave all of his time gratis lobbying the bill through Congress, and inspired the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, newspapers, periodicals, little banks, to get busy and write their Congressmen and Senators to be sure and vote for it. It was to be named, as usual, a deceptive name, something to fool the people, the mighty Federal Reserve Act—the ultimate of ultimates, the last word in banking and the death to all panics and hard times, and the people were fooled again, with the result that the bill was passed December 23, 1913, and Mr. Paul M. Warburg's name will always be associated with that infamous law, and that distinguished gentleman who was coached and trained by the high priests of the money changers in all the intricate and complicated money-manipulation trickery known to the "House of Rothschild on the Rhine," and who had been in our country only 6 or 8 years before he became the "father" of the "monstrosity"—the Federal robbers act.

And does it work—this money changers' "last word" in banking practice? Does it make panics impossible? Does it make money plentiful at all times? Does it keep our farmers and industries running at a paying rate? Well, dear countrymen, look about you and see the effect of the "last word" put over on us by the "House of Rothschild" and decide for yourself.

It is said in well-informed circles, now that the Federal Reserve System was especially prepared for us, and rushed through Congress just in time to have it working smoothly so we could finance and pay for the great World War, that they, the Morgans, the Warburgs, the Schiffs, the Kuhns, Loebs, the Seligmans, the Monds, the Sassoons, the Rothschilds, and other money changers of their kind are said to have had in preparation, boiling and stewing for years, and were just about ready to cut loose, and which was "cut loose" in August 1914.

My friends, kindly let your minds travel back to the founding of the first big legal bank, spoken of in an earlier chapter, the Bank of England. Same story—privately owned. Then again, the first bank of the United States; the same thing again. Sounded like the Government owned it, did it not? And again, the second bank of the United States, ditto—privately owned. Then, later, a slight change, but still confusing and misleading. The National Bank Act, giving name of "national banks." The same old thing again—deception, make believe, confusion. Then the crowning glory of all "the Federal Reserve System," or as some people call it, "the Federal Robbers' System." The same old stuff again, and if the reader will start asking his acquaintances who owns the Federal Reserve banks he will likely be surprised at the great number of people that really believe that they are owned by our Federal Government. So the idea of the name really works, and does as it is intended to do—confuse and mislead the people into thinking the banks are owned by the Government and, of course, as safe and sound as the Government.

President Wilson knowing the leading part played by Mr. Warburg, his energetic, untiring, and patriotic efforts in the enactment into law of the modern streamlined Rolls-Royce banking system, showed him his appreciation for the sacrifice he had made without pay by appointing him a member of the first Federal Reserve Board. When his name was sent to the Senate, as is usual, to investigate his fitness for the job, Mr. Warburg told the Senate Committee that he was making a heavy financial sacrifice to accept the position on the Federal Reserve Board. Quoting Senator REED, who was a member of the investigating committee: "May I ask what your motive is, or your reason for making that sacrifice?" Mr. Warburg replied: "My motive is that I have, as you know, taken a keen interest in this monetary reform since I have been in this country."

St. Matthew, chapter 22:

> Beware of false prophets, who come to you in the clothing of sheep but inwardly they are raving wolves. By their fruits you shall know them. Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?

No one can gainsay the avowed purpose of the Federal Reserve law was not beneficial to the general welfare had it been administered by honest conscientious men for the welfare of the people. The fundamental principles of the law was to furnish an adequate supply of money for legitimate business free from monopoly control, and to keep it in active circulation among the business interests of the country. This intent was right and under proper administration would have proved very beneficial to the public welfare and we would not now be experiencing these hard times. That it has passed from the hands of the people and into the hands of the money changers as Mr. Warburg intended, is evidenced in the impoverished condition of the country in general.

Laws may be ever so beneficial if administered right and just as injurious when administered wrong. It is not so much in making laws as administering them. Had this law been administered as intended, by President Wilson and Congress, the congestion of money for stock gambling purposes could not have occurred, and the past 10 years would have been prosperous instead of disastrous.

The World War started in 1914 and the Federal Reserve System performed wonderful service. The Democratic Party was proud of their responsibility for its banking law, as was evidenced by the financial plank in the 1916 platform:

> Democratic: Our archaic banking and currency system, prolific of panic and disaster under Republican administrations—long the refuge of the Money Trust—has been supplanted by the Federal Reserve Act, a true democracy of credit under Government control, already proved a financial bulwark in a world crisis, mobilizing our resources, placing abundant credit at the disposal of legitimate industry, and making a currency panic impossible.

You will note the last few words of the plank "and making a currency panic impossible." Now, let us see what happened when there was a change in administration in 1921 and there was a new board of engineers who took charge of the system. I insert the Democratic platform of 1924 and it will tell you what happened:

> Democratic: We denounce the recent cruel and unjust contraction of legitimate and necessary credit and currency, which was directly due to the so-called deflation policy of the Republican Party as declared in its national platform of June 1920 and in the speech of acceptance of its candidate for the Presidency. Within 18 months after the election of 1920 this policy resulted in withdrawing bank loans and discounts by over $5,000,000,000 and in contracting our currency by over $1,500,000,000. This contraction bankrupted hundreds of thousands of farmers and stock growers in America and resulted in widespread industrial depression and unemployment. We demand that the Federal Reserve System be so administered as to give stability to industry, commerce, and finance, as was intended by the Democratic Party, which gave the Federal Reserve System to the Nation.

You will see that they charge the new engineers in administering the Federal Reserve System, which they claim would prohibit the money changers and speculators of Wall Street from robbing the people. They charge the new engineers with "withdrawing bank loans and discounts by over $5,000,000,000 and in contracting our currency by over $1,500,000,000," with the result that it "bankrupted hundreds of thousands of farmers and stock growers in America and resulted in widespread industrial depression and unemployment," and they might have added truthfully, according to the report of the Committee on Agriculture, "it reduced the value of farm products from $78,000,000,000 to $58,000,000,000, a clear loss of $20,000,000,000 to the farmers of the Nation. This is the banking system that was handed to the American Congress by Paul Warburg and was operated as was expected by him.

Now, let us briefly call your attention to some of the maneuvers which brought about the 1921 depression. A secret bankers' meeting was held May 18, 1920, in Washington, D. C., behind closed doors and closed curtains and in the very shadows of the Capitol. And in the name and style of "the orderly deflation committee of the American Bankers' Association," a secret resolution was passed declaring for the contraction of money and credits, and then they folded their tents and silently moved away.

No one knew of the meeting. No one knew who attended. No one knew of the resolution passed. And for 2 years 8 months and 4 days this meeting was kept a guarded secret. But true to an old saying, murder will out. And on the 22d day of February 1923 the manipulating bankers and financiers became involved in a dispute and contention over certain Liberty Loan bonds affected by the resolution passed. And in revenge, or in retaliation, or for other causes the proceedings of the secret meeting were published in the Manufacturers Record of Baltimore, Md., and for the first time the proceedings of this meeting and the names of the bankers attending were known to the outside world.

The published proceedings of this secret meeting show the same held as a conference in the name and style of the Federal Reserve Board and advisory council, with the action taken on a resolution assuming to be presented by the American Bankers Association. George L. Harrison was there. James B. Forgen was there. J. H. Puelicher was there. James A. Alexander was there, and other bankers who participated. But the manipulating financiers and bankers, and the master minds of frenzied finance engineering this gigantic secret movement, were not there, present and in person, but were pulling the wires, directing, and promoting their tools, puppets, and cat's-paws from afar, who may have been unmindful or unconscious of the crime they were bringing down upon their unsuspecting fellow men.

John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency and a member of the Board at the time of this secret contraction of money, who protested and remonstrated against the secret orders of the Federal Reserve Board, in explaining the course being taken, said:

I heard much talk while I was a member of the Federal Reserve Board about forcing the farmer to sell his wheat or the cotton planter to sell his cotton or the cattle raiser to sell his livestock or the wholesaler or retailer to sell their stock of goods.

But I must frankly tell you that I do not recall of a single occasion during the last 2 years of deflation when the Board ever discussed seriously the importance or desirability of requiring the big banks of New York City to liquidate (pay) a portion of their loans; some of which were lending millions of dollars to their own executive officials on highly speculative securities and to big syndicates in which those officials were actively interested, and which those banks had been carrying for months, and some for years, to liquidate a portion of their loans.

To corroborate the foregoing, I quote the following statement made by John A. Simpson, former president, National Farmers' Union, made in a Nation-wide radio address:

The latter part of January 1920 I was here in Washington and visited Mr. John Skelton Williams, who was the Comptroller of the Currency. I asked Mr. Williams, "When is deflation to begin?" He answered me, "The other members of the Board have just voted for it to begin May 1, this year." He said: "I told them that such a course would break lots of little country banks." He said: "They answered me that the little banks ought to break; there are too many of them." Tears were on his cheeks when he said that he told them "such a course would ruin lots of farmers," and that they cold-bloodedly replied, "They ought to be ruined; they are getting so prosperous they won't work."

Mr. Williams should have told the Board also that it would ruin millions of low-salaried laboring people, such as shopgirls, policemen, motormen, and common laborers, whose patriotism was aroused in every city, town, and hamlet in the country by prominent speakers, actors, brass bands, and torchlight processions, and the word flashed on every moving-picture screen in the United States:

Buy Liberty bonds, buy until it hurts, and if you do not have the money, your bank will finance you and accept monthly payments. Contribute your part toward winning the war—

With the result that three-fourths of the bonds sold were bought by people of ordinary means and not able to invest in bonds. The banks were filled with bonds purchased by the people who had no cash, but were paying for them on the installment plan, and the banks were honest in informing them that they would be taken care of by the partial-payment plan; but when the Federal bank robbers' system sent out the word to call loans, reduce the volume, which was done at the extent of $5,000,000,000, and reduce the volume of money from one billion and a half to two billion dollars, the little banks of the country were forced to throw millions and millions of bonds on the market in order to secure cash to pay their depositors, with the result that bonds depreciated as much as 20 percent on the dollar, which, of course, caused a loss of the original purchase and all of the payments they had made. The money sharks did not finance the war, but the great masses of people financed the war by buying the bonds. The money sharks loaded up on the depreciated bonds, stock, and so forth, as they had control of the money and fostered the depression behind closed doors through the operation of the Federal robbers' banking system to rob the people.

Mr. Simpson stated in his broadcast that he wished that he would be asked to prove the truth of the above interview with Mr. Williams in court. You will note above that Mr. Williams told the Board that if they carried through their deflation program that it would break lots of little country banks. They answered that the little banks ought to break for there were too many of them. Did Williams' prophecy come true? Judge for yourself. The official records show that on June 30, 1921, there were 30,560 banks of all kinds in the country. On December 31, 1938, the official records show that there were 15,265 banks of all kinds in this country. Subtract this number of banks from the 30,560 and the result will show you that 15,295 banks were wiped out of existence by the deflation program of the Federal Reserve Banking System. Mr. Williams also told the Board such a course would ruin lots of farmers and they cold-bloodedly replied: "They ought to be ruined; they are getting so prosperous they won't work," and Mr. Williams' prophecy again came true, and the records show that untold millions of farmers have been evicted from their homes by the foreclosing of mortgages, and are now tenants where they have to work to clothe and feed their families on the farms they once owned and made their happy homes. While Mr. Williams did not say so, it would mean ruination to thousands of business enterprises of the country. The records show that from 1920 until 1933 there were 302,314 business failures throughout the country.

Now, my countrymen, just stop and think for a moment of the wreck and ruin, the sorrow and suffering, the suicides, hunger, rags, and wretchedness wrought by the Federal Reserve Board at the behest of the heartless, cruel money changers.

The panic of 1921 was not a mystery—it was a conspiracy, as are all other panics, a deep-laid criminal plot. No pirates boarded a merchant ship to scuttle and sink the vessel; no highway robbers ever rode masked; no bandit burglars ever blew a safe with more deliberate criminal intent than the international financiers and their American mercenary money changers who maneuvered from afar or pulled the manipulating wires from behind closed doors and closed curtains, directing their tools and puppets in the secret bankers' meeting and on the Federal Reserve Board, fawning to do their will and bidding.

Oh, that I had the power of eloquence and command of language to coin sentences that would sear like sulfurous flames coming hot from Hell—I would weave of words a whip of scorpions to lash the money changers naked through the words.

I would rather be a fox and steal fat geese that a miserly millionaire and prey upon the misfortunes of my fellows. I would rather be a peddler of hot peanuts than vote for a law that gives to bond grabbers and boodlers privilege to despoil the pantries of the poor. I would rather play a cornstalk fiddle while pickaninnies dance than to be an unscrupulous politician and build of widows' sighs and orphans' tears and flimsy bubble of fame to be blown adown the narrow beach of Time and Eternity's shoreless sea.

The 1921 panic was comparatively of short duration. It was a test of the power and the efficiency of the Federal Reserve System to manipulate the prices of stocks, bonds, mortgages, commodities, livestock, and so forth, and it worked beautifully—100 percent.

The money changers were in a high glee. They closed thousands of banks and foreclosed tens of thousands of mortgages and made millions in buying depressed stocks. They used good judgment in not prolonging the panic into a depression, therefore, they began reviving their victims by administering a dose of inflation, expanding credit, bringing back prosperity, good times, in order that their victims might be able to accumulate for the next picking. In 1926 the country became very prosperous but instead of having another little panic and fleecing their victims, the money changers concluded to further test the efficiency of their new banking system by making "a big killing" and they extended credit without limit and brought about a wild orgy of speculation in the stock markets. The Federal Reserve banks could have stopped this orgy of speculation any time before the crisis in 1929 but their avarice and greed blinded them to their fate and like the speed fiend in the automobile who keeps stepping on the gas, they extended credit until they met their Waterloo; when the hydraulic brakes refused to work, they lost control and their machine went into the ditch. This catastrophe was too much for the people of the country and when the next national election rolled around, the people lost faith in Herbert Hoover and his promise of prosperity just around the corner, two cars in every garage, and a chicken in every pot, and buried him under an avalanche of indignant American voters.

The present depression, which started in 1929, is the worst depression of all time, world-wide, and of the longest duration of any yet to occur, more unemployment, more bankruptcies and business failure, more misery and starvation, loss of homes, suicides, and demoralization than the world has ever experienced before. This is the result of the operation of the present banking and monetary system.

After nationalizing gold in 1933, the President, by authority of Congress, revalued gold by increasing its price from $20.67 an ounce to $35 an ounce. This automatically reduced the content of the gold dollar from 23.22 grains to 13.71 grains plus. This revaluation produced a great howl from the Shylocks of the country, who always want their pound of flesh. And the money changers predicted dire results. However, the change took place, and the man on the street did not know it happened, and no complaint was registered from anyone except the Shylocks who had written gold dollars of 23.22 in their notes and bonds, which was declared unlawful by the lower courts and sustained by the Supreme Court.

I want to call your attention to the fact that no bonds or obligations from the foundation of the Government, including the billions issued during the Civil War, were made payable in anything except United States money. However, in 1869, the money changers influenced Congress to pass what is known as the Credit Strengthening Act, which made bonds payable in coin—gold and silver basic money. In 1873 silver was demonetized as basic money, which had the effect of making all bonds and other obligations of the Government payable in gold. Had the President revalued gold, by reducing the content of the gold dollar in the same proportion that France reduced the content of her franc, our gold today would be worth over $250 an ounce.

To illustrate to you how far the debasing of the French franc has come, will state that before the debasing began a tourist in France could take a United States $20 gold piece, which is approximately an ounce of gold, and exchange it for 107 francs. Now you can take that same $20 gold piece and exchange it for over 1,300 francs. Yet a lot of the money changers in this country are complaining because the President has made a modest revaluation of the gold ounce.

No President of the United States was ever confronted with a more stupendous problem than was President Roosevelt—15,000,000 laboring men tramping the highways and byways looking for work, their wives and children in hunger and rags, being fed by charity—farmers bankrupt, all commodity prices at their lowest ebb, business of every kind stagnated, factories closed, people losing their life savings when banks were toppling like tenpins. The President took drastic action by closing every bank in the country, as there was not a bank in the Nation that could have paid its depositors, and all of this catastrophe, rack and ruin, was deliberately brought about by the manipulation of the Federal Reserve Banking System. In my opinion the President made the mistake of his life in not coming to Congress and asking for legislation providing for the taking over of the Federal Reserve banks by the Government and following in the footsteps of the immortal Lincoln at the beginning of the Civil War when he was confronted with a like emergency, and by putting the presses to work printing Roosevelt greenbacks like Lincoln printed Lincoln greenbacks. Instead, he pursued another course and began printing interest-bearing, nontaxable bonds, and kept the Federal Reserve System which on two occasions had wrought such unprecedented havoc. But he changed the personnel of the management of the System and appointed as chairman of the Board an unsophisticated country banker from the West by the name of Marriner S. Eccles. The people had implicit confidence that the System would be run in the interest of the great masses of the people rather than in the interest of the money changers. In the meantime the President, leaving the banking problems to Mr. Eccles, turned to the Herculean task of restoring price levels of commodities so that the farmers of the Nation who produced the wealth could return the country to the road to permanent prosperity and to that end he spent billions of dollars in every conceivable way—subsidies, bonuses, fertilizer, seed, and so forth, all of which the farmers appreciated, or should have appreciated, in his efforts to help them out of the rut that had been brought about by the international bankers through the operation of the Federal Reserve System. His plan seemed to be reduction of the production of commodities—the plan of scarcity—when, in my opinion, he could have accomplished the purpose he desired by increasing the volume of money and credit which would have entailed no expense to the Government. I will show later on by Mr. Eccles' own statement that he agrees in this opinion. The President's scarcity plan was accomplishing the results he desired, as evidenced by the rising commodity and other prices in the latter part of 1936 and 1937. But it seems the recovery of price levels did not meet the approval of Mr. Eccles, as evidenced by the annual report of the Federal Reserve banks of 1936 and 1937. I am going to prove this assertion by quoting in part a speech made on the floor of the Senate by Hon. KEY PITTMAN, the distinguished Senator from Nevada, on April 11, 1939. Senator PITTMAN was chairman of the committee investigating relief appropriations and silver, and Mr. Eccles was a witness before that committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I never have been able to see how borrowing money by our Government, and its expenditure for work-relief labor, could ever raise commodity prices in this country to the level of 1926, which we seek. In fact, it has not done so. I think the time should very quickly come when this policy should cease; but I do not believe it ever will cease unless some action is taken by Congress to restore the price level of commodities in this country.

We certainly have some control over our monetary agents in this country. It would seem that we should have some control over the Federal Reserve Board, and some control over the Treasury Department. If we have not, we should have. It is perfectly evident that the Federal Reserve Board, in connection with the Secretary of the Treasury, in the latter part of 1936 and the early part of 1937, caused the recession of 1938, as it is called, and did it deliberately.

In the latter part of 1936 and the early part of 1937 commodity prices in this country had reached nearly the parity of 1926. As a matter of fact, farm commodity prices had reached 96, as compared with 100, which meant that the purchasing power of the dollar was down to 101.

Within a few months after that commodity prices were driven down 24 percent, and they are down at that point now. The general prices of agricultural products were driven down more than 24 percent, and they are there now.

We have tried every kind of scheme to save agriculture. We have paid the farmers to reduce their production; we have paid them bonuses in the form of loans. Yet it has not affected their commodity prices at all, and unless something is done to affect commodity prices, the present condition is bound to last forever.

Let us look at what Mr. Eccles, the great genius in charge of the Federal Reserve Board, said in his report at the end of 1936. This is a splendid report. In 1936 it looked as though we were not going to have any unemployment in 1937 and 1938; it looked as though the prices of all commodities would reach 100.

I want Senators to listen to this report for just a moment. On page 3 of the Annual Report of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board for 1936 we find the following:

"Progress in industry and trade was substantial in 1936. Production of durable goods increased considerably, and output of nondurable products also showed growth, particularly in the latter half of the year."

I am reading from a great monetary and economic genius, and I hope to conclude in a moment:

"The increase in durable-goods production reflected purchases of equipment both by industry and by individuals, as well as further expansion in construction. There was a general rise in employment, and income in both urban and rural areas was considerably larger than in other recent years. Capital values increased during the year, and in the latter part of the year there was a general advance in commodity prices. Total national income rose to $63,800,000,000 for the year, as compared with $55,000,000,000 in 1935 and a low of $39,500,000,000 in 1932."

That was a splendid showing. On page 2 of the report we find the following:

"During 1936, however, business drew upon the banks and upon investors' funds to a considerably larger extent. Commercial loans to bank customers, after 3 years of little change, increased by $1,000,000,000, and securities issued by corporations to obtain new capital (as distinct from refunding issues) amounted to $1,200,000,000 or more than the aggregate for the previous 4 years combined."

The same story of prosperity proceeds. On page 1 of the report for the year 1937 we find the following:

"At the opening of 1937 economic activity was increasing rapidly. The output of mines and factories, after a steady rise for 2 years, had reached the average level of 1929. Increased activity was manifested both in the industries producing goods for immediate consumption and in those producing durable goods. Capital expenditures by manufacturing industries were increasing rapidly, in line with output and profits. There was some revival in residential construction, which had dwindled to a very low level during the depression and was still far from normal. Employment was expanding and wage payments were rising even more rapidly as the result both of reduction in part-time employment and of increases in hourly wage rates. Increased farm income, a large volume of dividend disbursements, and larger wage payments resulted in an increase in retail and wholesale distributions. Prices of securities were at the highest level since the early part of the depression; yields on bonds, both Government and corporate, had reached exceptionally low levels, and capital issues of corporations were in the largest volume of the recovery years. Many commodity prices were rising rapidly. Advances were particularly pronounced in agricultural and other raw materials; prices of finished goods were also rising. Increased domestic demand, together with a considerable volume of foreign demand, contributed to the advance. A wave of buying was in progress. * * *

"Relative to bank loans and the expansion of deposit currency, the Board reports as follows from page 2: 'The total volume of bank deposits and currency continued to grow and at the beginning of 1937 was at the highest level in the country's history. Bank loans to trade and industry had increased considerably and were growing. New York City banks were reducing their holdings of Government securities, but total investments of banks had changed little in the last half of 1936. Idle funds in the hands of institutions and individual investors continued large, and long-term money rates were exceptionally low.'"

On page 3 of the 1937 report we find the following assertion:

"Currency outside of banks had increased by about $2,000,000,000 between 1930 and 1937."

That is where currency must be to have any effect.

Now comes the report of the destruction of that prosperity, an admission on the part of Mr. Eccles that the Board deliberately destroyed that prosperity.

Yet I have never heard anything said in Congress against it. I have heard of no effort in Congress to control a situation of that kind. We are concerning ourselves with a feared waste of $50,000,000, when the act of the Federal Reserve Board struck down billions of dollars' worth of capital in this country with one blow. We are talking now about saving the taxpayers' money, and in my opinion, there is not a thing that we are talking about which has anything whatever to do with the restoration of the price level.

This is what the Federal Reserve Board did in conspiracy with the Treasury Department. On page 2 of the 1937 report we find the following:

"The rate of advance in business activity was, in fact, so fast that there were evidences of unsound developments."

There is the whole secret. There were evidences of unsound development. Prosperity was moving forward too rapidly to suit them, and there was threat of a boom. Yet there were 8,000,000 unemployed in this country at the time of that so-called threat of a boom. I read further:

"There was a large increase in forward orders in anticipation of further price and wage increases, together with uncertainties regarding deliveries, partly due to labor disputes, and shortages were developing in plant and equipment and in some classes of skilled labor. Notwithstanding the fact that recovery was far from complete and that there was still a large amount of unemployment, boom conditions were developing in particular industries and boom psychology began to be manifested."

Then what happened? On page 1 of the report of 1936 we find that the Board took action to check the upswing. This is what it reported:

"In July 1936 and again in January 1937 the Board of Governors took action to increase reserve requirements and thereby to eliminate a large part of the excess reserves that had accumulated. The combined effect of these two actions of the Board was to double the reserve requirements of member banks. Thus the power conferred upon the Board by the Banking Act of 1935 to increase reserve requirements for the purpose of preventing injurious credit expansion was fully utilized.

"In December 1936 the United States Treasury inaugurated a policy of setting aside in an inactive stock all gold purchased subsequent to December 23, 1936, and thereby preventing the further acquisition of gold from increasing bank reserves. The Treasury and Federal Reserve measures taken together largely eliminated the basis of a potential credit expansion arising from the large movement of gold to this country which had begun in 1934 and had greatly expanded the credit base of the country."

Again, on page 2 of the 1937 report the Board reported that the Treasury Department joined in the program which had the effect of curtailing and checking the return of prosperity. I read:

"In December the United States Treasury, after consultation with the Board, adopted a policy of placing new gold acquisitions in an inactive account, thus preventing further gold imports from adding to the reserves of member banks."

On page 3 of the 1937 report we find the following:

"In August 1936 the Board of Governors had raised reserve requirements for member banks by 50 percent in order to absorb a part of the $3,000,000,000 of reserves in excess of requirements held by member banks. Under the law the Board has the responsibility of changing reserve requirements in order to prevent injurious credit expansion or contraction, and the Board had acted to eliminate from the credit base a part of the redundant reserves accumulated through a large volume of gold imports. The Board's action was in the nature of a precautionary measure to prevent an uncontrollable expansion of credit in the future. The policy of maintaining easy money and credit conditions pursued by the System since the beginning of the depression continued to be in effect."

On page 3 of the 1936 report we find the following:

"The Board, therefore, in January and March 1936, took action to increase the margin requirements applicable to security loans made by brokers and dealers in securities and in March also made these requirements, as increased, applicable to loans made by banks on stocks for the purpose of purchasing or carrying stocks registered on national securities exchanges. By these measures the Board undertook to check the growing use of borrowed funds for speculation in securities, without limiting the supply or raising the cost of credit available for commercial, industrial, or agricultural purposes."

Senators, watch the development and see what happens. See what happens with this control of our monetary system. I continue to read from the 1937 report, page 8:

"About the middle of March prices of stocks and of lower-grade corporate bonds began to decline from the high levels to which they had risen. Advance buying by industry and trade slackened, and early in April prices of commodities traded on organized exchanges began to decline. During the summer increases in crop production contributed to the declines in prices of cotton and grains, while livestock prices advanced. Industrial output continued large, however, reflecting to a considerable extent the filling of orders previously received. In the spring months there was a decline in offerings of securities for refunding purposes which had been in record volume in the early part of 1936 when business organizations, particularly the public utilities, were taking advantage of the prevailing low level of money rates to reduce the cost of their indebtedness."

Here is the end of the story on page 10 of the 1937 report:

"As a consequence of these developments industrial production declined at an exceptionally rapid rate, and the Board's index, which had averaged 116 in the first 8 months of the year, fell to 84 in December. There were also sharp declines in factory employment and pay rolls. Movement of goods over the railroads was reduced and, with costs at a higher level, the earning prospects and financial positions of many railroads were impaired. In the commodity markets prices of raw materials and semifinished products showed widespread rapid declines, and prices of finished goods, which had risen somewhat further during the summer, also decreased. In December prices of some raw materials continued to decline but others, including steel scrap and cotton, advanced. Reductions in incomes were reflected toward the end of the year in reduced consumer buying of automobiles, furniture, and other durable goods. Residential building, which earlier in the year had decreased as a consequence primarily of higher building costs, declined further in the autumn, as uncertainties arose regarding income prospects. At this time there were some reductions in buildings costs, but with business activity declining people were reluctant to build new houses or buy old ones."

There is the history of the rise in 1936 and 1937, and there is the history of the decline down to the present time.

The Federal Reserve Board, which has extraordinary control over the monetary affairs of the United States, conceived in 1936, at a time when there were 8,000,000 unemployed persons in this country, at a time when the price levels had not yet reached those of 1926, that there was a boom, and that conditions were unsound, and the Board took every step in its power to stop the boom, and it did stop the boom, and put conditions where they are now, and since the conditions were brought to that point the Board has taken no action to overcome the wrong and the destruction it did. Instead of that, we have Mr. Eccles, in a very confused and pitiful way, writing a letter to the Committee on Banking and Currency, saying there have been very many disagreements on both sides, and that they would be very happy to have the Committee on Banking and Currency suggest to the Board what they should do.

Mr. President, there is no question what they should do. They cannot control the credit of this country, because a depositor in a bank will not use his money to buy anything so long as he thinks there is a deflationary movement under way and prices are going down. A bank for the same reason will not lend money so long as it believes there is a deflationary movement and prices are going down. Let the depositor think that prices are going up and he will buy, and the bank will join him in lending. The Board has no control over the bank's credit. It has control over the currency in this country. Every time the suggestion is made that the Government use its function in issuing currency, business and banking institutions have been taught to be afraid and they are afraid that something will happen to our currency similar to what happened to the German mark. Therefore, the Board does not know what to do. It will say that there is just as much currency in this country now as there was in 1929. That is true. But where is it? In 1929 it was in the hands of the people. At the present time it is hoarded by the banks on one hand and hoarded by the depositors on the other.

Mr. Eccles tells us that in 1936 not only were deposits moving freely but currency in circulation out of the banks increased. I say "in circulation." I do not mean in circulation as the Treasury considers it to be when it is merely outside of the Treasury. I mean in circulation out of the Treasury and outside the banks.

The deposits at the present time are hoarded. It would make no difference if there were $20,000,000,000 in currency registered in the Treasury reports as being in circulation, which would simply mean that it was outside the Treasury, if all of it were hoarded in banks, both by the banks and the depositors. But there is no doubt that when the Thomas amendment to the agricultural bill was agreed to, authorizing the United States Treasury to issue and spend $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes, it had an inflationary effect. Why? Because, as Jimmie Warburg said, there had never before been such an inflationary movement in this country as that. In addition, it provided another $3,000,000,000 which the Government might use to take up its current accounts. That made a total of $6,000,000,000. It was Jimmie Warburg who suggested that if such a bill were passed everyone who had a deposit would run out and buy something solid—buy commodities and real estate—and there would be the greatest inflation in commodity values that the United States ever saw. That was exactly what we wanted to the point of reflation.

But, Mr. President, none of that power was ever utilized by the President of the United States. He did not utilize the $3,000,000,000. And to make matters worse, as the inflationary period was coming, and the course of prosperity and commodity prices moved up, to July 1933, the Treasury Department again became frightened of boom, and deliberately issued a statement that there would be no inflation, and then prices dropped.

There are many definitions and theories as to inflation and to what effect it will have on the prosperity of the country.

For the information of the country, I am going to quote verbatim from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The high mogul and authority on banking, Myron T. Eccles, was interrogated by Senator PITTMAN, chairman of the committee investigating silver, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. What do you call "currency inflation"? Describe "currency inflation." I have heard the expression used quite a lot. I would like to know distinctly what it is.

Mr. ECCLES. To me it would mean where the supply of money, bank deposits, and currency, in the hands of those that spend that money, is greater than a country's ability to produce the goods for the market. It would be a condition of overemployment, a condition of inability to produce the goods, so that the supply of money in the hands of those who spend it is in excess of a country's ability to supply the demands.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be the effect, then?

Mr. ECCLES. The effect would be the rapidly rising price level. It would be a diminution of the purchasing power of the dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. Has not the Government been striving apparently for 6 years to lower the purchasing power of the dollar and to raise the price level of commodities? That has certainly been the effort of our Government for 6 years.

Mr. ECCLES. Of course, you speak of "the Government." It is difficult for me to say. There are different views with reference to it. There are some people in the Government, and I think practically everybody felt that the prices should go up, it would be desirable to have higher prices certainly than they were in 1932, that the prices should bear certainly some relationship to fixed charges and debt structure. If it is possible to create that condition, I would think that was desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand you now, and I hope I do, the effect of currency inflation would be to raise rapidly price levels; isn't that true?

Mr. ECCLES. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Then by "currency inflation" you could bring the price levels up to what the Department of Labor fixes as parity. That is true, isn't it?

Mr. ECCLES. You may get a great variation in prices. You may have some prices very low, and you may have other prices higher. Taking an average price level, I think that is true.

Now read carefully and analyze the above statement and determine whether you want inflation and prosperity or deflation and poverty.

From the foregoing information every fair-minded man must come to the conclusion that the Federal Reserve Banking System brought on the depression of 1920 by contracting the volume of money. About 1922, after the victims of the depression had been buried and forgotten, the bankers running the System began to expand credit, and through the subsidized press painted a glorious picture of the future. The expansion continued until the depression of 1929 broke upon the country like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky. They extended unlimited credit on a bull market and contracted credit on a bear market, when they should have done exactly the reverse in each instance. This has been the method of the money changers who have controlled the credit of the country, through the national and Federal banking systems ever since the Civil War. It was a case of the pitcher going to the well once too often. Drunk with power, they extended credit and encouraged speculation until prices reached the sky, and when the big financial operators had a conference and decided to unload on the public it was like hollering "fire" in a crowded theater, and they all rushed to get out at once and lost control, like the blind Sampson they pulled the temple down upon themselves.

The official statistics of the Treasury show that in 1929 there were 25,330 banks in operation with $57,910,641,000 on deposit. Every depositor had a right to think that his check would be honored with cash on presentation, when, in fact, there was only $4,459,000,000 of all kinds of currency, from 1-cent copper pieces to $10,000 bills, in existence. Now, how could the banks cash the depositors' checks? It was a physical impossibility, with a result that more than 10,000 banks closed their doors, with colossal loss to the depositors. This is the direct result of our present banking system.

The Good Book says, "By their fruits ye shall know them"; therefore, it would be fair to judge the Federal Reserve System by this standard.

During the 23 years of its operations commodity prices have fluctuated more than during any comparable period in the country's history. Commercial failures have been more than ever before in a like period in the history of this Nation. Through its manipulations, 3 years prior to 1930, saw the greatest period of stock gambling and speculation in the history of the world. It created hundreds of thousands of stock gamblers, and when the crash came left otherwise reputable citizens insolvent and millions broken in spirit. It piled up an amount of loans through the banking institutions of the Nation that reached the stupendous total of more than $40,000,000,000. Such a condition cannot be found in the financial history of any of the great countries of the world.

It has been the greatest piece of legislation for special privilege that has ever been conceived in the legislative halls of the Nation. During its operation greater combinations of capital have been formed than the country has ever known. The records show that at the peak of the depression 15,000,000 men were walking the highways and byways for work they could not get. Twenty-five million men, women, and children—hungry, ragged, and wretched—were on relief. Ten thousand bank failures, entailing the life savings of millions of people, left in their deadly trail bankrupt States, cities, and counties, farmers and businessmen; and we were told that the Federal Reserve System would insure confidence and make financial panics impossible.

Now, my countrymen, when the people complain that we do not have enough money the stereotyped answer is that the banks are loaded with money—more money than they know what to do with. "Now let's look at the record," as Al Smith says. Therefore, for your information, I incorporate in my remarks a letter over the signature of the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency dated May 27, 1939:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, May 27, 1939.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication of the 24th instant, there is shown below the information requested with respect to the capital stock of Federal Reserve banks, and the number, total deposits, and cash in vaults of member banks of the Federal Reserve

System, and nonmember banks in the United States and possessions:

As of Dec. 31, 1938

Capital stock of Federal Reserve banks	$134,575.000
Member banks:
Number	6,338
Total deposits	$43,363,138,000
Cash in vaults	$745,650,000
Nonmember banks:
Number	8,927
Total deposits	$18,544,623,000
Cash in vaults	[1] $204,744,000

[1] Cash in nonmember insured banks only. Cash in all nonmember banks not available.

Very truly yours,

C. B. UPHAM, Deputy Comptroller.

Now, I will analyze the data in the above information. By dividing the total deposits of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System by the total number of Federal Reserve banks the answer will be that the average deposits in the member banks is $6,841,769. By dividing the total cash in the vaults of the Federal Reserve banks by the number of banks it will give you $117,647, the average amount of cash in each bank. Now divide the total deposits of all the member banks into the total cash in the vaults of all the member banks and the result will be that for every dollar that the people of this country had on deposit in the Federal Reserve Banking System there was just 1¾ cents in cash in the vaults of the banks to pay the depositors.

The number of nonmember banks in the country on December 31, 1938, was 8,927. Divide that into the total deposits as indicated above and the result will be $2,077,264, the average amount deposited in each nonmember bank. The cash in vaults of all nonmember banks is $204,744,000. Divide that by the total number of nonmember banks as indicated above and the result will be that the average amount of cash in the vaults of nonmember banks is $22,936. Now divide the cash in the vaults of the nonmember banks as indicated above by the total deposits as indicated above and the result will be that for every dollar that the depositors have in the nonmember banks, there are 1⅒ cents in cash in the vaults of the banks to pay the depositors.

To carry this analysis a little further, you will add the total amount of deposits in the member banks and the total amount of deposits in the nonmember banks which makes a total of $61,907,771,000 deposits in all the banks of the country, Federal and non-Federal. Now we will add the total amount of cash in the vaults of the member banks, $745,650,000, and the total amount of the cash in the vaults of the nonmember banks, $204,744,000 which makes a total of $950,394,000 which shows that the people of this country on the 31st day of December 1938 had more than 60 times the amount of money on deposit as there was actual cash in the vaults to pay their checks. Let us carry this analysis a little further. On December 31, 1938, the report of the Treasury showed that there was in circulation $6,856,408,515. Now subtract from that the total amount of actual cash in all the vaults of all the banks of the country and the result will be that there is $5,906,014,515. Now where is this stupendous amount of money? Your guess is just as good as mine. But why appeal to the banks of the country to loan more money when the records show there is less than 2 cents of actual cash in the vaults to pay each dollar of deposits.

STATISTICS FROM THE UNITED STATES COMPTROLLER GENERAL'S OFFICE

As of June 30, 1928

Number of member banks	8,929
Total deposits	$36,060,000,000
Actual cash in vaults	$449,000,000
Number of nonmember banks	17,384
Total deposits	$22,371,000,000
Actual cash in vaults	$439,000,000

Analyze the above statistics and it will show that there was less than $1.25 in cash in the vaults of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to pay each $100 deposit on June 30, 1928, and $1.96 in cash in the vaults of the nonmember banks to pay each $100 deposit, and yet we are told on every hand that the banks of the country are loaded with money.

As of June 30, 1932

Number of member banks	6,980
Total deposits	$27,864,000,000
Actual cash in vaults	$481,000,000
Number of nonmember banks	12,183
Total deposits	$17,525,000,000
Actual cash in vaults	$313,000,000

Analyze the above statistics and it will show that there was less than $1.75 in cash in the vaults of the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to pay each $100 deposit on June 30, 1932, and a little over $1.78 in cash in the vaults of the nonmember banks to pay each $100 deposit, and yet we are told on every hand that the banks of the country are loaded with money. This is the high-powered streamlined 16-cylinder Rolls Royce Rothschild banking system placed on the statute books of this country by Paul Warburg.

Would not the bankers be in a devil of a fix if everybody in case of a panic naturally rushed to get their money out? There would not be a bank in the United States that could pay off its depositors, and the only thing that could save the country would be to do what the President did in 1933—call a bank holiday. In the meantime, thousands of banks would close their doors permanently, and the depositors would lose their life savings as they did in 1933. I hear someone say the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation would pay off all deposits up to $5,000. In that you are mistaken. The Federal Deposit would have to close its doors. A great majority of the people think that the Government insures your deposits. This is not a fact. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is only a corporation in which the Government has some stock, and the Government does not guarantee deposits, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has only a certain amount of cash on hand, and when that is exhausted they will have to close their doors like any other banks.

I am now going to make some personal observations. Insert quotations, interviews, and statistics for the information of those who are interested in the reform of our monetary and banking system.

Aristotle, universally proclaimed the greatest philosopher of all times, who lived nearly 2,000 years ago, said:

> If the shuttle could weave of itself and the lyre play without hands, there would be no need of servants and slaves.

Half prophecy, half imagination, Aristotle looked down the ages and mused with the closing years of the nineteenth century. He seemed to fancy that with improved machinery, social comforts would multiply among the poor and the burdens of labor would cease. But alas! the dream of Aristotle has not been realized. The shuttle weaves of itself and the lyre plays without hands, but the machine through the greed of monopoly and the despotism of capital are the masters of the poor and slavery continues. Through the exigency of war, chattel slavery in this country gave way before the onward march of advancing civilization, but in the gloom of despair that overshadowed the South and the jubilee of victory that dazzled the North, the international bankers found the citadel of liberty unguarded and thrust its venomous fangs into the very vitals of our monetary superstructure and by trickery and deception foisted on the American people a monetary and banking system, thereby fastening the shackles of slavery more revolting than chattelhood in its haughtiest days—a slavery that now chains the whites and blacks on farms, in factories, and mines—which has resulted in making millions of prosperous farmers tenants on land they once owned—and 10,000,000, more or less, able-bodied laboring men tramps—looking for work they cannot get, and untold millions in hunger, rags, wretchedness for no fault of their own.

What is wrong? In God's name, what is right? Here we have the most fertile land upon the globe, the best supplied with all things necessary to a prosperous people. Our resources are not half developed; our working people are the most intelligent, energetic, and capable upon which the sun ever shone. Man for man the world never contained their equal. Their productive capability is the marvel even of this age of industrial miracles. And yet, with every nerve strained to its utmost tension; toiling, saving—at very death grips with destiny—they are sinking year by year deeper into the slough of despond—into that most frightful of all gehennas, the hell of want.

"God help the rich! the poor can beg," appears to be the motto of the international bankers to whom an inscrutable Providence has given control of this Government; and perhaps the saying is not so foolish as one might at first imagine, for history has a bad habit of repeating itself, and the day may not be distant when the rich will have more occasion for pity than the poor. There are many and unmistakable signs that we are rapidly nearing the patience limit of the common people when they will decline to be longer hoodooed and humbugged by fake panaceas for poverty cooked up by money changers; and what then? Well, strange things have happened when the toiling millions became maddened by misery and frantic with hope deferred. Conditions in France during the closing years of last century were not materially different from those existing in America today; it was a greedy and impudent aristocracy versus a patient and long-suffering people; and when the latter could endure their privations no longer the former went to the wall and there was little left of them but hide and hair. Deprived of property and imprisoned, guillotined, and trampled beneath the iron-shod feet of the people they had learned to despise, one would imagine, after this terrible rebuke, written in fire and blood, the money changers would never again tempt the murderous wrath of the "many-headed monster," but the curse of greed, the lust for gain, the thirst for power blinds men to danger and drives them on to their doom.

Hold yourself down a moment, my ultraconservative friend, until I can work the idea into you that I am not an "anarchist," or any of those dreaded things that flit like monstrous nightmares through the stertorous dreams of multimillionaires, and terrify the waking hours of those who humbly serve in the house of Dives and board themselves. Let us understand each other. Now, what are you that see only the rose pictures painted there by the money changers? In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred you are a pitiful hanger-on, echoing parrotlike ideas of the plutocrat, and condemning the honest workingman who cannot conceal his poverty. It is by the aid of such as you that the money changers retain their power to despoil the people. It makes of you a cat's-paw to rake the chestnuts out of the coals and despises you as a matter of course. I am not inciting a revolution or fostering the spirit of unrest. I am simply calling the attention of Dives to the law of cause and effect that he may stand from under the avalanche. I am not posing as a philanthropist who has nothing to do but weep for the world's woes, but I dislike to see men taking a siesta on the muzzle of a loaded volcano which may get into action any moment. I have no desire to see an upheaval of the fires of hell. For these reasons, if for no other, I am anxious to see the condition of the working people so improved that they will be contented and prosperous. But just so sure as death and taxes there is trouble ahead for Dives if Lazarus be left much longer to care of the dogs.

Excerpt from the inaugural speech made by President Roosevelt March 4, 1933:

This is preeminently the time to speak the truth, the whole truth, frankly and boldly. * * * This great Nation will endure as it has endured, will revive and will prosper. * * *

* * * Plenty is at our doorstep, but a generous use of it languishes in the very sight of the supply. Primarily this is because the rulers of the exchange of mankind's goods have failed, through their own stubbornness and their own incompetence, have admitted their failure, and abdicated. Practices of the unscrupulous money changers stand indicted in the court of the public opinion, rejected by the hearts and minds of men.

* * * Stripped of the lure of profit by which to induce our people to follow their false leadership, they have resorted to exhortations, pleading tearfully for restored confidence. They know only the rules of a generation of self-seekers. They have no vision, and when there is no vision the people perish.

The money changers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization. We may now restore that temple to the ancient truths. The measure of the restoration lies in the extent to which we apply social values more noble than mere monetary profit.

Happiness lies not in the mere possession of money; it lies in the joy of achievement, in the thrill of creative effort. * * * These dark days will be worth all they cost us if they teach us that our true destiny is not to be ministered unto but to minister to ourselves and to our fellow men.

* * * and there must be an end to a conduct in banking and in business which too often has given to a sacred trust the likeness of callous and selfish wrongdoing. * * *

Restoration calls, however, not for changes in ethics alone. This Nation asks for action, and action now.

Ricardo says:

That commodities rise or fall in proportion to the increase or diminution of money, I assume as a fact that is incontrovertible.

John Locke, one of England's greatest thinkers and economists, says:

The lessening of the quantity of money makes an equal quantity of it exchange for a greater quantity of any other commodity.

John Stuart Mill tells us:

That an increase of the quantity of money raises prices and a diminution lowers them, is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency, and without it we should have no key to any of the others.

Old Adam Smith (they have called him the father of political economy) said, in substance, this:

Money measures things and things measure money. Each measure the other by and according to its own abundance, by comparison. If you double the volume of money in circulation, you double the price of everything. By doubling the price you divide the debt because it takes only half as much labor or the products of labor to pay the same debt. If you divide the amount of money in circulation, you divide the price of everything. By dividing the price of everything, you double your debts, for it will take twice as much labor or the products of labor to pay the same debt.

W. J. Bryan said:

The Federal Reserve bank that should have been the farmers' greatest protection has become his greatest foe. The deflation of the farmer was a crime deliberately committed, not out of enmity to the farmer but out of indifference to him. Inflation of prices had encouraged him to buy, and then deflation delivered him into the hands of the money lender. The Federal bank can be a blessing or a curse according to its management. If the Wall Street speculators are in control of it they can drain the agricultural districts and keep up a fictitious prosperity among the members of the plunderbund.

While the Federal Reserve bank law is the greatest economic reform achieved in the last half century, if not in our national history, it would be better to repeal it, go back to old conditions and take our chances with individual financiers, than to turn the Federal Reserve bank over to Wall Street and allow its tremendous power to be used for the carrying out of the plans of the Money Trust.

Abraham Lincoln said:

If a government contracted a debt with a certain amount of money in circulation and then contracted the money volume before the debt was paid, it is the most heinous crime a government could commit against the people.

Thomas Jefferson said:

I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies. Already they have raised up a monetary aristocracy that has set the Government at defiance. The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the Government and the people, to whom it rightfully belongs.

Excerpt from a letter written by Abraham Lincoln to his friend William P. Elkin, November 21, 1864:

I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all the wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war. God grant that my suspicions may prove groundless.

True and prophetic warning by the immortal Lincoln. He foresaw "the enslavement of the country to corporations"

(National Bank System), "the corruption in high places" (from carpetbag days in the South to the Teapot Dome scandal in the West), "the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few." (Today 5 percent of the people own or control 95 percent of the wealth. This means that 6,500,000—5 percent of 130,000,000 people, total population—control 95 percent of the wealth of the Nation.) Do you doubt it? Well might he, a patriot, "tremble for the safety of his country"—but the people, what are they doing? They are camping on a volcano, refusing to be warned. It is a pity they should be so unmindful of the eruption soon to follow.

Hon. Joseph G. Cannon:

This legislation was had in the Forty-second Congress, February 12, 1873, by a bill to regulate the mints of the United States, and practically abolished silver as money, by failing to provide for the coinage of the silver dollar. It was not discussed, as shown by the RECORD, and neither Members of Congress nor the people understood the scope of the legislation.

Hon. William D. Kelley ("Pig Iron" Kelley), of Pennsylvania, who introduced the bill:

All I can say is that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, who reported the original bill, were faithful and able, and scanned its provisions closely; that as their organ I reported it; that it contained provision for both the standard silver dollar and the trade dollar. Never having heard until a long time after its enactment into law of the substitution in the Senate of the section which dropped the standard dollar, I profess to know nothing of its history; but I am prepared to say that in all the legislation of this country there is no mystery equal to the demonetization of the standard silver dollar of the United States. I have never found a man who could tell just how it came about or why.

Senator William Boyd Allison, of Iowa:

But when the secret history of this bill of 1873 comes to be told, it will disclose the fact that the House of Representatives intended to coin both gold and silver, and intended to place both metals upon the French relation instead of on our own, which was the true scientific position with reference to this subject in 1873, but that the bill afterward was doctored, if I may use that term, and I use it in no offensive sense, of course.

In 1890 President McKinley declared on the floor of the House:

I would give it (silver) equal credit and honor with gold; I would make no discrimination; I would utilize both metals as money and discredit neither; I want the double standard.

When Mr. Harrison wrote his letter of acceptance, September 3, 1888, he said:

The resolution of the convention in favor of bimetallism declares, I think, the true and necessary condition of a movement that has upon these lines my cordial adherence and support. I am thoroughly convinced that the free coinage of silver at such a ratio to gold as will maintain the equality in their commercial uses of the two coined dollars would conduce to the prosperity of all the great producing and commercial nations of the world.

Quotation from Mr. Garfield's inaugural address of March 4, 1881:

By the experience of commercial nations in all ages it has been found that gold and silver afford the only safe foundation for a monetary system.

Hon. Daniel Webster's opinion on the Nation's monetary system:

I am certainly of the opinion that gold and silver, at rates fixed by Congress, constitute the legal standard of value in this country, and that neither Congress nor any State has authority to establish any other standard or to displace this standard.

Hon. James G. Blaine, from the floor of the Senate, February 7, 1878:

I believe the struggle now going on in this country and in other countries for a single gold standard would, if successful, produce widespread disaster in the end throughout the commercial world. The destruction of silver as money and establishing gold as the sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect on all forms of property except those investments which yield a fixed return in money.

Hon. John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, who was elected seven times as a Member of Congress from Kentucky, serving from 1877 to May 26, 1890, at which time he resigned to take his seat in the United States Senate; subsequently he resigned his seat in the Senate to become Secretary of the Treasury in President Cleveland's last administration. He was Speaker of the House in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, and has lived in history. He is one of the greatest parliamentarians that ever presided over the House of Representatives.

Excerpt from speech made by Hon. John G. Carlisle:

I know that the world's stock of the precious metals is none too large, and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever become so. Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce, and industry. According to my view of the subject the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one-half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.

The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one-half of the metallic money in the world. With an ample currency an industrious and frugal people will speedily rebuild their works of internal improvement and repair losses of property, but no amount of industry or economy on the part of the people can create money. When the Government creates it or authorizes it the citizen may acquire it, but he can do nothing more.

Our power of legislation over this subject will not be exhausted by the passage of this measure, and we ought not to halt for a single moment in our efforts to complete the work of relief inaugurated by it. The struggle now going on cannot cease, and ought not to cease, until all the industrial interests of the country are fully and finally emancipated from the heartless domination of syndicates, stock exchanges, and other great combinations of money grabbers in this country and in Europe. Let us, if we can do no better, pass bill after bill, embodying in each some one substantial provision for relief, and send them to the Executive for his approval. If he withholds his signature, and we are unable to secure the necessary vote, here or elsewhere, to enact them into laws notwithstanding his veto, let us as a last resort suspend the rules and put them into the general appropriation bills, with the distinct understanding that if the people can get no relief the Government can get no money.

Hon. James G. Blaine, of Maine, elected six times to the United States House of Representatives, and was Speaker of that body in the Forty-first, Forty-second, and Forty-third Congresses; was Republican candidate for President in 1884 and was defeated by Grover Cleveland; was appointed to the United States Senate to fill the vacancy of Senator Lot M. Morrill, and was subsequently elected to that body; was Secretary of State in the Cabinet of Presidents Garfield and Harrison. Senator Blaine was Speaker of the House of Representatives on February 12, 1873, the day silver was demonetized. He heard the debate and signed the bill in his official capacity. Subsequently he was elected to the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. The discussion on the question of remonetizing silver, Mr. President, has been prolonged, able, and exhaustive. I may not expect to add much to its value, but I promise to add much to its length. I shall endeavor to consider facts rather than theories, to state conclusions rather than arguments.

First. I believe gold and silver coin to be the money of the Constitution, indeed, the money of the American people anterior to the Constitution, which that great organic law recognized as quite independent of its own existence. No power was conferred on Congress to declare that either metal should not be money. Congress has therefore, in my judgment, no power to demonetize silver any more than to demonetize gold; no power to demonetize either any more than to demonetize both. In this statement I am but repeating the weighty dictum of the first of constitutional lawyers. "I am certainly of opinion," said Mr. Webster, "that gold and silver, at rates fixed by Congress, constitute the legal standard of value in this country, and that neither Congress nor any State has authority to establish any other standard or to displace this standard." Few persons can be found, I apprehend, who will maintain that Congress possessed the power to demonetize both gold and silver, or that Congress could be justified in prohibiting the coinage of both; and yet in logic and legal construction it would be difficult to show where and why the power of Congress over silver is greater than over gold—greater over either than over the two. If, therefore, silver has been demonetized, I am in favor of remonetizing it. If the coinage has been prohibited, I am in favor of ordering it to be resumed. If it has been restricted, I am in favor of having it enlarged.

The two metals have existed side by side in harmonious, honorable companionship as money, ever since intelligent trade was known among men. It is well-nigh 40 centuries since "Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver which he had named in the audience of the sons of Heth—400 shekels of silver current money with the merchant." Since that time nations have risen and fallen, races have disappeared, dialects and languages have been forgotten, arts have been lost, treasures have perished, continents have been discovered, islands have been sunk in the sea, and through all these ages and through all these changes, silver and gold have reigned supreme, as the representatives of value, as the media of exchange. The dethronement of each has been attempted in turn and sometimes the dethronement of both; but always in vain. And here we are today, deliberating anew over the problem which comes down to us from Abraham's time—the weight of the silver that shall be current money with the merchant.

Those who advocate bimetallism—the use of both gold and silver as basic money—are branded by the subsidized press and college professors who are the paid emissaries of the international bankers, as fools, knaves, cranks, demagogues, repudiators, and so forth. Therefore, in order to disabuse your minds of the truthfulness of these vile names, I am going to make a retrospective tour of the platforms of the two major political parties so that you may see for yourselves exactly how they stood.

The Democratic plank in 1884, Cleveland and Hendricks candidates, was:

We believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution, and a circulating medium convertible into such money without loss.

The Republican plank, Blaine and Logan candidates, was:

We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world; and we urge that efforts should be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard, which shall fix for all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

To show you how much respect Mr. Cleveland had for the Democratic platform plank, his first message to Congress asked for the repeal of the Bland-Allison bill, which was the only recognition that silver had.

In 1888 the Democratic platform, Cleveland and Thurman candidates: No financial plank.

The Republican plank, Harrison and Morton candidates, was:

The Republican Party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money and condemns the policy of the Democratic administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

In 1892 the Democratic plank, Cleveland and Stevenson candidates, was:

We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman Act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with the possibilities of danger in the future which should make all of its supporters, as well as its author, anxious for its speedy repeal. We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage; but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value. * * *

The Republican plank, Harrison and Reid candidates, was:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican Party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals. * * *

I want to again call your attention to the bimetallic plank—the use of both gold and silver as standard money—upon which Mr. Cleveland was elected. In his first message to Congress he called for the repeal of the Sherman Silver Purchase Act which was more liberal to silver than the Bland-Allison Act which was repealed and passed in its stead.

In 1896 the only difference in the financial plank on the silver question which was a paramount issue was that the Democratic platform, Bryan and Sewell candidates, declared for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without the aid and consent of any other nation.

The Republican platform, McKinley and Hobart candidates, declared:

We are, therefore, opposed to the free coinage of silver except by international agreement with the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote.

You will note that they were for the free coinage of silver provided we were permitted to do so by European countries or international agreement.

In 1900 the Democratic platform reaffirmed and endorsed the principles of the financial plank in the 1896 platform.

The Republican Party platform went body and soul to the money changers in the following language:

We renew our allegiance to the principle of the gold standard and declare our confidence in the wisdom of the legislation of the Fifty-sixth Congress, by which the parity of all our money and the stability of our currency upon a gold basis has been secured.

In 1873 we passed the bill demonetizing silver, and therefore when we began specie payment nothing was coin but gold, and it made all of our obligations payable in gold. Most of them were held by European bankers, and it doubled or quadrupled their purchasing power.

Let me give you a little homely illustration of what Congress did when it demonetized silver. Let us assume, for the purpose of this illustration, that corn and wheat are the only grain fit for food for mankind, that there were no substitutes in the world. There is just a certain type of land that produces corn only and the other type produces wheat only. All of this land has been developed to its highest state of cultivation, and every acre that can possibly grow those products has been discovered and used.

We find by statistics that we produce in the Western Hemisphere 84 percent of the wheat of the world and the Eastern Hemisphere produces 75 percent of the corn. The Western Hemisphere produces 84 percent of silver. The Eastern Hemisphere produces 75 percent of the gold of the world. We deliberately pass a law prohibiting mankind from eating bread made out of wheat. Let us say that wheat is silver and corn is gold. What is the result? Wheat goes down, just like silver went down. Corn in all countries on the gold-corn standard goes to the sky. We have got to send to them to get something to eat which by our law is only corn.

That is exactly what we did. We destroyed the purchasing power of silver, our own precious metal.

In 1929, the peak production of silver in the history of the world, we produced twice as much silver in the United States alone as all of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined. I got this from the report of the mint.

When those who believe in the quantity theory of money controlling the general level of prices in which 99 percent of the honest, conscientious economists agree, the money sharks counter with the statement that this is not a fact and they tried to prove it by the statement that during the 1921 depression that there was more money available for circulation than at any other time in the history of the country, which is a fact, but where was it? Locked up in the vaults of the bank and the people wanting to borrow it with good collateral, but were refused. They were in the same fix as a hungry, starving man would be if you put him in a meat house with a muzzle on him. He would simply starve to death with food in sight, but he could not get to it. April 1, 1920, there was approximately $5,000,000,000 available for circulation, the largest amount of money in circulation up to that time.

Horace Greeley:

We boast of having liberated 4,000,000 slaves. True, we have stricken the shackles from former bondsmen and brought all laborers to a common level, but not so much by elevating the former slaves as by practically reducing the whole working population to a state of serfdom. While boasting of our noble deeds we are careful to conceal the ugly fact that, by our iniquitous monetary system, we have nationalized a system of oppression more refined, but none the less cruel than the old system of chattel slavery.

To the Senate of the United States:

In reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 27th of February last, requesting the President to institute inquiries as to the proper place for the establishment of a branch mint at some point in the Western States or in the Mississippi Valley, I transmit herewith the report, and accompanying papers, of the Director of the Mint, who was charged with the duty of making the inquiries called for by said resolution.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 6, 1876.

The above Executive order of the President is self-explanatory and is positive proof that neither the Senate nor the President knew of the demonetization of silver as this resolution was passed by the Senate 3 years after the demonetization and at a time when we were off specie payment and before the Bland-Allison bill was passed which provided for the limited coinage of the silver dollar. Nine-tenths of the coinage of the mints was silver and, of course, there was no need of an additional mint. On the contrary one mint would suffice the entire country.

How many American people know that American gold was shipped to Europe in 1930, 1931, and 1932, when it was valued at $20.67 an ounce; then, when the New Deal revalued it up to $35 an ounce, it was brought back to the United States and sold at the higher price, netting the money changers hundreds of millions of dollars on the transaction through such a temporary transfer from abroad.

Daniel Webster, when asked how panics come, replied:

The people wonder why financial panics occur so frequently. I can tell them why. It is to the interest of the money changers that they should occur. It is one of the specious methods by which these despotic and utterly useless knaves rob the producing, manufacturing, and mercantile classes of their earnings. It is one of the chief plans by which this infamous ring is riveting the chains of slavery upon the limbs of labor. It is one of the chief means adopted to build up a money aristocracy that shall live in idle luxury and ape the pretentious airs of European nobility.

The circulating statement of United States money of May 31, 1939, shows that $6,967,395,463 was in circulation. Of that amount, $4,663,105,258 was Federal Reserve notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and national-bank notes. This entire amount can be taken out of circulation at the behest of the Federal Reserve banks. There was also in circulation $2,004,127,597 composed of silver certificates, United States notes, and Tresaury notes, of which the Federal Reserve bank has no control. The balance in circulation was subsidiary coins. Mr. Eccles, the wizard of the Federal Reserve System, is on record expressing his desire that all currency should be Federal Reserve notes, which the Federal Reserve banks would have the power to retire at their will. This statement is evidenced by his answer to a question propounded by Mr. Trent, the attorney for the Silver Investigation Committee, on March 23, 1939. Mr. Eccles replied, "I would very much prefer that all the currency consist of Federal Reserve notes."

This would mean the retirement of all silver certificates, United States notes (Lincoln greenbacks), and Treasury notes, amounting to $2,004,127,597, giving absolute control of all currency in circulation to the Federal Reserve bank.

You have heard a great deal of talk about Lincoln greenbacks. Did you ever see one? Perhaps you have but did not recognize it. The next time you are fortunate enough to get a $5 bill with Lincoln's picture on it, on the upper edge of the bill will appear "United States Note." That is the greenback.

Congress authorized the President to issue at different times $450,000,000 of United States notes—greenbacks. The money sharks, time after time, attempted to have them all destroyed but were not successful. There has been $346,681,016 in circulation ever since the Civil War, performing the functions of money every day at no expense to the Government. Had we issued 5-percent bonds instead of the greenback, compounded semiannually, the interest on these bonds would have amounted to more than $12,406,000,000.

The President, by the Thomas amendment to the Federal Farm Loan Act of 1933, was authorized to issue $3,000,000,000 of United States notes—greenbacks. In the same bill he was also authorized to direct the Federal Reserve banks to issue $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes to pay and retire Government obligations. This would have the effect of adding three billion of additional money to our volume of money available for circulation.

We have today in this land of the free and home of the money changers, thousands of self-important economists and brain trusters who know as little of political economy as a parrot of the power of prayer. Men who could not tell a fundamental principle from their funny bone, an economic thesis from a hot tamale—who do not know whether Ricardo was an economist or a corn doctor—evolve from their empty ignorance new systems of "saving the country."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S PROMISES

During the first days of the new administration the President announced a policy of raising commodity prices. On May 6, 1933, over a Nation-wide radio hook-up, President Roosevelt said:

The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed.

Again on July 3, 1933, in a message to the London Economic Conference, the President said:

Let me be frank in saying that the United States seeks the kind of dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing and debt-paying power as the dollar value we hope to attain in the near future.

And on July 5, 1933, in a second message to the World Economic Conference in London, he said:

The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is an end from which the Government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear: We are interested in American commodity prices.

On October 22, 1933, in a Nation-wide radio address, the President said:

It is the Government's policy to restore the price level first. When we have restored the price level we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation in London last July, and I say it now once more.

THOMAS EDISON

In an interview on this subject, published in a December 1923 issue of the New York Times, Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor, said:

Now, here is Ford proposing to finance Muscle Shoals by an issue of currency. Very well, let us suppose for a moment that Congress follows his proposal. Personally, I don't think Congress has imagination enough to do it, but let us suppose that it does. The required sum is authorized, say, $30,000,000. The bill are issued directly by the Government as all money ought to be. When the workmen are paid off they receive these United States bills. Except that perhaps the bills may have the engraving of a water dam instead of a railroad train and a ship, as some of the Federal Reserve notes have, they will be the same as any other currency put out by the Government; that is, they will be money. They will be based on the public wealth already in Muscle Shoals, and their circulation will increase that public wealth, not only the public money but the public wealth—real wealth.

When these bills have answered the purpose of building and completing Muscle Shoals, they will be retired by the earnings of the power dam. That is, the people of the United States will have all that they put into Muscle Shoals, and all that they can take out for centuries—the endless wealth-making water power of that great Tennessee River—with no tax and no increase of the national debt.

"But suppose Congress does not see this, what then?" Mr. Edison was asked.

Then Congress must fall back on the old way of doing business. It must authorize an issue of bonds. That is, it must go out to the money brokers and borrow enough of our own national currency to complete great national resources, and we must pay interest to the money brokers for the use of our own money.

That is to say, under the old way any time we wish to add to the national wealth we are compelled to add to the national debt.

Now, that is what Henry Ford wants to prevent. He thinks it is stupid, and so do I, that for the loan of $30,000,000 of their own money the people of the United States should be compelled to pay $66,000,000—that is what it amounts to, with interest. People who will not turn a shovelful of dirt, nor contribute a pound of material, will collect more money from the United States than will the people who supply the material and do the work. That is the terrible thing about interest. In all our great bond issues the interest is always greater than the principal. All of our great public works cost more than twice the actual cost on that account. Under the present system of doing business we simply add 120 percent to 150 percent to the States' cost.

Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury under Lincoln:

My agency in procuring the passage of the National Bank Act was the greatest financial mistake of my life. It has built up a monopoly that affects every interest in the country. It should be repealed. But before this can be accomplished the people will be arrayed on one side and the banks on another, in a contest such as we have never seen before in this country.

These money changers are the scribes and pharisees of the present day so well described in Matthew 23.

The concentration of wealth is greater in our country, in such a short time, than in any other country of history.

The demand for money is equivalent to the sum of the demand for all other things whatsoever, for it is through a demand first made upon money that all the wants of man are satisfied.

The amount of farm products are regulated by the laws of nature, the amount of money is regulated by man-made laws, the one under the control of man, the other God and nature.

Our money changers of today are carrying on in the same arrogant manner, and stand, as the slaveholder did, to lose all, for the people will not always submit to their exactions and their patience will become exhausted, then look out for the deluge which they will bring upon themselves. We would save him from this disaster, but will his greed permit?

Our whole banking system is the greatest piece of debt-creating machinery that the world has ever known.

Ten thousand eight hundred and sixteen failed in the United States from 1921 up to and including 1932. These banks were members of the Federal Reserve System as well as nonmember with an aggregate deposit of $4,885,126,000.

From 1929 until 1934 we experienced the greatest period of falling prices the world has ever known.

The law creating the Federal Reserve Banking System forcefully absorbed all of the 7,500 national banks of the country.

The dollar now used is no longer the unit of value but a unit of account.

Before we get out of our troubles and permanently stay out of them, the Government and not the Federal Reserve banks must issue its own money and, the most important of all, control the credit of the country; in other words, the Government must issue printing-press money instead of printing-press bonds.

What is the difference between a thousand-dollar bill issued by the Government and a thousand-dollar bond issued by the Government? The answer is, there is no difference as far as its security is concerned, but the big difference is that the bond draws interest and is nontaxable, while the money draws no interest and is taxable.

The late Hon. Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr., father of the aviator, of Minnesota, in his book The Economic Pinch, writing of the panic of 1920, says:

> Before the Federal Reserve Act became law the panics were not scientifically created. They were brought about in a bungling way, just forced by a combination of circumstances that the profiteers managed.
> Under the Federal Reserve Act panics are scientifically created. The present panic is the first scientifically created one, worked out as we figure a mathematical problem.

The United States Government lends $1,000 to a farmer for $45 a year.

The United States Government lends $1,000 to a home owner for $60 a year.

The United States Government lends $1,000 to a Federal Reserve bank for only 30 cents a year.

Why is not a farmer or home owner as good as a banker?

Now, my countrymen, we who believe in the quantity theory of money and advocate the liberal increase of the volume of real money to bring about prosperity are met with the argument "That is inflation," when there is not one man in a thousand who really knows what inflation is. You cannot inflate without deflating. The dollar, our unit of value, measures everything—property, labor, commodities, livestock—in fact, everything that is bought and sold. When the dollar is inflated, everything the dollar buys is deflated. To illustrate: If you can buy 20 pounds of cotton for a dollar, you have an inflated dollar and a deflated cotton. If you can buy 2 pounds of cotton for a dollar, you have an inflated cotton and a deflated dollar. We should have neither extreme. By controlling the volume of money we can fix the general level of prices with the same precision as the speed of an automobile is controlled—by increasing and decreasing the amount of gas fed to the engine.

The President evidently is a believer in the quantity theory of real money—basic money—gold, our unit of value, as evidenced by revaluing the gold ounce from $20.67 to $35 per ounce, which automatically reduced the content of the gold dollar from $23^{22}/_{100}$ grains to $13^{71}/_{100}$ grains. The President issued the order of revaluation on January 31, 1934. The Treasury report of that day showed that we had $4,035,000,000 of gold in the Government's possession. The next day, February 1, 1934, the report of the Treasury showed that we had $7,018,000,000. Our wealth expressed in gold dollars had increased $2,797,000,000 overnight. Subsequently additional gold that belonged to the Government on the 31st day of January 1934 was turned into the Treasury, increasing the Government's profits to a total of $2,811,000,000 by reason of revaluation. I want to call the attention to the worshipers of the golden calf, who always holler "fiat money" when you speak of the Government issuing its own money "greenbacks." The above statement of facts should convince them that all money is fiat money regardless of what kind of material the Government places its fiat money on.

General Motors	$91.00	$7.50
General Electric	100.00	8.50
General Railway Signal	126.00	6.00
Gillette Safety Razor	143.00	7.50
Anaconda Copper	174.00	3.00
Bethlehem Steel	140.00	7.00
American Telephone & Telegraph	310.00	70.00
Westinghouse Electric	292.00	15.00
United States Steel	261.00	21.00
Standard Oil of New Jersey	83.00	19.00

It is an anomaly of human nature that we cannot see far into the future and soon forget the past. The above table shows the prices in which gilt-edged stock was sold on the stock exchange in 1929 and the downward plunge they made in 1932 and 1933 and the smaller stocks quoted between $30 to $60 a share went down from 50 cents to $1 a share and millions of shares were sold daily and somebody bought them—not the man on the street but the insiders, the money changers, and who is responsible for this catastrophe—the Federal Reserve Bank System, and it operated on the small scale in the recession of 1938, when Mr. Eccles, "the wizard of finance," thought we were going to have a boom. He destroyed the upturn in prices in commodities that the President had spent billions of dollars to achieve.

Can we by law loosen the grip of the money changers on the throats of the American people. Of course we can if the American Congress will do it. I am going to give you my idea in the rough for such a law. The Government to take over the 12 Federal regional banks—lock, stock, and barrel—and provide that the President shall appoint the seven Governors for life at a salary of $15,000 a year, to be retired for incapacity or old age just on the plan of the law regarding Federal judges, but here is the most important part of the law. Any one or all of the Board may be retired from service by a simple resolution adopted by a majority elect of the Lower House of Congress, and when they are retired their salary ceases and the Lower House of Congress elects their successor without the advice and consent of the President or the Senate. You ask, why ignore the Senate? I am prompted to do so for the same reason the framers of our Constitution provided that when the joint session of Congress met after a national election and canvassed the returns of the result and no one candidate received the majority of all the electoral votes, the Constitution provides that the roll of States shall be immediately called and elect the President—each State regardless of its population has only one vote. Why did the framers of the Constitution make such a provision? For the good and sufficient reason that the Lower House of Congress is a voice of the people elected every 2 years. If we enact a law along the lines I have indicated, the Congress would coin money and regulate the value thereof, instead of the private banking corporations.

In conclusion, my countrymen, I want to say that there is burning in the hearts of our people and trembling on their lips is the question, Can the American Government endure? It is the question of the hour. I do not set up any hypothesis when I assert that the threat to the fundamentals of our form of government is so immediate and urgent as to involve an issue of vastly greater importance than any other with which we have had to deal in generations.

I recognize the fact that the people of America have the responsibility of substituting economic freedom and security for the system of premeditated exploitation and robbery which has made millions today homeless and unemployed. The American people must make an end of such wholesale exploitation, as well as of all other attempts to reduce our people to a state of peonage. To do this they must know the forces arrayed against them.

I have given facts concerning our Government, which have been carefully analyzed by thinkers who have well-founded convictions that the government of any country should exist only to promote the welfare of all the people.

I have attempted to set forth in simple language and by means of recorded facts, the actual causes of the want and destitution existing in the midst of plenty, the reasons for the accumulation of the national wealth in the hands of a few persons.

I trust that those who read will not content themselves with merely reading, but will acquire a knowledge of the salient facts, so that they may instruct and inspire others to organize and strike a decisive blow for national restoration. It is only upon a basis of facts that a solution of any problem can be found. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short letter from the Mississippi River System Carriers Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

MODIFICATION OF W. P. A. ACT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the talk I want to make this afternoon is not one that is written out and prepared. It is simply in the nature of an appeal for the poorer people of this country.

THE UNEMPLOYED

There has been a good deal of talk lately about the W. P. A. and about the National Labor Relations Act and about the wages-hours law, and about other efforts that have been made by the Government trying to meet the immediate situation with regard to many of these people. Much of this talk has consisted of an effort to discredit all these agencies. We have pending before us a lending bill to attempt to bring about better economic conditions in the country and stimulate employment. The main thing I want to say is this: The duty of people who are charged with responsibility of government is not to follow where the pressure is greatest but to find where the need of the people of their nation is greatest and attempt to meet it as best they can. This is not always the most popular thing to do. It is not always popular to attempt to defend the rights of those groups of the people who are least able to speak for themselves, but evidently the duty of conscientious legislators must necessarily be to seek out those very groups within the population and attempt to do justice by them.

I am perfectly clear in my own mind that those people are substantially correct who have said that the Congress cannot act under compulsion from any group. It is hard for me to distinguish, however, between pressure exerted by W. P. A. strikers on the one hand and "well heeled" lobbyists for some special interest on the other. There does not somehow seem to be as much concern over the second kind of pressure or as much fear that Congress will yield to it as there ought to be. I agree. I do not think it can. But I do not believe that the Congress should pass legislation when it knows full well that the impact of this legislation is necessarily going to fall on groups of people who are tremendously hard pressed, or on groups of people who during a long period of years have clung tenaciously to a most tenuous thread of a meager W. P. A. wage standard of living, and who may fall beneath the weight of one more difficulty.

Yet that is just about what we have done. My principal appeal to the House this afternoon is not that it act under compulsion from any group but that it give consideration before it adjourns to changing the bill recently passed covering the W. P. A., so that future conditions among these people who are compelled to depend on that agency for a living need not be, at a time when Congress may not even be in session, so desperate as to cause further hardship than already exists throughout the country. I wonder how many Members know that not only will thousands be deprived of employment but that throughout the North and West the meager subsistence wages heretofore paid to W. P. A. workers are going to be cut.

I was greatly heartened today when the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], a member of a different political party from myself, rose on the floor and stated that he had offered a resolution to change the requirement now in the law that all people who have been on W. P. A. for 18 months or more must be summarily dismissed. It happens that I offered such a bill some days ago, although I have said nothing about it on the floor. My bill simply substitutes the language of the Senate bill and adds certain exemptions. It provides that in consideration of employment preference shall be given to people who have been certified for 3 months or more over those who have been employed for a year and a half or more, but that in no case shall a person who is 45 years of age and the head of a family, or who is a veteran be dismissed under those circumstances. That would be a workable plan, and it would not require summary dismissals. It would mean that if there are large numbers of people knocking at the gate that gradually they may have a chance when the time comes. I am convinced that we should do something about this matter as well as to prevent these wage cuts, which will work so much real hardship.

Next, we must adopt legislation giving opportunity for skilled workers to have jobs not on W. P. A. necessarily, but on a program where their wage scale can be maintained. We need to provide, either in this new lending program or elsewhere, for a program of P. W. A. employment or something similar.

I have thought for a long time that it is evident that the disparity between the incomes of different groups of workers on W. P. A. is probably too great and have tried to work out in my own mind an answer to that problem. Nobody, I think, believes 130 hours a month is too long for a man to work. But it is pretty tough to have hours lengthened and wages cut all at the same time, and a wage standard is the very heart of every labor movement. I believe it can be worked out, but I do not think it can be worked out merely by having Congress decide that we want it such and such a way, and that it is just too bad if it happens to fall on some particular group of people. I am not talking about yielding to pressure. I am talking about passing workable legislation in the first place and taking all factors into consideration.

THE LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Next, Mr. Speaker, mention has been made this afternoon of a proposed investigation of the National Labor Relations Board and the National Labor Relations Act. I shall oppose that investigation and for substantially the reasons given this afternoon by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]. Here is a law—an attempt by Congress to protect the right of collective bargaining. Why is it under attack? Fundamentally, because it is a law intended to benefit a group to which in the past little attention has been paid by government. The Board has made mistakes, no doubt. So has everybody else. The act may not be perfect, but the Labor Committee has certainly been working its head off to find out where and how it could be improved. I want to act on the findings of that committee, if at all. The matter of determining the bargaining unit has caused some difficulty. But an editorial in the conservative Washington Post of this morning would indicate that this problem is being worked out and that in future elections will be relied upon more largely than in the past.

This editorial concludes with the following paragraph:

These rulings may be set down, therefore, as an indication of the N. L. R. B.'s struggle to be fair, despite the inadequacies of the law and the dilemma resulting from the divided ranks of labor.

I am convinced that that is true. We must remember that over a period of time any agency of government has a difficult time, especially when it is administering new legislation, to find the answer to all the problems that confront it. I can see that no good purpose is going to be served by throwing this whole matter into another investigating committee, to try to drag out things that may be politically advantageous from the standpoint of somebody or other.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. If this resolution came with good faith, for the purpose of finding something constructive and affirmative, would it not provide that this committee should come from the House Labor Committee?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Obviously it would, because the House Labor Committee has already conducted a very long period of hearings, and would be in a far better position to do the job and do it right than any other group of people would be. I would be glad to vote for a resolution of that kind myself, although I do not see that it is necessary, because I believe the Labor Committee by its proper prerogatives in the exercise of its work is doing that already.

THE HOMELESS MIGRANT

In conclusion, I want to say there is another group of people in this country, a group of people who are not going to conduct any strikes or make any protests. They are not in a position to do so. Does that mean they will continue to be neglected? It should not. These are people who, because of the economic conditions of the Nation, have perhaps been forced into more difficult circumstances than anybody else. It happens that this group of people is also mentioned in an editorial in the Washington Post this morning—the lead editorial—which I hope everyone will read. Those people I have reference to are what are known in California as "the migrants." What they are is uprooted, homeless families, wandering about the country from place to place in search of work.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I want thus publicly to express my appreciation of the work done by the gentleman who now occupies the floor [Mr. VOORHIS of California] with regard to these various groups of poor people, particularly with regard to the this homeless group, driven out by drought from the Dust Bowl, seeking refuge in the far Southwest. They come into the gentleman's State of California by the thousands. Many of them are going through my State. They do not all get through my State. Thousands of them stop. The Farm Security Administration has done a great piece of work in providing transient camps. The gentleman knows more about this than I do and has done more about it than I have. I want to pay tribute to the work the gentleman has done in getting many of these camps established. And yet not enough has been done in the solution of this great national problem.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. If the gentleman will allow me just another word, may I sanction what the gentleman says in regard to the need of using more care with regard to throwing certain persons off the W. P. A. rolls after serving 18 months, even if there may be almost as many waiting to be put on? I think that is an unusually harsh proposition and I worked against the proposal when it was before the House. I would like to see it modified.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman. He, too, has always done his very best to protect the people of his State and other States who needed our help. It happens that with regard to this group of migratory people, they are people who, through economic circumstances, have been removed from the homes they once occupied and who are now seeking new homes. Most of them are farm families. All of them are of old American pioneer stock. The long-range solution for those people must be one whereby somehow they can go back onto the soil in some way. I believe that can be done. But it is a Federal problem, not just a California problem or any State problem. I have introduced legislation, the best I could devise, to provide that as the locality where these people now are must assume responsibility for somehow absorbing them over the long run, therefore the Federal Government, whose problem this really is, must recognize its responsibility and should pay the cost of necessary relief and assistance to those people until such time as they shall find a residence or local settlement. Further than this I believe a long-range resettlement program must be begun at once. There are possibilities of this in the new lending bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The upshot of my remarks, therefore, is this: We will object to "strikes against the Government," and things of that sort; and if that is going to be our attitude, then I tell you that more than ever there devolves the responsibility on this body to be sure that this body of its own volition, under its own responsibility, does justice to people who are not, by our own definition, in position to demand it of us.

We cannot break down their wage scales. We cannot break down and deny their right to earn a living. We cannot deny them an opportunity to find a home some place in America without the responsibility being on our shoulders. So, I say that while we are considering other problems of Government, while we are considering a long-range solution of this economic problem, which we must do, we must remember that that nation whose legislators adopt a policy which is right and just and Christian toward the poor people of that nation is going to be blessed, and that which fails to do so will not fare so well. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD today and to include therein a joint resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature memorializing the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase dairy and cheese products of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], under previous order of the House, is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE BATTLE OF FRANKLIN

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I requested this time in order that I might be afforded an opportunity to call to the attention of the membership of the House and the country a bill which I introduced on April 24, last, being H. R. 5960, providing for the creation of a national historical park in the area of the famous Franklin Battlefield. This memorable and crucial battle was fought on the 30th day of November 1864, a few months prior to the close of the War between the States. My father, the late James W. Taylor, was a participant in that sanguinary struggle, serving as quartermaster sergeant in Company C, Fourth Tennessee Cavalry.

While characteristic of those who fought in the bloody sixties, my father was always reluctant to discuss his war experiences; however, from criptic remarks from time to time, I became convinced that this engagement to him was a nightmare of sacrifice and carnage.

It will be recalled that it was predicted by some of the more overzealous of that era that the war would be of very brief duration; however, unfortunately it continued with increasing ferocity for 4 long, weary, and dreary years—from the assault on Charleston, April 12, 1861, to the surrender at Appomattox.

During the closing months of the war the political leaders of both the Union and the Confederacy became apprehensive of outside interference. It became known that the French were giving us no little concern in the South and Southwest, and the English were thought to be threatening us on our northern and eastern boundaries. The financial resources of both the North and South were in desperate condition. Both armies were haggard and worn, the soldiers were tired and exhausted.

The people, North and South alike, were discouraged and impatient for the war to end. Yet, Mr. Speaker, despite the grief, the sorrow and desperation of the mothers, daughters, and sweethearts at home, and notwithstanding the hunger, the exposure and the untold agony endured day after day, and night after night; yes, after weeks and months of anxiety and privation, the soldiers on both sides at the battle of Franklin rallied their residual energies to stage a martial magnificence the like of which the world has never beheld. No, it was not at Marathon or Thermopylae, it was not at Waterloo, nor was it at Gettysburg—it was at Franklin that the world witnessed the greatest demonstration of heroism and martial prowess that historians have ever recorded.

In comparison with other major engagements in war the contending armies at Franklin were relatively small, but no armies of whatever magnitude, in all history, have ever displayed in a single battle the determination and bravery and reckless abandon that was exhibited by the soldiers under Hood and Schofield at Franklin. Here we had contending forces of approximately 30 and 40 thousand. It is estimated that of these numbers only 16,000 Federal troops and 24,000 Confederates were actively engaged in the conflict. The Federal troops were fortified behind an almost impregnable wall while the Confederates charged their works in the open without a shadow of protection. The battle began about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and by 9 o'clock at night almost 10,000 men were dead, wounded, or captured. As history records, no battle in the memory of man claimed as many fatalities among the high ranking officers as fell dead or mortally wounded on that tragic day.

When the firing ceased, it was ascertained that five generals were dead, seven mortally wounded and one captured. The dead were generals Cleburne, Adams, Gist, Strohl, and Granbury. The wounded were generals Brown, Carter, Manigault, Quarles, Cockerall, and Scott, all Confederates, and General Stanley, of the Union Army. General Gordon, a Confederate commander, was captured, but not until he had led his men over the enemy's lines.

Mr. Speaker, to fully understand the importance of this historical battle, and to know why it was so bitterly contested, one should follow its history step by step; also, bear in mind the many correlating circumstances.

It will be remembered that General Hood had just 3 or 4 months prior to the battle succeeded Gen. Joseph E. Johnston as commander of the Southern Army. Johnston and Sherman had skirmished in north Georgia and around Atlanta, each endeavoring to gain an advantage for several months. Johnston was a recognized strategist and a cautious commander. Grant was evading a final engagement with General Lee in Virginia, and Johnston had refused to risk a crucial battle with Sherman in Georgia. The public, therefore, were becoming more or less critical in both the Northern and Southern States. President Davis, of the Confederacy, was being appealed to by many Confederate sympathizers to remove Johnston and to drive Sherman out of the South. General Hood was known to be a dashing, forceful, and impatient commander, so President Davis removed Johnston and invested Hood with the command. General Hood had fought under Stonewall Jackson, the peerless soldier and aide to Lee. He had, therefore, had an opportunity to study the tactics which Jackson had employed so successfully on so many occasions. Every Confederate general was known to be eager to avenge Longstreet's failure to flank for Lee at Gettysburg, as Jackson had so ingeniously done in previous engagements.

General Hood had been credited with saying shortly after he was placed in command, "Now is my chance. I'll flank the Yankees out of Dixie or drive them into the Gulf."

At this juncture, however, many of Hood's most conservative staff officers and corps commanders appealed to him to first restore the morale of the soldiers. His men were tired and haggard and hungry. They needed food, rest, recuperation, and better clothing. Hood thought he saw an opportunity to rest and feed and clothe his army—enlist more fighting men under recently enacted conscription laws and make a raid on Cincinnati. This campaign, he thought, would cause Grant to rush west and order Sherman to march north to guard General Lee's army at Richmond—thinking thus to reward himself an abundance of supplies, give Lee's army a needed rest, and serve to fire the hope of the entire Confederacy, as well as to revitalize his own army.

To succeed in this undertaking, Hood had to meet General Thomas' army, which Sherman had left in Tennessee to guard his reserve supplies and communications. Hood planned to take Thomas by surprise, rout and capture his army, and march on into Kentucky and Ohio. Thomas had only three corps under his command. Hence, Hood's plans were not only possible, but exceedingly feasible. No one has ever doubted that; and had President Davis and General Beauregard fully cooperated, Hood might have made his dreams come true.

However, first Davis and then Beauregard hesitated to agree to the campaign. In the meantime fall rains set in. Hood was delayed collecting supplies, due to wet roads and poor railroad facilities.

Then, when ready to break camp and march north to attack the Union forces under General Thomas, Hood learned that Forrest, one of the greatest cavalrymen the world has yet produced, was in west Tennessee and would have to march to Florence, Ala., in order to cross the Tennessee River.

In the meantime and due to the delay for which General Hood was in no sense responsible, Thomas learned of Hood's presence near the State line and had sent General Schofield to Columbia to harass and check Hood's advance until reinforcements, which he had requested, could reach Nashville.

General Hood had dispatched scouts to ascertain the size of the Union Army under Thomas, and to learn where each corps and division were camped. Therefore, he knew that Schofield was at Columbia, and was aware of the approximate size of his command.

When Hood learned that General Forrest had reached Florence and was crossing the river, he gave orders to his entire command to move on to Columbia. Upon arrival at Columbia, Gen. Stephen D. Lee, who commanded one of the three corps that made up Hood's army, was to attack the enemy with such ferocity that the Union forces could not retreat, which would have permitted the other two corps under Generals Stewart and Cheatham sufficient time to flank the enemy and cut him off from the main body of his army.

To the credit of General Hood, it should be said that his strategy was good. His dream and life's ambition to emulate his idol, Gen. Stonewall Jackson, and to prove to the world that he had learned well the lessons taught him by that master strategist, had all but come true.

Generals Stewart and Cheatham had executed their flanking movement successfully and the Union forces under Schofield were completely cut off from General Thomas and were at Hood's mercy. But here again fate intervened. For some unknown reason, though apparently later excused, General Cheatham, who had orders to block Schofield's retreat at Spring Hill, either failed to attack or failed to note the presence of the enemy during his stealthy midnight escape, and the Union forces made safe their retreat to Franklin.

Of the many discouraging and disheartening events since Hood took command, this incident, no doubt, meant the failure and defeat of the entire campaign; and not only did General Hood realize it, but his entire command seemed to sense the crisis.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, we have in a measure reviewed the prologue to the Battle of Franklin. And now before I enter into a further discussion of events leading up to the conflict itself, and in order that one might better realize the sacred significance of this battleground and the inspiration attached to its memory—together with the exploits of superb bravery, along with the pugnacity displayed, and the magnificence of the stirring pageant presented by the contending hosts—I want to especially call your attention to the fact that some forty-two of the regiments in the advancing army were Tennesseans, and that about one-half of the defending battle lines were filled with Tennesseans and Kentuckians. What a battle that must have been.

These men felt no little exhilaration at being again on their native soil. This feeling was intensified on the part of the Confederates by the fact that they had seen their foe fall back before them at Pulaski, Columbia, and Spring Hill. Now they saw their enemy with a river in their rear, and they were determined, if possible, to drive their opponents into the river. They knew well that, if they should do so, there was no army to keep them from the Ohio River. This thought also, no doubt, animated the men on the defensive that day. Moreover, there were in the ranks of the Confederate forces not a few who lived in Franklin, and it was a delight to again see their native town. They felt that sense of defense of home and State, therefore, a victory here would mean more to them than a victory anywhere else.

There were other things that inspired the Confederates to fight as they had never fought on any battlefield before. Cheatham's and Stewart's corps were friendly rivals, each claiming to be the superior in fighting prowess.

General Hood had lost an arm and a leg in previous battles, and for that reason he was not physically fit to endure prolonged forced marches. After he had successfully flanked Schofield's army and was in position to strike the decisive blow, and having every reason to believe that Cheatham would block the enemy's escape, he retired to rest. When morning came and he learned of Cheatham's failure to engage and block the enemy he became desperate. He immediately gave orders to follow the enemy with every possible dispatch.

Now, let us keep this picture in mind. Gen. Stephen D. Lee was at Columbia with two of his three divisions. Stewart and Cheatham each had three divisions. Stewart had eight brigades under his command, and one under General Ector, which he had left behind to guard the pontoons where the army had crossed the Duck River. Cheatham had 10 brigades in his corps, and General Johnston had four brigades in his division of Lee's corps which was to serve as a rear guard and as reserves. This was the army that followed the retreating Union Army to Franklin. Stewart's corps approached the enemy by way of the Lewisburg Road and Cheatham's corps with Johnston's division marched via the Columbia Pike.

The rear guard of General Schofield's army reached Franklin about noon, that was Opdycke's brigade of Wagner's division. The main body of the Union Army had reached Franklin about dawn, and immediately began to construct a defense line. General Wagner was ordered to take an advanced position with two brigades of Cox's corps under command of Generals Lane and Conrad, and to hold this position until forced to retreat should Hood's army attack.

Behind the main line of breastworks and between the river and the Columbia Pike General Reilly was placed in command of Cox' corps. General Stiles' brigade was stationed between the river and the Lewisburg Road, while General Casement's brigade was on the right of the Lewisburg Road, and joining his right and running on around to the Columbia Pike Reilly placed his own brigade. Between the Columbia Pike and Carters Road General Cox placed Ruger's division of three brigades, as follows: General Strickland's brigade was stationed on the right of Columbia Pike, General Moore's brigade was placed on the left of Carters Road, while General Cooper's brigade was held in reserve.

The other corps, under command of General Stanley, was behind the line that extended from Carters Road back to the river on the right—consisting of Kimball's division, with three brigades under Generals Grose, Kirby, and Whittaker, and General Wood's division of three brigades, under Generals Beatty, Streight, and Post—which was held in reserve, as was General Opdycke's brigade, of Wagner's division, which, as stated, did not reach Franklin until about noon. These forces, together with the cavalry unit under General Wilson, was used to prevent General Forrest and General Buford's cavalry from flanking on the east and General Chalmer's cavalry from flanking on the west.

At this stage of the impending battle the Confederate troops were deployed in an open plain below Winstead's Hill, in the southern outskirts of the town of Franklin. Each command was in plain view of the other and could observe the maneuvers of the others. The commanding officers had been stung by the rebuke of Hood in the early morning when he learned of Schofield's escape, and each general was determined that there should be no excuse for censure that day. The colonel of each regiment, the captain of every company, and each and every tired and worn man in the ranks felt the same keen disappointment when they realized what had happened that night. Both officers and privates were more determined than ever to crush Schofield's army before Thomas could come to his rescue.

Now, when the boys in gray reached the crest of Winstead's Hill, they caught sight of the Union Army in the lowlands ahead and instantly the rebel yell went up all along the advancing ranks. The bands began playing, flags were unfurled, and the columns began to deploy in battle array. Staff officers ran here and there carrying orders to each brigade. The colonels, majors, and captains worked in and out of the ranks exhorting and encouraging their men to do or die. Orderlies scuttled to the rear, and as they did so each and every man buckled his belt and brought his cartridge box in play. Guns were loaded, then came the commands to "forward into line," "close ranks," "shoulder arms!" Ahead was an open plain so extensive that the earth seemed to slope evenly in all directions toward the enemy's line. The late afternoon shadows had begun to creep over the Winstead Hill. Slowly the sun was sinking in the west. The autumn air was crisp. Cowbells were tinkling on the adjacent plantations as the milking herds assembled at the stiles for the night. The day would soon come to a close. Small rings of white smoke could be seen lazily floating behind the enemy's line. The boys in blue were preparing their evening meal. Little did they expect what was about to happen; for they had received orders to prepare an early supper and retire for the night, as they were to break camp at dawn and make good their escape to Nashville where General Thomas' army was awaiting with reinforcement. Some stood on their ramparts watching the awe-inspiring forward march of the men in gray as though they were on dress parade—thinking that they would soon come to a halt and pitch camp for the night. No one could imagine that an army would march 30 miles from dawn to 4 and make an attack without food or rest.

But on and on the enemy came in quick step, trailing arms and not firing a shot, when suddenly their color bearers came marching to the front. Immediately the drums began to roll; the bands struck up their favorite battle hymns. The boys in gray looked to the right and to the left, and observed that their generals were not retiring to some vantage point in the rear but were still riding in front and between the lines. The order to fix bayonets was passed along the entire front. No sooner had this command been executed than they heard the order thunder as in unison, "Double time! Charge your enemy!" And they were off with a mighty yell to assault the enemy's line.

Three divisions of Stewart's corps came charging down the Lewisburg Road. Loring's three brigades, under Generals Featherstone, Adams, and Scott on the right, Walthall's division with three brigades under Generals Quarles, Reynolds, and Shelley in the center, and French's division with two brigades under the command of Generals Cockerell and Sears, attacked the Union line on the left along the Columbia Pike.

The three divisions of Cheatham's corps struck the enemy astride the Columbia Pike and all the way around to the river on the left. Cleburne's division of three brigades was momentarily held up by Wagner's advanced brigades, as was Walthall's and French's divisions; and when they reached the main defense lines, Cleburne's brigades, under Generals Polk, Govan, and Granbury, were on the right and astride the Columbia Pike, thus overlapping French's two brigades. Brown's division went forward in two lines. In the first line were General Gordon's brigade bearing on the Columbia Pike, with Gists' on Gordon's left. In the second line, Strahl's brigade was in support of Gordon's and Carter's in support of Gists'. Bates' division of three brigades, under command of Generals Smith, Jackson, and Finley, together with some of Cholmar's cavalry units, charged on the extreme left and faced Stanley's corps of two divisions under Generals Kimball and Wood, each composed of three brigades.

When Lane's and Conrad's men who were in rifle pits about 400 paces in advance of the main line realized that the Confederates were not on dress parade but were attacking in full force, they became panicky. Some threw down their guns and surrendered, others ran for openings in the main line defenses, after firing only a few volleys.

The rebels were quick to take the advantage. The shout was raised "Go into the works with them." This cry was taken up and vociferated from a thousand throats as they rushed on after the confused and retiring forces.

The Union Army was compelled to hold their fire. But finally, when they realized the gravity of the situation, they opened fire, and with such a hailstorm of shot, shell, cannister, and musketry that the entire atmosphere was hideous with the shrieks of the messengers of death. Then came the booming of cannon and the bursting bombs. The whizzing shells came wreathing the air in great circles of smoke from the Union batteries over the river and on the hills back of the town. All of this, with the shouting of throats and the screams of the dying in their struggle for victory made a scene of both surpassing terror and awful grandeur.

Terribly torn at every step by an oblique fire from the Union batteries advantageously posted on the right and left, no less than by the destructive fire in front, the boys in gray moved on and did not falter until they reached the abattis fronting the works. Over this obstruction no organized force could go, and here, the main line of the attacking forces, both front line and reserve, was repulsed in confusion. However, over this obstacle, impossible for a solid line, many officers and men made their way. Numbers of every brigade are known to have gained the ditch and there continued the struggle, and some successfully held their ground. It is said that at least 11 consecutive assaults were made on the Union works, until finally the dust and smoke of battle made it impossible to distinguish between friend and foe.

Thus was the struggle brought to a close, with the dead and dying piled three and four deep. It is said that within 100 paces of the ramparts there was not a foot of ground that was not covered with the dead and dying. In some brigades on the Confederate side the generals, colonels, and line officers were all killed, and in many cases a single surviving captain was left in command—so fierce and deadly was the slaughter of men that day.

And so, Mr. Speaker, ended, as many contend, the bloodiest and most heroic battle of the Civil War.

A little less than 5 months from that eventful day, the war was brought to a close by the surrender of General Lee to General Grant at Appomattox.

Naturally and inevitably, profound prejudices and bitter animosities were engendered by that unhappy conflict. Fratricidal wars have always been fraught with more intense and acrimonious feeling than wars involving different nationalities. This is also notably true of civil disagreements. So, with the signing of the article of peace, came an avalanche of persecution and reprisal in which both sides participated to a greater or less degree.

Scars were inflicted which required many succeeding years to erase. But time has ever been a great healer. And through the intervening years, time, with her stealing tread, has gradually but surely "plucked from memory that deep-rooted sorrow, razed out the written troubles of the brain, and with some sweet, oblivious antidote" entirely cleansed the conflicting atmospheres so that today the Mason-Dixon line is but a memory, and Yankee-Doodle and Dixie have been blended into one national anthem, representative of an inseparable and impregnable Union.

The magnanimity of President McKinley, who had served as a major in the Union Army, had much to do in breaking down the feeling of sectionalism during the Spanish-American War. But it remained for the great World War to wholly eradicate its last vestige.

In the language of the beloved and immortal Bob Taylor:

> The grass now grows green where but a few years ago death sat on the pale horse beckoning the blue and the gray to the opening grave, and roses now bloom where heroes once bled. Blow, bugler, blow, but thy shrillest notes can never again call the matchless armies of Grant and Lee to the carnival of death!
> Let the silver trumpets sound a jubilee of peace. Let the sons of those who wore the blue and gray and their descendants join together in united acclaim of the Republic. Let them kiss the silken folds of its gorgeous ensign, fling it to the breezes, and sing the national hymn. Let them bow, and with uncovered heads salute Old Glory. It is the flag of the inseparable Union.

It is the glorious ensign of that Republic whose bounds are the oceans, whose cover are the stars, and under which burn the everlasting fires of freedom.

And now, in conclusion, pardon me, my friends, for again calling to your attention the bill introduced by me to create a national park of the sacred Franklin Battleground.

Such a park will be a fitting memorial to the intrepid men, both North and South, who gave here the "last full measure of their devotion."

Such a park will serve as a wholesome inspiration to the youths of today and to their posterity. It will stand as a signal testimonial of a grateful Government, proclaiming through the years that those who suffer and die for patriotic conviction shall not perish in vain.

Such a park, and the cemetery hard by, will also serve as a grim reminder that war is the greatest scourge of humanity and that no pains should be spared to avert a future repetition. The words of General Grant at Appomattox, "Let us have peace," should be instilled into the heart of every American. Let us have peace at home, and by all means let us scrupulously refrain from any commitment or entangling alliance which might lead us into another conflict on foreign soil. [Applause.]

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CATHERINE HUMLER—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 97)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a veto message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 556, an act for the relief of Catherine Humler.

Under the provisions of the enrolled bill there would be authorized a lump-sum award of yearly renewable term insurance in the amount of $13,732.

Careful consideration has been given to the facts in this case at set forth in Senate Report No. 157 from the Committee on Military Affairs and in House Report No. 602 from the Committee on War Claims.

The pertinent facts are that the veteran, Joe McFarland Humler, enlisted in the Marine Corps on June 20, 1917; that he applied for insurance on October 20, 1917, in the amount of $10,000, naming his father, Bert Humler, as beneficiary, and his mother, Catherine Humler, as contingent beneficiary, and that instead of following the usual procedure of authorizing deduction of the premiums from the applicant's service pay, that provision in the printed application form was specifically lined out and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

Premiums to be paid by first-named beneficiary above.

Unfortunately, however, the premiums were not paid, although a period of 9 months elapsed between the date of the soldier's application for insurance and the date of his death in service on July 20, 1918. That the father was informed by the veteran regarding the provision for payment of premiums on the insurance is clearly indicated by the father's letter of October 28, 1917, which was received and acknowledged prior to the receipt of the insurance application by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance on November 15, 1917. The father again communicated with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance on January 1, 1918, and the Bureau's reply of January 7, 1918, explicitly emphasized the necessity of taking action with regard to payment of the premiums. The father failed to make payment of premiums, and at the time of the veteran's death in service, July 20, 1918, 9 months after the date of application, there was no insurance in force.

Cases such as this are very appealing. However, attention must necessarily be given to the fact that there were approximately 5,000,000 men in the armed forces of the United States during the World War, and that there are, of course, many other cases of equal merit which do not come within the terms of the existing law. Approval of this bill would be used as a precedent in many other cases where for various reasons insurance contracts were not consummated.

While no award of insurance could be made in this case, the following awards have been made to the veteran's mother, Mrs. Catherine Humler: $463.50 under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, and continuing death compensation benefits in the amount of $45 per month.

It is with regret that I do not, for the reasons above stated, feel justified in giving this bill my approval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 18, 1939.

PUNISHMENT FOR KILLING OR ASSAULTING FEDERAL OFFICERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act of May 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 780; 18 U. S. C., 253 and 254), as amended, providing punishment for killing or assaulting Federal officers, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPRESSIONS OF APPRECIATION BY THE LEGISLATURE OF PUERTO RICO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1

To express to the President of the United States and to the National Congress the satisfaction experienced by our people on learning that the Nation has decided to make use of our island to strengthen its lines of defense, and for other purposes.

Whereas the President of the United States and the other civil and military authorities of the Nation have publicly recognized and proclaimed the importance of Puerto Rico as a cornerstone in the defense of the Atlantic coast of America and of the Panama Canal; and

Whereas the Government of the United States has decided to establish in the island of Puerto Rico a military department of the first order for purposes of defense; and

Whereas in accordance with reports sent from Washington to the Puerto Rican press it has been said that there are plans for the expenditure of $1,000,000,000 in the military defenses of this island; and

Whereas those same reports state that there will be a fuller recognition, popular as well as congressional, of the importance of Puerto Rico to the continental United States; and

Whereas from that military extension of the United States to Puerto Rico and the heavy expenditures which the National Government will make in the island, it may be inferred that the metropolis has a special interest in permanently binding to its destiny the destinies of this island; and

Whereas the people of Puerto Rico, which is composed of loyal citizens of the United States, would be willing to show, as often as may be necessary, its determination to collaborate in the military plans and actions of the Nation by offering its soldiers, contributing its money, and cooperating with its labor and its discipline as it has already done once during the intervention of the United States in the World War; and

Whereas without that friendship and without that loyalty which the people of Puerto Rico feel toward the metropolis, the island could not be considered as a stronghold in spite of the armed forces which might be established therein; and

Whereas the present disposition of the Government of the United States toward Puerto Rico with reference to the establishment in the island of a military department of the first category, inspires confidence in the investment of capital in properties properly acquired and in industries installed with reciprocal advantages to continental and insular citizens; and

Whereas the people of Puerto Rico, first in the election of 1932 and later in the election of 1936, expressed, by a considerable majority, taking into account the platform of the political parties constituted here, its wish that its destiny should continue to be linked to that of the metropolis; and

Whereas the dignity of the United States citizenship which we enjoy is the best proof that we should aspire to maximum civil rights and to the enjoyment of all the prerogatives guaranteed by the Constitution, under the same conditions as they are enjoyed by the sons of the States of the Confederation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico (the house of representatives concurring), To express to the President of the United States, to his Government, and to the National Congress, the satisfaction experienced by the people we represent, upon their learning that the Nation has need of us as we have need of her; our best and most enthusiastic determination to serve her unreservedly so that she may strengthen her necessary line of defense, locating it mainly on Puerto Rican soil and counting on the loyalty of her fellow citizens of this island; and our hope that, true to their liberal tradition and to their firmly established sense of justice, the national authorities will give the most watchful and fruitful attention to the interests of the people of Puerto Rico and to the right which we Puerto Ricans, as citizens of the United States, long to have recognized in the nearest possible time, to have the State of Puerto Rico incorporated within the Federal Union.

We, Enrique González Mena and Antonio Arroyo, secretaries of the Senate and the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, respectively, do hereby certify:

That the foregoing Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 1 was approved by the Senate and House of Representatives of Puerto Rico on May 15 and 18, respectively, 1939.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and caused to be affixed the seals of the Senate and the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico on this the 20th day of May, A. D. 1939.

[SEAL] ENRIQUE GONZÁLEZ MENA,
Secretary, Senate of Puerto Rico.

[SEAL] ANTONIO ARROYO,
Secretary, House of Representatives of Puerto Rico.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 2

To express the gratitude and appreciation that the people of Puerto Rico feel toward its executive the Honorable Blanton Winship, and to declare him an adoptive son of this island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes

Whereas the Honorable Blanton Winship, a retired general of the United States Army, was appointed Governor of Puerto Rico by His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt in the year 1934;

Whereas during his incumbency as chief executive of the island Governor Winship has distinguished himself by his active interest in assisting the people of Puerto Rico in the search for suitable solutions of the many grave problems that affect its happiness and welfare—problems with which he identified himself to the extent of championing them earnestly and zealously during his frequent appearances before the authorities of the metropolis;

Whereas in his character as Governor he cooperated with this legislature in the solution of many of the problems already mentioned and, as a result of this cooperation the following legislation was approved: An act establishing universal suffrage; an act establishing the 8-hour work day; an election law which guarantees free and conscientious suffrage; an act to intensify industrial rehabilitation; the Hospital Charities Act, creating four district hospitals; the Workmen's Compensation Act; an act for the protection and development of the agricultural wealth; an act to stimulate sports in the island; the Housing Authority Act; an act establishing the insular lottery to combat tuberculosis; an act creating the Arecibo Harbor Authority; an act creating the labor relations board; an act to promote the welfare of the aged; an act creating agricultural farms; laws on eugenics; an act to create the emergency measures advisory board; an act to establish a plan of municipal roads and insular roads and bridges; an act for the dredging of the bay of San Juan; an act for the establishment of a graving dock; an act for the elimination of grade crossings; an act for the construction, with combined insular and Federal funds, of roads, bridges, and public buildings; an act regulating home work; acts for the enforcement of constitutional provisions for the holding of lands; an act for the protection of new industries; and numerous transcendental labor, social, and economic laws of vital importance to the country;

Whereas Gen. Blanton Winship, a fervent admirer of the landscapes and the climate of Puerto Rico, of the irresistible lure of its shores, and of the strategic position of the island in the heart of the two continents, was a persistent propagandist of the natural advantages of Puerto Rico as a winter resort, and brought to the attention of the War Department the advisability of locating one of their bases at San Juan, P. R., and did the same with the Navy Department, and as a consequence of his work the Federal Congress passed the appropriations to construct the naval and air bases at Isla Grande in the port of San Juan;

Whereas the institute of tourism, the exclusive creation of Governor Winship, has served to establish bonds between the island and the continental States through the ever-increasing number of visitors who are surprised by the charming beauty of our land;

Whereas Gov. Blanton Winship took advantage of his excellent connections in the official world of Washington so as to procure for Puerto Rico participation in like proportion as the other States and Territories in the benefits of the Federal New Deal legislation directed at solving the economic depression of these last years, and succeeded in having many of those laws made extensive to the island;

Whereas Gov. Blanton Winship has devoted the last 5 years entirely to the defense of the rights and of the best interests of the people of Puerto Rico, and in his love and loyalty for the island was one with those of us who have had the privilege of being born in it;

Whereas the Legislature of Puerto Rico has learned that Gov. Blanton Winship will soon leave the island after having rendered to it 5 years of brilliant service; and

Whereas it is the duty of this legislature, in behalf of the people it represents, to state solemnly its appreciation of the fruitful work done by Gov. Blanton Winship during the time he has occupied the old palace of La Fortaleza: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico (the House of Representatives concurring):

(1) To acknowledge, as by this resolution is acknowledged, that His Excellency Gen. Blanton Winship, Governor of Puerto Rico, is entitled to the fervent gratitude of the Puerto Rican people for his fruitful work and his earnest resolve to secure for our island the benefits of Federal New Deal legislation and to bring about that the island and its problems be better known in official circles of Washington.

(2) To declare the Honorable Blanton Winship, as he is hereby declared, an adoptive son of the island of Puerto Rico.

(3) That a certified copy of this resolution be transmitted to His Excellency Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; to the Honorable Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior; to the honorable, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the heads of the bureaus of said Departments; to the chairmen and the members of the permanent committees of both Houses of Congress, to the press of the country, and to the chief newspapers of the United States.

(4) That a certified copy of this resolution, when transmitted, be delivered to the Honorable Blanton Winship by a joint committee designated by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

We, Enrique González Mena and Antonio Arroyo, secretaries of the Senate and the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, respectively, do hereby certify:

That the foregoing Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 2 was approved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico on May 17 and 18, respectively, 1939.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and caused to be affixed the seals of the Senate and the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, on this the 20th day of May A. D. 1939.

[SEAL] ENRIQUE GONZÁLEZ MENA,
Secretary, Senate of Puerto Rico.

[SEAL] ANTONIO ARROYO,
Secretary, House of Representatives of Puerto Rico.

INTERSTATE OIL COMPACT—RECONSIDERATION AND POSTPONEMENT OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on a former occasion the Senate passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) consenting to an interstate oil compact to conserve oil and gas, and at the same time the House passed a similar joint resolution. When the House measure reached this body I asked for its consideration, and it was passed. I then entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate joint resolution had passed, and then I asked that the Senate joint resolution be returned from the House. The House has returned it; and I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate Joint Resolution 155 was passed be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 155 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TRUTH IN FABRIC; WOOL PRODUCTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. LUCAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

TREATIES WITH JAPAN

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 166) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Government of the United States should give Japan the 6 months' notice required by the treaty of 1911 for its abrogation, so that the Government of the United States may be free to deal with Japan in the formulation of a new treaty and in the protection of American interests as new necessities may require.

Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Government of the United States should ask that the Conference of Brussels of 1937, now in recess, should be reassembled to determine, pursuant to the express provisions of the Nine Power Treaty of Washington of 1922, whether Japan has been and is violating said treaty, and to recommend the appropriate course to be pursued by the signatories.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STRIKE OF W. P. A. WORKERS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Senate Committee on Appropriations an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press of July 16, 1939, entitled "A Crisis for Labor, Relief, and Social Security."

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of July 16, 1939]

A CRISIS FOR LABOR, RELIEF, AND SOCIAL SECURITY

The W. P. A. strike, with its attendant violence, can easily become the most disastrous thing which has ever happened to organized labor, to relief, and to social security in general.

It is jeopardizing the whole W. P. A. program.

Coming on the heels of the costly warfare between C. I. O. and A. F. of L. and the unpopular conduct of the National Labor Board, this strike is the climax in a series of injurious union developments.

"You cannot strike against the Government," said President Roosevelt—and we believe the American people are overwhelmingly behind that statement. But in defiance of the President and in disregard of public opinion, the strike continues; and blood flows—of all places—at a W. P. A. sewing project. More than almost any other type of projects, the W. P. A. sewing activities are pure relief, complete charity, utterly made work. They have been set up by the Government, not because there is any genuine need for them but solely to furnish employment.

These things have given to the critics of Mr. Roosevelt and to the opponents of relief spending their perfect excuse to say:

"See, we told you so. There is complete lack of appreciation. We have spent billions to make work, and those for whom it was provided aren't even willing to work 7½ hours a day for 4 days a week to earn their pay. And now they turn—as always—on their friends; they even oppose Mr. Roosevelt, who has pretty nearly wrecked the country trying to help them."

This strike is playing into the hands of every reactionary in the country.

It is a boon for all those Fascist elements who would like to crush unions, suppress civil liberties, and regiment the people as they have been regimented in Germany and Italy.

It is suicidal for organized labor.

It is building public resentment, not only against W. P. A. but against relief in general and against social security and other humane measures adopted under the New Deal to help the poor and weak.

It is widely recognized that the Workers Alliance—one of the striking organizations—is a Communist-led outfit whose president recently went to Russia (through contributions of relief funds) to attend a celebration honoring Lenin and whose secretary-treasurer admitted before a congressional committee that he is a Communist Party member. The Workers Alliance leadership has only one objective—to raise hell. By destroying relief, by sabotaging old-age assistance, by wrecking the New Deal, and undermining public confidence in the American Government, the Workers Alliance leaders and their fellow Communists and fellow travelers are trying to turn unemployment evils into revolution.

The Nation knows this, and it knows also that a strike against the Government is in itself a form of rebellion.

The Nation knows that if Congress can be whipped by strike action into passing certain laws, then the next logical step is to compel legislation by other violent means.

This strike is creating a crisis for democratic principles, for relief, for the right of labor to organize, and for other humane principles of the New Deal. It is a crisis created by those whom Mr. Roosevelt has been trying to help.

It is a strike that cannot be won—a strike which, if continued, can only react increasingly against those engaging in it.

Those who are taking part in this strike are being woefully misled. In the case of the Workers Alliance, the misleading is deliberate. But, strangely enough, the strike is also being encouraged by A. F. of L. leaders who are undeniably loyal but who are proving to be both dumb and blind. These latter seem intent on leading their own organization over a cliff.

THE WILL TO PEACE—EXCERPT FROM ADDRESS BY DR. NEIL CAROTHERS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief portion of an excellent address by Dr. Neil Carothers, dean of the College of Business Administration of Lehigh University, delivered at this year's commencement exercises of the Bethlehem (Pa.) High School. Dr. Carothers courageously declared that, despite the fears that oppress us, there is no danger of another general world war at this time. In my judgment, if we could have more of this talk of peace, and action making for peace, we might be able to substitute peaceful change for the savage destruction of war.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NO WAR DANGER, SAYS CAROTHERS AT GRADUATION

Many wise and thoughtful men believe that we are on the eve of the most ghastly and destructive war in history. They believe that this war will be a war of the entire world and that it will destroy all the civilization that men have built in 5,000 years. They believe that in this war cities will be destroyed, women and children will be killed and mutilated, and that out of it all may come upon the world another Dark Ages, like that which followed the collapse of the Roman Empire.

I do not believe it. These prophets of doom selected 1939 as the year for the outbreak of this holocaust. But it has not come. They now predict 1940 or 1941 as the year for the outbreak of war. But even with all the unhappy forces at work in the world today to promote war, there are countervailing forces opposing war, and I believe that we shall escape it. War is a curse, an unmitigated evil and horror, and it will disappear with the growth of intelligence and knowledge and education.

Second, there is the problem of the form of government under which you young people will live. Here, again, there are admittedly grave dangers. There is undoubtedly the possibility that some revolutionary change in our form of government impends. It is possible that this country is destined to endure some form of dictatorship which will destroy all that we know as the American way of life. But here, again, I doubt it. Our American people have withstood the pressure of unemployment and destitution for 10 years, and they will not now at this late date fall victims to the false promises of demagogues and revolutionaries and dictators.

And now for the economic problem that you graduates face. Admittedly it is a serious one. Depression still surrounds us. Unemployment still is widespread. There should be a job for every boy and every girl in this graduating class who wants a job and needs a job. It is entirely natural that many of you should feel that there is something absolutely wrong and absolutely unsound about an economic system which has no place for young people finishing high school. And some of you may be bitter about it. Last year the graduates of a large high school in the West bore a banner to graduation exercise bearing the legend, "W. P. A., here we come."

This is a natural slur at our economic system, but it is not justified. Our economic system has not collapsed. It has been sorely hurt by depression, which was caused by a world war. It still has much injustice in it. But it is sound at heart. I wish that I could say that there is now a job waiting for every one of you who wants one. I cannot say it, for it would not be true. But I can say that there will be before so very long a job for every one of you, for this unhappy depression is at last drawing to a close. And in the future there will be a greater prosperity, a higher level of wages, and a better standard of living than this Nation, rich as it is, has ever known in the past. You young people, with all that you may have gone through so far, will have a happier, cleaner, and fairer economic life than we older people have had.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION OF CHARLES ALVIN JONES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I expect to vote for the confirmation of Charles Alvin Jones to be United States judge for the third circuit because he is a good man for the position to which he has been appointed. It was a pleasure for me to notify the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, that I would have no objection to this appointment, for I regard Mr. Jones as a man of ability. I believe he will be faithful to the trust reposed in him and give justice to all the people. I congratulate the people of Pennsylvania, especially my own city of Pittsburgh, that such an able judge has been nominated for the third circuit court.

THE BUSINESS UPTURN

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, on the front page of the Washington Post of this morning is a very encouraging article by an Associated Press correspondent pointing to the business upturn. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks a brief chart which is a part of that article, showing the business upturn at this time. I also announce that it is my hope that this upturn may continue, and that the Congress will do its part by staying in session until we pass the President's self-liquidating lending program to continue this upturn, lest we sink back.

We have marched up the hill. I believe we should make secure our gain by the passage of this lending program, which will make unnecessary marching back down the hill. By the passage of this program now we shall save from several months to a year, and thereby prevent a business slump.

While I should like to go home, yet I hired out to the people of Oklahoma on a 12-month basis, and am not only willing but desirous that we continue this business upturn by supporting President Roosevelt through the enactment of the lending self-liquidating program which he has asked that we pass at this session.

I ask unanimous consent that the chart to which I have referred be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The chart is as follows:

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that beginning with Calendar No. 755, Senate bill 2465, where we left off at the last call, the Senate proceed to consider bills to which there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF J. ROSS EAKIN AS SUPERINTENDENT OF GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may there be just one exception? The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and I are now in agreement regarding his resolution for an investigation of Mr. Eakin, and I should like to get it out of the way.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that it is my purpose to go back and have the calendar called from the beginning after we finish the bills on the list that were not reached the other day; and it may be that we can take care of the resolution on that call. I have no objection to that arrangement, however.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It will take us but a moment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It will take but a moment, and I may not be here at the conclusion of the calendar. With that exception, I have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky, with the exception suggested by the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none. The clerk will read the resolution referred to by the Senator from Michigan.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 131, submitted by Mr. MCKELLAR on May 16, 1939, as follows:

Whereas sometime in 1931 J. Ross Eakin was appointed superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and stationed at Gatlinburg, Tenn.; and

Whereas on or about July 18, 1936, H. E. Myers, regional fiscal supervisor, was sent by the Department of the Interior to audit and check the accounts of the said J. Ross Eakin dealing with control of Civilian Conservation Corps camps; and

Whereas on November 27, 1936, the said H. E. Myers made a report to the Department of the Interior concerning his examination and audit of the accounts of J. Ross Eakin; and

Whereas in such report the said examiner and accountant made many charges against the said J. Ross Eakin, among which were the following:

(1) "Receipts from materials and supplies were not obtained in majority of instances."

(2) "A review of the following comments will disclose that proper purchase and contract procedure were not followed. In the auditor's opinion, the greater portion of these discrepancies can be charged to incompetent personnel in charge of purchasing, and lack of proper supervision by ones responsible. Several excuses were given for mistakes that had been made, the favorite one being to place blame on clerk that was suspended on August 1, 1936, and the next being failure to receive information from Washington office."

(3) "It would appear that anything that was wanted by anybody was purchased, regardless of regulations, and that every known means used to get the same paid by the finance officer, giving him answers to his questions that were not borne out by the facts, when he would hold up payment of vouchers for additional information.

"While audit was being made several suggestions were made to correct errors as they were discovered, and a later check would disclose that suggestions were not followed out immediately, if at all."

(4) "Motor oil purchased in open market, not under Navy contract; typewriter rentals, no contract; purchase of typewriter; service-station deliveries of gasoline; photographic equipment; printing of forms; time books, field books, ledgers, daybooks, and columnar journals; repair parts for automobiles not under TPS contracts 7807 and 7808; office furniture, desks, drafting tables, stools, steel desks, steel cabinets, and steel files; drafting instruments; printed envelopes; spark plugs in large quantities at double TPS contract price; junk batteries traded in on new batteries, a dozen or more at one time; and blowtorches traded in on new ones."

(5) Excess purchases: "It was noted that a great many automobile tires and tubes were purchased. A check of these purchases shows that between April 1, 1935, and June 30, 1936, tires and tubes amounting to $13,012.62 were purchased. Just why it would be necessary to purchase a hundred tires at one time and place them in stock at the two warehouses and service stations carrying a complete line of truck tires at Knoxville Tenn., and Asheville, N. C. As a large stock of tires were on hand at Sugarlands warehouse, inquiry was made and answer received that they were for detached-service cars, and when it was pointed out that it was not necessary to have extra tires on hand, when they could be obtained from Knoxville, when and as needed, the answer was then given that the tires on hand had been purchased by the clerk that had been suspended.

"As a great many partly worn-out tires were in several places, instructions were given to have all of these tires placed in one building under lock and key, and when this was done it was found that one abandoned barrack building at Sugarlands was completely filled with worn-out, or partly worn-out tires from camps in Tennessee, some of them, in the auditor's opinion, being good tires showing very little use."

(6) "It was impossible for auditor to check accountability for all tires purchased, due to the method of handling the same all around.

"Many purchase orders were issued for batteries for automobiles and trucks, orders being for 1 dozen; sometimes 2 dozen or more at a time. Here again it was discovered that as no uniform truck drivers' report system was being used; in fact, only one camp showed a battery hydrometer on property inventory, so it was impossible for truck drivers to properly test batteries."

(7) Irregular contracts: "Inspection of contracts in file shows that a general understanding of contract procedure was not had by all concerned with the preparation of contracts."

(8) Real-estate leases: "For rent of 'one building approximately 20 feet 2 inches by 16 feet 2 inches for use as an office for Government employees.' Beginning October 21, 1933, to as long as needed, with option in either party to terminate same upon 30 days' notice. Rental, $21 a month. Heat and light furnished."

A contract with one Huff was for a building "with 1,156 square feet floor space" for which he paid $53 per month. Another contract with A. J. Huff was for a "building located in rear Mountain View Hotel used as a garage containing two stalls." The rental for this was $6 per month.

These leases were all made in 1933 and never renewed and did not conform to regulations.

(9) Cement contracts: Invitations for bids were sent on February 28, 1936, for "cement in paper bags of 94 pounds net." No quantity was stated. "Volunteer Portland Cement Co., Penn Dixie Cement Corporation, and Southern States Portland Cement Co. all submitted identical bids of $2.49 per barrel, of 4 paper sacks, in carload lots of not less than 132 barrels. The above 3 mentioned firms were equal low bidders; a fourth bidder was 5 cents per barrel higher.

"On these 3 bids, under the same invitation, 3 contracts were awarded for a carload of 132 barrels, viz: a contract with Volunteer for 132 barrels, 1 with Penn Dixie for 132 barrels, and 1 with Southern States for 132 barrels." This was contrary to the law and to the regulations. Another contract "dated March 17, 1936, with Volunteer Portland Cement Co., for $414.38. Three equal low acceptable bids were received. Award was made to concern nearest park, instead of by lot, following justification being stated on statement of award: 'But it would result in increased cost to split the award, and due to the fact that it would also result in delay and cost to Government to request that representatives of these companies draw lots for award.' "

(10) The rental of teams and horses was denounced by the auditor as being contrary to the law and regulations.

(11) "Purchases in excess of $100 not covered by contracts: Statement made to auditor that it was the understanding of all concerned at the park office that, beginning April 1, 1935, authority was granted to make open-market purchases up to $299.99."

(12) "Travel orders were issued by superintendent of park, and in a few cases by acting superintendent, reading 'Great Smoky Mountains National Park and vicinity,' and based on these travel orders, files show that travel was performed and paid for by finance officer to and from various places in Tennessee, North and South Carolina, and Georgia. Other travel orders were issued specifying certain places in Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Virginia, all outside of limits of Great Smoky Mountains National Park."

Travel orders were issued by the Washington office and the amount changed by the park officers with this justification: "It is determined to be more economical and advantageous to the Government for you to use your personal car at a mileage rate that will not exceed cost by common carrier."

Travel orders were issued, and per diem paid thereon, to various people who did not leave the park.

"Several travel vouchers were paid to Emergency Conservation Work clerks in park office, and supervising mechanics, that have the appearance of Federal Government paying for employees' pleasure trips. For example, Emergency Conservation Work clerk in Gatlinburg office being paid for per diem on trips to Knoxville, Tenn., showing leaving headquarters (Gatlinburg) after 4:30 p. m. (office closing time) for Knoxville, Tenn., remaining in Knoxville (a distance of 40 miles from Gatlinburg) overnight, and leaving there the next morning at 7 a. m., arriving Gatlinburg at 8 a. m. Another example was supervising mechanic leaving Bryson City, N. C., at 7:30 p. m., arriving at Knoxville 11:15 p. m., and leaving Knoxville at 6 a. m. next morning, arriving at Bryson City at 9:45 a. m. This party's headquarters was Smokemont, N. C., several miles from Bryson City, N. C. He spent a great many evenings in Knoxville, Tenn., and Asheville, N. C., arriving at these places after regular closing hours for all kinds of official business, and leaving the next morning before opening hours, and collected per diem for the time away from official station.

"Travel orders were issued, and per diem paid thereon, to various parties whose official duties placed them in travel status, who would leave official headquaters, either Bryson City, N. C., or Gatlinburg, Tenn., between 7 and 10 a. m., traveling to places within park or points in vicinity, returning to official headquarters early in the evening.

(13) "Very little attention was paid to bills of lading. Of those issued by this office, no record was kept; that is, no register was maintained."

A long list of these bills of lading was given concerning which the auditor could make no report.

(14) Shipping tickets were found to be in the same situation.

(15) There were very few paid copies of pay rolls in the park files, and little could be told from those.

(16) The auditor pointed out numerous mistakes in allotment ledgers, telegraphic reports, cost records, and reimbursements, all of which had been managed improperly.

(17) The auditor then made a statement of a test check, as follows:

Total funds allotted	$533,145.00
Less: Type-mapping allotments	19,127.00
Total allotments for work program	514,018.00
Less: Balance unexpended (adjusted)	602.95
Total to be accounted for	513,415.05
Cost reported:
Fifth period	175,589.98
Sixth period	149,242.10
First half, seventh period	56,542.35
Total costs reported	381,374.43
Unaccounted for	132,040.62

When this same auditor was questioned about this shortage he made some correction about it, as shown in the following excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 17, 1939:

"Senator MCKELLAR. You thought this was such an unusual circumstance that you ought to talk to Mr. Spillers, the general engineer who had charge of the books, did you not?

"Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. And you called his attention to this unaccounted-for amount of $132,040.62, did you not?

"Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. And when you did that he said there was a detached pay roll that would account for it; and when that was brought in it was $17,259. Is that right?

"Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. If you deduct $17,259 from $132,040.62, it leaves $114,781.62. They never did find any detached or other pay rolls that accounted for that difference, did they?

"Mr. MYERS. Well, as I say, they would just tell me of items that they did not include. They did not prove it to me."

And although 3 years have passed away, that $114,781.62 has never been accounted for; and

Whereas prior to February 16, 1938, another report was made by Auditors Brown and Jones, and criticisms of memorandum of employment, unsigned by the superintendent; time slips; purchases of gasoline and oil; travel vouchers; purchase of office furniture; and other matters were listed; and

Whereas on January 19, 1939, Mr. Myers again made an examination in which many things were criticized; and

Whereas the testimony of Mr. Myers, auditor, as taken by Senator MCKELLAR, found on pages 4324 to 4338, inclusive, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 17, 1939, shows a distressing condition in the park at the time of the second examination; and

Whereas A. E. Demaray, Assistant Director of the National Park Service, on May 21, 1937, wrote to Mr. J. Ross Eakin a letter calling his attention to Mr. Myers' report, from which letter the following excerpts are taken:

(1) "The Emergency Conservation Work monthly progress and cost report was not in agreement with the allotment ledgers. A discrepancy of approximately $132,000 was reported to exist."

(2) "Your procurement procedure has not conformed with Emergency Conservation Work regulations."

(3) "More than $1,000,000 have been allotted to your park from Emergency Conservation Work funds, and judging from the auditors' report, there has been extreme laxity in control of funds, and the purchasing and contracting has not been properly supervised."

(4) "The auditors reported other open-market purchases in amounts exceeding the statutory limitations for which payments have not been made because competitive bids were not secured or contracts prepared."

(5) "Purchase orders for motor oil have been issued in the open market and spark plugs and automotive repair parts have not been purchased under the General Schedule of Supplies contracts."

(6) "In another instance, in which three equally low and acceptable bids were received, the award was made to the concern nearest the park instead of by drawing lots."

(7) "When the auditors arrived at the park, the property records were in very poor shape and indicated extreme negligence on the part of the employees who were responsible for the maintenance of the records"; and

Whereas there appears a letter from J. Ross Eakin, superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, to the Assistant Director of the National Park Service, Mr. A. E. Demaray, dated June 2, 1937, in which he says:

(1) "We heartily regret your apparent consternation in receiving the unsatisfactory report, but believe you will understand from this explanation that the records were not as irregular and the violations as numerous as portended in the report."

(2) "There were also extenuating circumstances in many instances which were explained to the auditors, but from their abusive attitude and threats at times when the audit was trying, it was expected that no quarter would be given, and sufficient justification for their extended visit would be recorded."

(3) "It will be a difficult matter to clear up the FD570 and FD870, unliquidated encumbrances."

(4) "Our failure to encumber packing, handling, and transportation charges on Government shipping tickets was due to ignorance on our part."

(5) "There were not numerous instances where travel orders were issued and reimbursement of per diem claimed by various employees who would leave their official headquarters between 7 and 10 a. m. in the morning for points within the park nearby and return to their official headquarters early in the evening."

(6) "As to open-market purchases reported by the auditors in amounts exceeding the statutory limitation for which payments have not been made because competitive bids were not secured or contracts prepared, we fail to find any outstanding on our books."

(7) "Your reference to the trade-in of tires and tubes under contract No. 1-23p-756 E. C. W. has been noted, and there will not be a repetition of this irregularity."

(8) "The property records were in poor condition, and are not correct as yet."

(9) "In conclusion, I desire to state that in my many years' experience as superintendent never has an auditor come into my park with the supercritical attitude of Messrs. Myers and Douglas. Helpfulness should have been their first objective, but it was secondary to criticism. The most of their criticism could have been covered by a simple statement that our system was not in line with the newly approved accounting system, of which we had not the slightest inkling until they arrived. This statement would have obviated the necessity of a 78-page report. Their attitude and manner of speaking were most objectionable. I venture the assertion that few if any chief clerks in the Service could have done better than Chief Clerk Ray under the circumstances"; and

Whereas from the above closing paragraph of the letter it will be seen that Eakin undertook himself to condone his own mismanagement, waste, destruction, and probable dishonesty by abusing the auditors, who did their duty and showed the facts, and that not only their attitude and manner were objectionable to Eakin, but their report—in which hundreds of charges of every kind and description, including an unaccounted-for sum of at least $114,000 were made against him—must have been objectionable to him also; and

Whereas, in order to curry favor with the Department of the Interior, the said Eakin has signed an affidavit stating that he voted for President Roosevelt in the November 1936 election, as follows:

"It is my understanding that it has been claimed that in the 1936 general election I voted for Landon for President. This is untrue, as I voted for President Roosevelt.

"I had heard rumors from a source which I do not remember that my ballot was to be checked to see for whom I voted. I marked my ballot, laid it on top of the ballot box, turned around, and walked from the room. Any ballot voted for Mr. Landon was certainly not the ballot I marked"; and

Whereas D. Neal Adams, Clarence C. Corpening, and J. Mayes have made affidavits that they were election officers in the November 1936 election, and after the election saw the ballot of the said J. Ross Eakin which he marked not for President Roosevelt but for Mr. Landon, which, if true, shows that the said J. Ross Eakin falsified in such above-quoted affidavit for the purpose of currying favor with the Department of the Interior: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, three of the majority party and two of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to examine into all the facts concerning these reports and references to the report, and to examine the auditors and the said J. Ross Eakin, and to examine the three affiants, Mayes, Corpening, and Adams, and to investigate other matters connected with the management of the said Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The committee shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the next session.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I move that, on page 12, line 1, the language reading "a committee of five Senators", and so forth, down to the name "Senate" in line 3 shall be stricken out and in lieu thereof shall be inserted the words, "The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any subcommittee thereof."

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are some amendments of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys which I should like to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 4, after the word "concerning", it is proposed to strike "these reports and references to the report, and to examine the auditors and the said" and insert "the conduct and administration of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 7, after the name "Eakin", it is proposed to strike out "and to examine the three affiants, Mayes, Corpening, and Adams, and to investigate other matters connected with the management of the said" and insert "as superintendent of the said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 10, after the word "Park", it is proposed to insert:

The committee shall also examine into all the facts concerning the ballot of the said J. Ross Eakin in the November 1936 election, and especially concerning the conflicting affidavits of the said J. Ross Eakin and the three election officials, Mayes, Corpening, and Adams, and whether any of them committeed any illegal act in regard thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys or any subcommittee thereof is authorized and directed to examine into all the facts concerning the conduct and administration of J. Ross Eakin, as superintendent of the said Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The committee shall also examine into all the facts concerning the ballot of the said J. Ross Eakin in the November 1936 election, and especially concerning the conflicting affidavits of the said J. Ross Eakin and the three election officials Mayes, Corpening, and Adams, and whether any of them committed any illegal act in regard thereto. The committee shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the next session.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The preamble was amended so as to read:

Whereas a resolution has been filed making charges against J. Ross Eakin as to his conduct and administration as superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park: Now, therefore, be it

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

DECORATION OF GEORGE J. FRANK

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2465) to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to George J. Frank, which was read, as follows:

That the President is hereby authorized to cause the recommendation for the award of a decoration to George J. Frank, formerly a bugler, Company K, Thirtieth Regiment United States Infantry, for distinguished conduct during the German offensive at the Marne River on July 15, 1918, to be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and such award made to Frank as his said conduct merits.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rather reluctantly invite attention to the action of the War Department and the Secretary of War expressing opposition to the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Those of us who served in the World War are pretty definitely of the opinion, I am sure, that one of the most difficult things to do was to award decorations to those who were entitled to them. The reason is perfectly obvious. In the first place, the individual soldier may perform some act of heroism, but it is very infrequent that his officers are in the vicinity where the act is performed. Oftentimes not even lieutenants are in the vicinity where the act is performed, particularly if an advance has been going on for some time. This explains why frequently soldiers perform some outstanding act of heroism entitling them to a decoration which they do not receive.

In the particular case before us, the captain of the company in which Mr. Frank served was killed in action at Chateau Thierry, but before he was killed, being familiar with the services of Mr. Frank, he made the remark to other officers that he intended to recommend him for a decoration. In my judgment, if the captain of the company had lived, and if the man had been recommended by the captain, he would have received his decoration. But, unfortunately, not many hours afterward the captain of the company was killed, after this man—who did not serve in any outfit with which I was connected—had performed an outstanding feat of heroism. The other officers in his command, the major of the battalion and various others on the spot, have made affidavits, which appear in the record, testifying to the act performed by Mr. Frank and asking that he be awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

It so happened that the reason why he was not given the Distinguished Service Cross during the war was, as I have stated, that his commanding officer, who was familiar with his act of heroism, was killed, and the haste of battle action and the aftermath frequently terminate the opportunity for the recognition of many fine services. In this case, however, some time afterward some of the friends of this man who were familiar with the service he had rendered recommended his decoration and assembled the affidavits now in the record.

As one who had a very small part in the World War, but some little first-hand information, I am of the opinion that there are probably many cases of deserving men who would have been decorated except for the fact that those who were immediately superior to them were wounded or were killed, and in the natural confusion of battle, and as a result of death, oftentimes, many of the soldiers did not receive the decorations they otherwise would have been granted.

The testimony which appears in the record, testimony from the colonel, testimony from the major, testimony from the lieutenant, testimony from the sergeant, and testimony the captain who commanded the outfit had stated that he intended to recommend Mr. Frank for a decoration, I think ought to be pretty conclusive evidence that he is entitled to the decoration.

There is no dispute about the act Mr. Frank performed. The point is that after all these years it is natural to ask, "Why did he not get the decoration at the time?" I remember talking to a division commander 5 years after the war who made this statement, "If I had my time to go over again there are 20 or 30 men I would recommend for the Distinguished Service Cross, but I put such a high value on that cross that I leaned over backward. However, when I saw what was done in some other outfits, I felt that I had been unfair to many of the men in my command." Each division had a different standard.

All I am appealing for is justice to a man who risked his life at Chateau-Thierry to carry over a fire-swept terrain a message which was of great and vital importance to those engaged in that conflict, whose company commander appreciated then and there the outstanding service of the man, and said, "I am going to recommend him for the Distinguished Service Cross."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree entirely with what the Senator has stated, and there are probably thousands of such deserving cases.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is a fact.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me there should be a general statute enacted allowing a reopening of those questions. I am familiar with one case, that of a sergeant, who deliberately risked his life—and his action later resulted in his death—by taking off his gas mask at Chateau-Thierry and giving it to a younger man. His company commander recommended that he be awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, but unfortunately his recommendation was lost. I had the affidavit of the company commander after the performance of this act of heroism resulting in the death of this man, and I have been trying to get him the Distinguished Service Cross posthumously. I am happy to say that the measure providing for the decoration finally passed Congress and is before the President for his signature.

The case cited by the Senator from Maryland and many other cases which have fallen under my observation lead me to say that there should be a general act passed giving the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy authority to reopen such cases instead of passing a private bill through Congress in each particular case.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am in complete agreement with the Senator from Missouri, but whether it would be wise to reopen the cases entirely is a question which should be studied pretty thoroughly. However, when we can get affidavits from a man's colonel, and his major, and his lieutenant, and from enlisted men, and also the evidence that the man's captain stated that he was going to recommend him, and there is no dispute about the act, it seems to me he ought to be given every consideration. It is not as if he were coming in with flimsy evidence. It is not as if his company commander had lived and now was asked, "Why did you not recommend him then?" The fact is that the company commander stated at the time, "I am going to recommend Bugler Frank for the Distinguished Service Cross for what he has done." Shortly afterward the company commander was killed, and because the company commander was killed this man was never recommended. But if the company commander had lived he would have been recommended and probably would have received the decoration.

I am very familiar with this case. The Committee on Military Affairs has gone into it thoroughly. The affidavits are from Regular Army people, as well as others, who substantiate all the statements I have made. I hope this man may receive justice and the commendation from a great government, to which, it seems to me, he is clearly entitled.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senators will recognize the fact that in the hasty disposition of cases we have before us merely the reports of the committees, and those reports usually carry the recommendations or views of the various departments. It is therefore impossible always to weigh justly and accurately the merits of cases which are presented by bills.

The bill under consideration I did not have an opportunity to examine, but I hastily looked at the report of the Secretary of War, which is adverse to the enactment of the bill. In view of the explanation which has been made by the Senator from Maryland, it seems to me that this man is entitled to the relief which the bill gives him.

I was interested in the observations made by the Senator from Missouri. I think they deserve consideration, and I hope that the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, perhaps conjointly, or separately, will give attention to this question, with a view to providing some fair and equitable method of meeting the various requirements which may be made to grant recognition of acts of distinguished service in our military activities.

I have no objection to the bill before us. Indeed, I think it should be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the consideration of recommendation of an award of a decoration to George J. Frank for distinguished service."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in order to make the RECORD complete, I make the additional observation, that if this bill shall pass the Congress and go to the President, the War Department will in all likelihood be consulted, and unless a fairly preponderant case is made out in line with what I have stated, the President will probably veto the bill. So that there is still one more court of last resort, if there has been any overpainting of this man's record.

PARK FIELD MILITARY RESERVATION, TENN.

The bill (H. R. 3364) to transfer the control and jurisdiction of the Park Field Military Reservation, Shelby County, Tenn., from the War Department to the Department of Agriculture, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. ROBERT E. COUGHLIN

The bill (H. R. 4617) for the relief of Capt. Robert E. Coughlin was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE COINS

The bill (S. 101) to regulate the issuance of commemorative coins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill. In the absence of explanation, let it go over.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I shall be very glad, in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], to make an explanation of the bill, if the Senator will withhold his objection.

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to have an explanation.

Mr. ADAMS. The Committee on Banking and Currency have been confronted for several years with a flood of commemorative coin bills. The President of the United States has written saying the enactment of such measures was interfering very greatly with the currency operations, opening the currency to continual changes. The Secretary of the Treasury has written us in regard to the matter, and the Committee on Banking and Currency has been endeavoring to restrain the undue issuance of such coins. This bill attempts to regulate and to put restrictions upon the issuance of such coins and to provide for the appointment of a commission—not a senatorial commission—to which coin bills would be referred in order to secure approval of the contention that there was a genuine national historical event to be commemorated.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would seem to me clearly to be a meritorious measure, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 101) to regulate the issuance of commemorative coins, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "President", to strike out the comma and the following: "one from the American Historical Association, one from the Library of Congress, one from the Smithsonian Institution, one from the National Geographic Society, and one from the American Numismatic Association.", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a Commemorative Coin Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") to be composed of five commissioners to be appointed by the President. The commissioners first appointed under this act shall hold office for the terms of 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 years, respectively, from the date of enactment of this act, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years; except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 14, after the word "shall", to strike out "be submitted to the Commission for its approval" and to insert "be first submitted"; in line 15, after the word "which", to strike out "it was referred" and to insert "such bills were referred, to the Commission for its approval.'"; and in line 23, after the words "taken on it.", to strike out "In no case shall more than 10 such bills be approved by the Commission during any one session of the Congress."; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. All bills introduced in either House of Congress providing for the issuance of a commemorative coin shall be first submitted, by the Senate or House committee to which such bills were referred, to the Commission for its approval. In determining whether any such bill shall be approved, the Commission shall take into consideration the national importance of the event to be commemorated. In the event the Commission disapproves any such bill pending before any such committee of the Senate or House because the event to be commemorated is not of sufficient national importance, no further action shall be taken on it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 8, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "(3) the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for such coinage;" and to insert "(3)"; in line 13, after the word "act", to strike out "(5)" and to insert "(4)"; in line 15, after the word "value", to strike out "(6)" and to insert "(5)"; in line 16, after the word "time", to strike out "(7)" and to insert "(6)"; in line 17, after the word "par", to strike out "or at a premium by the association, committee, or other organization to whom they are issued and that the net proceeds be used by such association, committee, or other organization in defraying the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of such event", and to insert "by the Secretary of the Treasury through such agencies as he may designate"; and in line 23, after the word "and", to strike out "(8)" and to insert "(7)", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. No such bill shall be approved by the Commission unless it provides that (1) the coins authorized to be issued shall be coined at one mint of the United States, to be designated by the Director of the Mint; (2) such coins shall be silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and composition and of a special appropriate single design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; (3) such coins shall bear the date of the year in which they are authorized and shall all be issued within 1 year from the date of enactment of the authorizing act; (4) such coins shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value; (5) not less than 25,000 such coins shall be issued at any one time; (6) such coins may be disposed of at par by the Secretary of the Treasury through such agencies as he may designate; and (7) all laws in force on the date of enactment of the authorizing act relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention or debasement or counterfeiting, for the security of the coins, or for any other purposes, whether such laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage authorized in such act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to old-age assistance was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that is a very important measure.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, may I say a word or two in connection with the joint resolution? The joint resolution provides for the adoption of a constitutional amendment. The question has been afforded a considerable amount of discussion. Every speech we have heard made on the floor of the Senate regarding old-age assistance and old-age pensions has consistently verified the fact that we ought to provide a permanent department of the Government to deal with the question. The method provided by the joint resolution is practically the only way to handle the situation.

I wish to give notice that on Thursday, as soon after the convening of the Senate as possible, I shall ask unanimous consent to discuss this particular amendment. I will not insist on the consideration of the measure at this time. There are others who are very much interested in the amendment and will desire to speak at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection, the joint resolution will be passed over.

FEDERAL AID TO STATE HOMES FOR DISABLED VETERANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4647) to increase the amount of Federal aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 24, sec. 134), is amended by striking out in the first paragraph thereof "$120 per annum" and inserting in lieu thereof "$240 per annum."

SEC. 2. The amendment made by this act shall apply to payments with respect to the care given to disabled soldiers and sailors on and after the first day of the month next following the month during which this act is enacted: Provided, That said payments shall be made regardless of whether said veteran may be receiving domiciliary care or hospitalization in said home and the appropriations of the Veterans' Administration for medical, hospital, and domiciliary care shall be available for this purpose: Provided further, That no payment to a State or Territory under this act shall be made for any period prior to the date upon which the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs determines that the veteran on whose account such payment is requested is eligible for such care in a Veterans' Administration facility.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may he have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. The bill is a House bill, and was considered by the Senate Committee on Finance and reported favorably by that committee.

In 1888 the Federal Government agreed to pay to the several States that maintain homes for disabled veterans a certain percentage of the cost of domiciling and hospitalizing them. The amount agreed upon at that time was 33⅓ cents per veteran. Twenty-eight States are maintaining such homes. The States undertook the responsibility before the Federal Government undertook the obligation or responsibility which it assumed. The portion of payment of the cost agreed to be made by the Government at that time has never been increased. The pending measure would increase the Government's contribution so as to maintain the same yardstick which prevailed in 1888 and would involve an additional expense of $750,000, distributed to the several States which have maintained these homes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be annually?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; yearly. The alternative would be to close these homes and let the Federal Government take care of all the veterans as is now being done with the facilities it has.

If that were brought about, and the States should decide to transfer these veterans to Federal homes, there would be the expense of building, or maintaining, or leasing, or purchasing the present State homes, and also an additional cost of $750,000. In other words, if the 6,000 disabled veterans now maintained in these homes were transferred to the Federal Government, the Federal Government would have to pay all that it is paying now to the States and the amount of the increase in this bill and $750,000 in addition.

The committee heard General Hines, of the Veterans' Administration, and the amendments which are added to the act are in conformity with suggestions made by him in the event the committee reported the bill favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 322 OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2694) amending section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is further amended by adding a new subsection, as follows:

"(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the determinations under subsection (c) may be proclaimed at any time prior to September 15, the result of the referendum under subsection (d) may be proclaimed at any time prior to October 10, and the marketing percentage under subsection (b) shall be 100 percent."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this bill is an amendment to section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended. There are two points involved in the amendment. Under section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, when the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics which he may have before him, finds that the total supply of corn in any one calendar year is 10 percent above the normal, he has the power under the law to determine and proclaim quotas.

The first part of the amendment merely defers the time 30 days when he has the right to make that determination. At the present time it is September 1, and this amendment would merely defer the time until October 1. That is point No. 1.

Point No. 2 deals in this amendment with the market percentage. Under the present law, as I understand it, if a farmer out in my section of the State is allotted 100 acres for the purpose of producing corn, if marketing quotas are declared by the Secretary of Agriculture, there will be a certain amount of that acreage which he would be able to dispose of so far as production is concerned, and a certain amount that he would be compelled to store. In other words, if he had 100 acres allotted to him, for example his marketing percentage might permit him to dispose of what he produced on 90 acres of that farm and what he produced on 10 acres he would be compelled to place under seal in storage.

Under the amendment now before the Senate the farmer, after he receives his corn-acreage allotment, would not be compelled to store any corn whatsoever. In other words, the marketing percentage is increased to 100. That, Mr. President, in my opinion, is a very constructive and commendable amendment, because it eliminates a great deal of confusion and chaos which has existed out in the Corn Belt country from which I come, and it would eliminate all the confusion that exists in the administration of the act insofar as the storage part is concerned.

The cooperating farmer under this amendment would be able to dispose of all the corn that he produced on the acres that would be allotted to him by the Secretary of Agriculture, whether it was an average or normal yield, or whether it was beyond an average or normal yield. In other words, he would not have to store a single bushel of corn.

In addition to that there are certain exceptions now under the statute to which this would apply. For instance, to those who plant less than 10 acres, where there is an exception of about 300 bushels, and those who obtain a total crop which does not exceed the normal yield of their corn allotment. Mr. President, if the total yield of the noncooperator is more than the normal yield he will be subject to the storage or penalty provisions. For example, if A is a noncooperator in the program and is allotted 100 acres, and the normal yield on that 100 acres is 30 bushels to the acre, he could dispose of 3,000 bushels of corn without being subject to any penalty, but in the event that A planted more than his allotted amount, for instance 130 acres—30 acres over his allotment—and that 130 acres yielded, we will say, 3,900 bushels instead of the 3,000 bushels, he would be compelled under the amendment and under the present law, to seal 900 bushels of that corn, assuming that the normal yield is 30 bushels per acre, or in the alternative, pay the penalty of 15 cents per bushel on the surplus over 3,000 bushels.

Mr. President, that is the practical effect of the amendment.

In my opinion this amendment will facilitate the administration of the program. It will be more just and more equitable and more fair, and less expensive, and it will also eliminate a tremendous amount of confusion and chaos which has existed in the corn and wheat producing commercial areas of the country.

I should also like to advise the Senate that the bill following No. 2695 is a bill affecting the marketing percentage of wheat. What I have said about corn is equally applicable to wheat under the last-mentioned amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. In the case of wheat, may a cooperating farmer who has complied with the entire wheat program sell his actual production when a marketing quota has been put into effect?

Mr. LUCAS. Under the provisions of the bill, when the wheat farmer has been given a quota or an acreage allotment the marketing percentage would be increased to 100, which would entitle the wheat farmer to dispose of every bushel of wheat raised upon the acres allotted to him, without paying any penalty whatsoever. He would not be required to store a single bushel of wheat. It seems to me that is a very fine provision, and one in which the farmers are vitally interested from the standpoint of simplifying the whole program, should the farmers ever vote in a referendum for marketing quotas.

Mr. HATCH. In my opinion, it is not only a fine provision, but it is an amendment to the present act which is absolutely required if the program is to be successful.

Mr. LUCAS. It is in line with what has been done for the farmers producing cotton. In looking over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning, I noticed that the House of Representatives yesterday passed a similar measure when the Consent Calendar was called.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the statement made by the Senator warrants the amendments to which he has referred; but he will pardon me if I say that his statements, as I interpret them, are indicative of the control, if not regimentation, by the Federal Government, of the farmers of the United States.

Undoubtedly there is a growing tendency upon the part of the National Government and its bureaus and agencies to exercise control over individuals, and the private activities of individuals. Many persons believe that the encroachments of the Federal Government and the regimentation policies of officials of the Government, particularly in the fields of agriculture, are reminiscent of the policies of Hitler. In my opinion, the Federal Government is superimposing upon the farmers as well as upon industry unjust and unwise regulations. Individual initiative is being destroyed, and the effects upon our economic life have been most unfortunate, and a continuation of the policies of the Government will have more serious economic and industrial results.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I believe I understand the theory of Hitler regimentation. If I thought for one moment that the Senator's conclusions were correct, insofar as concerns regimenting the farmer to the point where he would become "Hitlerized," so to speak, I would be on my feet opposing such legislation rather than favoring an amendment. I will say to the Senator that, so far as the farmer is concerned, the matter is entirely voluntary. He may either come in or stay out of the program. He has that option.

If the farmer who is allotted 100 acres and wishes to avoid the program by planting more, that is his privilege. Obviously he will not receive any benefits from the Soil Conservation Act, parity payments, or the full amount of the benefit of the loans. If the Senator believes, because of those advantages, that the Government is coercing him to the extent that he is being regimented, of course, the Senator from Illinois can do little about it; but I deny the charge or the implication, and there is no farmer that I know who believes that Old World regimentation is being practiced upon him.

I will say further to the Senator that the farmer in my section of the country is the last individual who will submit to the regimentation about which the Senator from Utah is talking.

Mr. KING. I think the last statement made by the Senator is quite accurate. The farmers of the United States have been more or less individualists. They have been the backbone of our country, and have resisted encroachments of the Federal Government. However, I feel constrained to say that under the agricultural acts which have been passed, and are the policies of the present Secretary of Agriculture, the conditions of the farmers of the United States are worse than they have been in the past. As the Senator states, there has been confusion; and, in my opinion, the policies of the administration have contributed to the demoralization of the agricultural industry and to the impoverishment of the farmers of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah one question, knowing his spirit of fairness. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the regulation of farmers in the United States is far harsher than that under Hitler?

Mr. KING. No; I did not go so far in my statement. I intended to say that the regulations of the Department of Agriculture are reminiscent of Hitlerism.

Mr. HATCH. I misunderstood the Senator. I am sure he would not want an extreme statement of that sort in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. I am willing to state that in my opinion the policies pursued by the Department of Agriculture have done much to injure the farmers and subject them to a harsh rule to which, it seems to me, independent people under a democratic form of government would not desire to submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARKETING PERCENTAGES UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

The bill (S. 2695) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, relative to marketing percentages, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That part III of subtitle B of title III of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, is further amended by adding the following new section:

"SEC. 340. Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, the marketing percentage under section 335 shall be 100 percent and only the farmer who markets wheat in excess of the normal or the actual production of the farm acreage allotment shall be subject to penalty under the provisions of section 339. Any farmer who stores, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, an amount of wheat which is less than the amount subject to penalty, shall be presumed to have marketed the amount of such wheat subject to penalty which is not so stored. In the case of wheat, 'market' includes the disposition of wheat by feeding (in any form) to poultry or livestock which, or the products of which, are sold, bartered, or exchanged, or are to be so disposed of."

Mr. GEORGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to recur to Calendar No. 761, Senate bill 2694, and Calendar No. 762, Senate bill 2695, to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. There seem to be two somewhat similar bills on the calendar. I should like to have some explanation of the purpose of the bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] explained Calendar No. 761, Senate bill 2694.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not hear the explanation. Will the Senator from Illinois be good enough to indicate the purpose of the bills?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I went into some detail in the explanation of the bills, but I shall be very happy again to explain them for the benefit of the Senator from Georgia.

Senate bill 2694 amends section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, which deals with farm marketing quotas. There are two provisions in the proposed amendment. Under section 322 the Secretary in any calendar year may determine from the available statistics before him that farm-marketing quotas are necessary, provided he finds from the statistics that the total corn crop produced that year will exceed the normal supply by 10 percent. At the present time under that section the Secretary makes his proclamation not later than August 15. The first part of the proposed amendment would merely give him the right to defer making that proclamation for 30 days, until September 15. That is point No. 1.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not care to make any objection to the bills, but I wish to ascertain what the two bills would accomplish.

Mr. LUCAS. I have now related to the Senator from Georgia what I conceive to be point No. 1. The first provision of the amendment merely gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to defer making his proclamation for 30 days, to determine whether or not quotas on corn shall go into effect.

Point No. 2 deals with the marketing percentage. As I understand, under the present law, a marketing percentage is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in the event the quotas are called. For example, if farmer A has an allotment of 100 acres he might be compelled under marketing quotas to dispose of the corn raised on 90 acres of the 100, and to store the corn from the 10 acres. That is the provision of the present act. Under the provisions of the proposed amendment the percentage is marked up to 100. In other words, after the cooperating farmer receives his acreage allotment, he will be able to dispose in the market of every bushel of corn produced on the acres allotted to him without any penalty attached or without storing any portion of it. That is the primary purpose. The cotton farmer enjoys the same privilege at the present time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as I understand, the two bills have been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have been passed.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not ask at this time for reconsideration of the votes by which they were passed. However, I desire to look into the matter, and when the calendar shall have been concluded I may submit a request.

PRACTICE OF PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1128) to regulate the practice of professional engineering and creating a board for licensure of professional engineers in and for the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the committee was in section 2, on page 2, line 19, after the word "construction", to strike out "or operation"; on page 3, line 3, after the word "professional", to strike out "engineering," and insert "engineering;"; in line 5, after the word "practice", to insert "when the operators are duly licensed under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to regulate steam engineering in the District of Columbia', approved February 28, 1887, and as amended."; and at the beginning of line 14, to strike out "construction, or operation" and insert "or construction", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The term "professional engineer" as used in this act shall mean a person who is qualified by reason of his knowledge of mathematics, the physical sciences, and the principles of engineering, acquired by professional education and practical experience, to engage in the practice of professional engineering as hereinafter defined.

The practice of professional engineering within the meaning and intent of this act includes any professional service, such as consultation, investigation, evaluation, planning, design, or responsible supervision of construction, in connection with any public or private utilities, structures, buildings, machines, equipment, processes, works, or projects, wherein the public welfare, or the safeguarding of life, health, or property is concerned or involved, when such professional service requires the application of engineering principles and data. The execution, as a contractor, of work designed by others, or the supervision of the construction of such work as a foreman or superintendent shall not be deemed to be practice of professional engineering; nor shall the operation or maintenance of boilers, machinery, or equipment be deemed to be such practice, when the operators are duly licensed under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate steam engineering in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1887, and as amended.

The term "board" as used in this act shall mean the board for licensure of professional engineers provided for by this act.

The term "responsible charge" as used in this act shall mean the control and direction of the investigation, design, or construction of engineering work requiring initiative, professional skill, and independent judgment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, on page 6, line 6, after the word "Chemical", to insert "ceramic", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. The board shall have the power to classify applicants into the respective branch or branches of engineering, in which said applicants show proper qualifications, as follows: Chemical, ceramic, civil, electrical, mechanical, radio, structural, and such other branches of engineering as the board may consider subject to this act.

The board shall have the power to make all bylaws and rules, not inconsistent with the laws of the District of Columbia, which may be reasonably necessary for the proper performance of its duties and the regulations of the proceedings before it. The board shall adopt and have an official seal. Any member of the board may administer oaths to witnesses appearing before the board. In carrying into effect the provisions of this act, the board may subpena witnesses and compel their attendance, and also may require the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence in a case involving the revocation of a license or practicing or offering to practice without a license. If any witness having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then in that event any member of the board may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or one of the justices thereof and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to said summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, on page 10, line 6, after the word "development.", to insert "The required qualifications of active practice shall be in the branch or branches of engineering for which the applicant is applying for a license.", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. The board shall make an investigation of the character, reputation, and ability of each applicant and a certificate of license as a professional engineer shall be issued only to persons of good character and reputation and having the following qualifications:

(a) Graduation from an approved engineering curriculum of at least 4 years in an accredited school or college (such graduation shall be accepted in lieu of an examination in the fundamentals of engineering) and a specific record of an additional 4 years of active practice in engineering work of a character satisfactory to the board and indicating that the applicant is competent to practice engineering (in counting years of experience, the board at its discretion may give credit, not in excess of 1 year, for satisfactory graduate study in engineering); or

(b) Successfully passing an examination designed to show knowledge and skill approximating that attained through graduation from an accredited 4-year engineering curriculum and at least 8 years of active practice in engineering work, of a character satisfactory to the board and indicating that the applicant is competent to practice engineering; or

(c) At least 12 years of active practice in engineering work of a character satisfactory to the board, and indicating that the applicant is competent to practice engineering and has had responsible charge of important engineering work for at least 5 years; and provided applicant is not less than 35 years of age.

An accredited school or college of engineering under this act shall be one whose curriculum has been investigated and accredited by the board, but the board, in its discretion, may accept as an accredited school or college of engineering under this act one whose curriculum has been accredited by the Engineers' Council for Professional Development. The required qualifications of active practice shall be in the branch or branches of engineering for which the applicant is applying for a license.

In considering the qualifications of the applicant, engineering teaching may be construed as engineering experience. Graduation in a curriculum other than engineering, or graduation in a curriculum of a nonaccredited engineering school or college may be considered as equivalent to 2 years of experience. The satisfactory completion of each year in an accredited school or college of engineering shall be considered as equivalent to 1 year of active practice. Any person having the necessary qualifications prescribed in this act to entitle him to a license shall be eligible for such license though he may not be practicing his profession at the time of making his application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, on page 14, line 23, after "(c)", to strike out "An" and insert "A consulting engineer, an"; and on page 16, after line 7, to insert "(h) A patent attorney registered to practice before the United States Patent Office."; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 19. The following persons shall be exempt from the provisions of this act:

(a) A person, not a resident of and having no established place of business in the District of Columbia, or one who has recently become a resident thereof, practicing or offering to practice herein professional engineering, when such practice does not exceed in the aggregate more than 30 days in any calendar year: Provided, That such person is legally qualified to practice the said profession in another jurisdiction. If such person shall have filed with the board an application for a license, the exemption shall continue for such time as the board requires for the consideration of such application.

(b) A subprofessional employee or a subordinate of a person holding a license under this act, or an employee of a person exempted by paragraph (a) of this section, provided his work is done under the direct responsibility, checking and supervision of a person holding a license under this act or a person exempted by paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) A consulting engineer, an officer or employee of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia while engaged solely in the practice of the profession of engineering for said Government.

(d) A person who practices engineering solely as an employee of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce, if such corporation is subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Federal Communications Commission, or as an employee of a public-service corporation, by rendering to such corporation engineering service in connection with its facilities which are subject to regulation by the Public Utilities Commisson of the District of Columbia: Provided, That such corporation employees as furnish advisory service to the public in connection with engineering matters shall not be exempt from the provisions of this act.

(e) A person authorized to use the title of architect or registered architect under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the examination and registration of architects and to regulate the practice of architecture in the District of Columbia," approved December 13, 1924, as amended.

Also a person making plans, specifications for, or supervising the erection, enlargement, or alteration of buildings: Provided, however, That on any such building wherein the contemplated expenditure for the completed building will exceed $30,000, a licensed professional engineer shall be employed for the engineering phases of the building.

(f) A person engaged in the practice of engineering on any work wherein the contemplated expenditure for the entire completed project does not exceed $5,000.

(g) A person engaged in connection with mining operations.

(h) A patent attorney registered to practice before the United States Patent Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 20, on page 16, line 12, after the word "without", to strike out "fee or"; and at the beginning of line 19 to insert "or with a nominal fee as determined by the board", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. The board may enter into agreements for reciprocity with the licensing agencies of other jurisdictions and grant without examination, if such reciprocal arrangements can be made, the privileges of the District of Columbia professional-engineering-license law to persons legally qualified to practice in other jurisdictions whose license requirements are acceptable to the board, giving full faith and credence to the acts of the authority by which they were qualified. When agreement for reciprocity without fee, or with a nominal fee as determined by the board, cannot be made, the fee for a reciprocal license shall be $25. The board may give consideration to certificates of qualification issued by the National Council of State Boards of Engineering Examiners, or of the National Bureau of Engineering Registration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 23. This act shall not be construed to prevent or affect the practice of any other legally recognized profession or trade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 24. If any section or sections of this act shall be declared unconstitutional or invalid, this shall not invalidate any other section of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1296) to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

PROHIBITION OF CREDIT PURCHASES OF BEER IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 5137) to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator withdraw his objection for a moment?

Mr. DANAHER. I will.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know whether the Senator wants time to look into the bill or whether he has already read it and is familiar with it; but the Committee on the District of Columbia, which considered the bill, came to the conclusion that its sole purpose was to try to stop an abuse in the selling of beer in the District of Columbia. Those who are interested in a more orderly marketing of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia favored this bill. It is not prohibitive or restrictive at all of the sale of beer; but it was found that some companies, in a competitive spirit, were extending credit for the purchase of beer to fly-by-night concerns to such an extent as to cast disrepute on the entire beer business. This bill is an attempt to do nothing more or less than to raise the tone, if such an expression may be employed in this connection, of the sale of beer in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DANAHER. The reason for my asking that the bill go over lies in the fact that I felt that a very comprehensive explanation of it ought to be submitted, together with such facts as justified the Committee on the District of Columbia in reporting the bill.

I know that in my State an effort was made by all the breweries to legislate this very type of restriction into the State law. The reason, obviously, is that they may utilize an arm of the Government to make in effect an ally of the Government in collecting their accounts.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. This bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I may say further to the Senator, that I happen to know, from an investigation, that this state of affairs has existed: Breweries have set men up in business and have completely financed them in order to compete with other breweries, until, in their desire to have more and more outlets for the sale of beer, frequently through fly-by-night concerns, they have pulled down the standard of every man in the beer business who wants to comply with the law.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Right there is where the vice should be attacked. I submit if the Senator would undertake to amend the existing liquor control act of the District in such particulars as would forbid brewers to have an interest in any such outlets, if he would undertake to restrict retailers, a better result would be accomplished.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is just exactly what the Senator from Maryland is now trying to do.

Mr. DANAHER. No; I submit that what the Senator is doing is making all sales of beer depend on a cash basis. Why should we not do that for the milk dealers? Why should we not do it for all the others engaged in business? Why should we not make it apply to the charge accounts of Woodward & Lothrop and other large stores?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think history makes it unnecessary for me to answer the Senator's question. I do not have any idea that there will be an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the sale of milk, but I have lived to see the day when there was an amendment prohibiting the sale of beer. Beer is something that cannot be sold promiscuously as can milk or shoes or other commodities. A license is charged those who sell beer and the business is surrounded with all kinds of rules, which is not true in the case of other commodities. The rules and restrictions apply, of course, to the sale of all alcoholic drinks. I have a feeling that what brought on national prohibition was not so much whisky and beer themselves but the manner in which whisky and beer were sold. We have laws that minors may not drink whisky and beer; but minors may drink milk. I am merely suggesting that the committee felt and the District of Columbia Commissioners all felt that this bill, if passed, would raise the tone of the particular business insofar as its retail side is concerned.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator realize that the measure in which he is interested, applicable as it is solely to retailers of beer, does not begin to reach the vice? Why does it not reach the distributors? Why does it not reach the holders of retail licenses referred to in section 2 of the bill? The reason obviously is so that the brewers may still have an interest in outlets; so that they may still extend credit to distributors or wholesalers. There is no reason why the brewers should be able to have an interest in any such unit. I submit that the way to attack the vice—and I agree with the Senator that it is a vice to permit brewers to have an interest in these outlets—is to correct it at the source.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may be permitted to proceed. I think that we can very briefly conclude, and, perhaps, work out a satisfactory solution.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Connecticut can proceed in his own time. It was the time of the Senator from Maryland which had expired. And I am now speaking in the Senator's time.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may interrupt the Senator, I think he and I want to do the same thing. We do not want to impose any unfair restrictions, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, we want to throw safeguards around the outlets for alcoholic beverages that are sound and necessary.

I may say to the Senator that I believe, from the evidence adduced, it was clearly shown to the committee, as it was to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, that this bill would reach one of the evils. If the Senator wants to introduce another bill to reach some of the other evils, I shall not oppose it; I will help the Senator get it through. But if he will take my word for it, and the word of the District Commissioners, and, I believe, the unanimous opinion of the committee, we all feel that this bill will be one step in the right direction. I have no objection to going even further; but this was the way it came to us; we considered it on that basis; and I would not want to put some other provisions in the bill until we also considered the other angles in the committee.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I respectfully ask that the Senator permit this bill to go over, without taking a vote, and I will confer with him and will be happy to see if we can work it out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HOURS OF DUTY IN THE DISTRICT FIRE DEPARTMENT

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to provide that all cabs for hire in the District of Columbia be compelled to carry insurance for the protection of passengers, and for other purposes," approved June 29, 1938, is hereby amended by striking out the sentence reading as follows: "The Superintendent of Insurance of the District of Columbia shall be empowered to make all reasonable rules and regulations relating to the writing of taxicab insurance and shall be empowered to govern the maximum rates to be charged on such insurance", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "No such insurance company or corporate surety shall engage in or conduct the business of insuring or bonding taxicab risks, unless the Superintendent of Insurance shall find that the management of such company is capable, by experience or otherwise, of conducting such business in the public interest and unless such insurance company or corporate surety shall possess a certificate of approval issued by said Superintendent for such business. Every such insurance company or corporate surety shall have, and shall at all times maintain, adequate reserves for losses, unearned premiums, and all other liabilities. Be it enacted, etc., That any member of a duly organized State, county, or municipal peace unit of any State of the United States who enters the District of Columbia in fresh pursuit and continues within the said District in such fresh pursuit of a person in order to arrest him on the ground that he is believed to have committed a felony in such State shall have the same authority to arrest and hold such person in custody as has any member of any duly organized peace unit of the said District to arrest and hold in custody a person on the ground that he is believed to have committed a felony in the said District.

SEC. 2. If an arrest is made in the District of Columbia by an officer of another State in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of this act, he shall without unnecessary delay take the person arrested before a judge of the police court of the District of Columbia, or a United States commissioner for the District of Columbia, who shall conduct a hearing for the purpose of determining the lawfulness of the arrest. If the judge of the police court of the District of Columbia or the United States commissioner before whom the hearing is conducted determines that the arrest was lawful, he shall commit the person arrested to await for a reasonable time the issuance of an extradition warrant by the chief justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia. If the judge of the police court or the United States commissioner for the District of Columbia, before whom the hearing is held, determines that the arrest was unlawful he shall discharge the person arrested.

SEC. 3. Section 1 of this act shall not be construed so as to make unlawful any arrest in this District which would be otherwise lawful.

SEC. 4. The term "fresh pursuit" used in this act shall include fresh pursuit as defined by the common law, also the pursuit of a person who has committed a felony or one whom the pursuing officer has reasonable grounds to believe has committed a felony. It shall also include the pursuit of a person whom the pursuing officer has reasonable grounds to believe has committed a felony, although no felony has actually been committed, if there is reasonable ground for believing that a felony has been committed. "Fresh pursuit" as used herein shall not necessarily imply an instant pursuit, but pursuit without unreasonable delay.

SEC. 5. That if any part of this act is for any reason declared void, it is declared to be the intent of this act that such invalidity shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this act.

SEC. 6. That this act may be cited as the Uniform Act on Fresh Pursuit.

GEORGE H. TAYLOR

The bill (S. 2038) for the relief of George H. Taylor, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army George H. Taylor shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on February 4, 1908, as a private, Company L, Twelfth Regiment United States Infantry: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

RANK OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL IN THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 2354) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army for commanders of corps areas and foreign departments was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill is the same as House bill 7093, Calendar No. 849. The Chair takes the liberty of suggesting that if the measure is to be considered the House bill should be substituted for the Senate bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in response to the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], let me say that this bill is to authorize the rank and title of lieutenant general in the Regular Army for the major generals of the Regular Army specifically assigned by the Secretary of War to command the four Armies of the United States while serving as Army commanders.

The annual cost will be $2,000. This means a money allowance of $500 per officer per year in addition to pay and allowances. In the Navy the rank of vice admiral, which corresponds to that of lieutenant general in the Army, carries with it a like money allowance. This was authorized by the act of June 10, 1922. Certainly the Army ought to have officers of a similar rank with those in the Navy when performing similar functions.

The War Department has expressed the opinion that the congressicnal authorization in reestablishing this grade in times of peace is most desirable. The Department also has stated that efficient training and operation of our armed forces has necessitated the creation of the four Army commands.

I believe the Senator from Utah will agree that this is a meritorious bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would these peace-time lieutenant generals retire as lieutenant generals or as major generals?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand they would retire as major generals, although I am not certain about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think I shall object, because of my colleague's sponsorship of this bill, but I should like to be assured of that because I doubt very much the wisdom of this kind of legislation. Every officer of the Army wants to be a full general if he can, and, if he cannot, he wants to be a lieutenant general.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is only when these officers perform similar functions to those of vice admiral in the Navy that they will have this rank.

Mr. CONNALLY. The argument is that because the Navy does it the Army ought to do it. That does not make it right.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all, but, as a matter of vital military policy, it seems to me, the bill should be passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not object to the bill.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2264) for the relief of Frank P. Hoyt was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE S. GEER

The bill (S. 805) for the relief of George S. Geer was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George S. Geer, formerly a corporal, Company M, Forty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, 2 months' extra pay, in full satisfaction of his claim for benefits under the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting extra pay to officers and enlisted men of the United States Volunteers," approved January 12, 1899, as amended, such claim having been disallowed because said George S. Geer was discharged prior to the date of the general order authorizing the muster out of Volunteers serving in the Philippine Islands.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR PROPERTY DAMAGE AT EAST BRAINTREE, MASS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2513) for the relief of certain persons whose property was damaged or destroyed as a result of the crashes of two airplanes of the United States Navy at East Braintree, Mass., on April 4, 1939, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 2, line 20, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That no part of the said amounts herein authorized to be paid in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000" and insert "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry J. Madden, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $10,194.94; to Thomas Mallen, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $205; to Albert J. De Coste, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $695; to Mrs. Herbert E. Bess, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $124.50; to Anselm A. Bjornson, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $3,885.25; to Victoria B. Frazier, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $140.75; to the Mutual Federal Savings and Loan Association, of Whitman, Mass., the sum of $50; to Mrs. Edward R. Osborne, of East Braintree, Mass., the sum of $25; to the water department of the town of Braintree, Mass., the sum of $106.24; to William Mac Faun, of South Weymouth, Mass., the sum of $198.75; and to Mary Marshall, of South Braintree, Mass., the sum of $105; said sums to be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damage to the properties of the said Henry J. Madden, Thomas Mallen, Albert J. De Coste, Mrs. Herbert E. Bess, Anselm A. Bjornson, Victoria B. Frazier, Mutual Federal Savings and Loan Association, of Whitman, Mass., Mrs. Edward R. Osborne, water department, town of Braintree, William Mac Faun, and Mary Marshall, sustained on April 4, 1939, by reason of the crashes of two airplanes of the United States Navy at East Braintree, Mass.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BANKS BUSINESS COLLEGE

The bill (S. 1881) for the relief of Banks Business College was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? I notice that the Senator in charge of it is on the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, by the bill the Banks Business College of Philadelphia are seeking to recover expenses and damages for being ousted by the United States Government, the Draft Board, from a property which the college occupied at the beginning of the war.

There is not an explanation of the bill, although I thought one was attached to it. The only purpose of the bill is to permit the Banks Business College to bring their suit before the Court of Claims for the purpose of recovering. The bill does not give them anything, but authorizes a hearing before the Court of Claims. I am sorry the explanation of the bill does not seem to be attached to it; but that is the bill which was before me.

Mr. KING. I observe that back in Mr. Mellon's time the Treasury Department was of the opinion that the Treasury should not be required to pay out public funds on such a claim, and it was accordingly opposed to the passage of the bill. Apparently the bill is hoary with age. It has been before a department of the Government and received consideration, and back in 1926 an adverse report was submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. My understanding is that the bill grows out of a claim originating many, many years ago.

Mr. HUGHES. That is all very true; but we were not passing on the merits of the claim. It seemed to the committee that it was but fair that the claimants should have an opportunity to present their claim. It had not been presented, except to the Department. There was a dispute as to whether or not, under certain lease provisions, they could be dispossessed. They were dispossessed, however, and were required to move elsewhere. The bill simply gives the claimants an opportunity to present the matter to the Court of Claims, and the committee thought it was only fair that they should have that opportunity.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that to give them that opportunity would be a confession of waiver of the statute of limitations, or of any contributory negligence or laches upon the part of the claimants. So many of these hoary claims, going back to the French spoliation claims, are being presented to Congress that I confess that I look upon them with considerable distrust.

Mr. HUGHES. The bill is a waiver of the statute of limitations, of course, because otherwise it is too late for the claim to be presented; but the committee thought it was only fair that the claimants should be permitted to have a day in court, which they never have had.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator to consent that the bill be passed over. I should like to confer with the Treasury Department again in regard to the matter. I will join the Senator in bringing it up at an early date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PURCHASE OF BEER ON CREDIT IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the bill referred to by the Senator from Utah has been temporarily laid aside, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 765, House bill 5137. That is a bill which was recently objected to, and I believe we can pass it now without further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5137) to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to section 6, page 3, to read as follows:

This act shall expire July 30, 1940.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] would like to have the matter tried for a year, so that we may see whether it ought to be permanent rather than temporary legislation. I have no objection to putting it on trial for a year.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Has the Senator stated the correct section number? Should not the amendment be section 4 on page 2?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. It should be section 4, on page 2.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we take just a moment to find out what the bill is?

Mr. TYDINGS. We have been discussing it; but I will say to the Senator that it is a bill to take away the extreme extension of credit in the sale of retail beer in the District of Columbia, because the Commissioners and others feel that it has been abused, and all sorts of disreputable concerns have gotten into the beer-selling business. In an effort to get rid of that condition the District Commissioners and others, including the District Committee of the Senate, have agreed that the business ought to be put on a cash basis, so that it may be controlled to a greater extent than is possible under the extended credit system. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] suggests that we have a 1-year limitation provision added, so that if the plan is not successful it will automatically die; but if it is helpful we can reenact it at the end of the year, with such improvements as may be necessary. The bill is in the interest of better order in the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 35 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: "No holder of a retailer's license shall purchase beer on credit."

SEC. 2. (a) So much of section 18 of such act, as amended, as reads as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the sale of alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages and the reasonable extension of credit therefor by a manufacturer to a wholesale or retail licensee." is amended to read as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the sale of alcoholic and nonalcoholic beverages and the reasonable extension of credit therefor by a manufacturer to a wholesale or retail licensee if the purchase by the retailer would not constitute a violation of section 35."

(b) So much of section 19 of such act, as amended, as reads as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the reasonable extension of credit by a wholesaler for merchandise sold to a retail licensee for resale as herein permitted." is amended to read as follows: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit the reasonable extension of credit by a wholesaler for merchandise sold to a retail licensee for resale as herein permitted if the purchase by the retailer would not constitute a violation of section 35."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this act shall apply only to beer delivered after 10 days after the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 4. This act shall expire July 30, 1940.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE AND SHIPPING ACTS

The bill (S. 1960) to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not asking for the passage of the Senate bill at this time. The House has sent over a similar bill. I ask that the House bill be taken up at this time, and order that I may move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the text of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The bill (H. R. 6746) to amend certain provisions of the Merchant Marine and Shipping Acts, to further the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation from the Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. Now that we have the House bill before us, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the language of Senate bill 1960, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY's motion was, in lieu of the text of the House bill, to insert the following:

That the second paragraph of section 23 of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"All orders of the United States Maritime Commission, other than for the payment of money, made under this act, as amended or supplemented, shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified period of time, as shall be prescribed in the order, unless the same shall be suspended, or modified, or set aside by the Commission, or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction."

SEC. 2. The second paragraph of section 3 of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended, is amended by inserting before the last sentence of such paragraph a new sentence to read as follows: "At any hearing under this paragraph the burden of proof to show that the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice is just and reasonable shall be upon the carrier or carriers."

SEC. 3. (a) The first sentence of section 201 (e) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the Commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a director for each of not to exceed five divisions, a general counsel, a clerk to each member of the Commission, and not more than three assistants, a clerk to the general counsel, not more than a total of 20 naval architects or marine engineers, 20 special experts, 22 examiners, 12 attorneys, and 2 inspectors for each vessel at each shipyard at which vessels are being constructed by it or under its supervision."

(b) Such section, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Commission, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, may detail annually not to exceed 10 members of the personnel of the Commission for engineering, technical, or other scientific education and training at Government expense at institutions for scientific education and research, to enable such persons to acquire advanced and specialized knowledge or training of particular advantage to the Commission in carrying out its functions under this act."

SEC. 4. Section 201 (f) of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "Whenever any officer (not exceeding 5 in number at any time) of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard is detailed to the Commission, he shall receive from the Commission, for the period during which he is so detailed, such compensation as added to his pay and allowances as an officer in such Service will make his aggregate compensation equal to the pay and allowances he would receive if he were the incumbent of an office or position in such Service (or in the corresponding executive department), which, in the opinion of the Commission, involves the performance of work similar in importance, difficulty, and responsibility to that performed by him while detailed to the Commission."

SEC. 5. Section 216 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 216. (a) The Commission is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, to establish and maintain the United States Maritime Service as a voluntary organization for the training of citizens of the United States to serve as licensed and unlicensed personnel on American merchant vessels. The Commission is authorized to determine the number of persons to be enrolled in the said Service, to fix the rates of pay of such persons, and to prescribe such courses and periods of training as, in its discretion, is necessary to maintain a trained and efficient merchant marine personnel. The ranks, grades, and ratings for the personnel of the said Service shall be the same as are now or shall hereafter be prescribed for the personnel of the Coast Guard. The Commission is further authorized to employ as instructors in said Service, on a contract or fee basis (without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes), such qualified persons, including licensed and unlicensed personnel of the merchant marine, as the Commission may deem necessary to effectuate the purposes of this section.

"(b) The Commission is hereby authorized to train American citizens to become licensed officers of the merchant marine of the United States in a status of cadets and cadet officers on Government-owned and subsidized vessels and, in cooperation with other governmental and private agencies, on other vessels and in shipyards, plants, and industrial and educational organizations, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission and upon such terms as the Commission may arrange, and expenditures incident to such training are hereby authorized.

"(c) The Commission is hereby authorized to prescribe, conduct, and supervise such extension and correspondence courses as it may deem necessary to supplement other training facilities, and to make such courses available, under such rules and regulations and upon such terms as it may prescribe, to the licensed and unlicensed personnel of the merchant marine, and to cadets and cadet officers, who shall make application therefor. The Commission is further authorized to print, publish, and purchase suitable textbooks, equipment, and supplies required for such courses, and to employ persons, firms, and corporations on a contract or fee basis (without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes), for the performance of special services deemed necessary by the Commission in the preparation and editing of such textbooks and other aids to instruction, and in the supervision and administration of such courses.

"(d) The Commission, with the consent of any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, officers, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section, as amended."

SEC. 6. The first sentence of section 502 (b) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The amount of the reduction in selling price which is herein termed 'construction differential subsidy' may equal, but not exceed, the excess of the bid of the shipbuilder constructing the proposed vessel (excluding the cost of any features incorporated in the vessel for national-defense uses, which shall be paid by the Commission in addition to the subsidy), over the fair and reasonable estimate of cost, as determined by the Commission, of the construction of the proposed vessel if it were constructed under similar plans and specifications (excluding national-defense features as above provided) in a foreign shipbuilding center which is deemed by the Commission to furnish a fair and representative example for the determination of the estimated foreign cost of construction of vessels of the type proposed to be constructed."

SEC. 7. Title V of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 510. (a) When used in this section—

"(1) The term 'obsolete vessel' means a vessel or vessels, each of which (A) is of not less than 1,350 gross tons, (B) is not less than 17 years old and, in the judgment of the Commission, is obsolete or inadequate for successful operation in the domestic or foreign trade of the United States, and (C) is owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States and has been owned by such citizen or citizens for at least 3 years immediately prior to the date of acquisition hereunder.

"(2) The term 'new vessel' means a vessel or vessels, each of which (A) is constructed under the provisions of this act, and is acquired within 2 years from the date of completion of such vessel, or is purchased under section 714, as amended, by the person turning in an obsolete vessel under this section, or (B) is hereafter constructed in a domestic shipyard on private account and not under the provisions of this act, and documented under the laws of the United States.

"(b) In order to promote the construction of new, safe, and efficient vessels to carry the domestic and foreign water-borne commerce of the United States, the Commission is authorized, subject to the provisions of this section, to acquire any obsolete vessel in exchange for an allowance of credit. The amount of such allowance shall be determined at the time the owner contracts for the construction or purchase of a new vessel. The allowance shall not be paid to the owner of the obsolete vessel but shall be applied upon the purchase price of a new vessel. In the case of a new vessel constructed under the provisions of this act, such allowance may, under such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe, be applied upon the cash payments required under this act. In case the new vessel is not constructed under the provisions of this act, the allowance shall, upon transfer of the obsolete vessel to the Commission, be paid, for the account of the owner, to the shipbuilder constructing such new vessel.

"(c) The utility value of the new vessel for operation in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States shall not be substantially less than that of the obsolete vessel. The gross tonnage of the obsolete vessel may exceed the gross tonnage of the new vessel in a ratio not in excess of 3 to 1, if the Commission finds that the new vessel, although of lesser tonnage, will provide utility value equivalent to or greater than that of the obsolete vessel.

"(d) The allowance for an obsolete vessel shall be the fair and reasonable value of such vessel as determined by the Commission. In making such determination the Commission shall consider: (1) The scrap value of the obsolete vessel both in American and in foreign markets, (2) the depreciated value based on a 20-year life, and (3) the market value thereof for operation in the world trade or in the foreign or domestic trade of the United States. If the owner of the obsolete vessel uses such vessel during the period of construction of the new vessel, the allowance shall be reduced by an amount representing the fair value of such use.

"(e) No gain shall be recognized to the owner for the purpose of Federal income taxes in the case of a transfer of an obsolete vessel to the Commission under the provisions of this section. The basis for gain or loss upon a sale or exchange and for depreciation under the applicable Federal income-tax laws of a new vessel acquired as contemplated in this section shall be the same as the basis of the obsolete vessel or vessels exchanged for credit upon the acquisition of such new vessel, increased in the amount of the cost of such vessel (other than the cost represented by such obsolete vessel or vessels) and decreased in the amount of loss recognized upon such transfer.

"(f) The Commission shall include in its annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all transactions consummated under the provisions of the preceding subsections during the period covered by such report.

"(g) An obsolete vessel acquired by the Commission under this section which is or becomes 20 years old or more, and vessels presently in the Commission's laid-up fleet which are or become 20 years old or more, shall in no case be used for commercial operation, except that any such obsolete vessel, or any such vessel in the laid-up fleet may be used during any period in which vessels may be requisitioned under section 902 of this act, as amended, and except as otherwise provided in this act for the employment of the Commission's vessels in steamship lines on trade routes exclusively serving the foreign trade of the United States."

SEC. 8. The last sentence in the first paragraph of section 603 (c) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Such payments on account shall in no case exceed 75 percent of the amount estimated to have accrued on account of such subsidy, except that, with respect to that part of the subsidy relating to any particular voyage, an additional 15 percent may be paid to the contractor after such contractor's audit of the voyage account for such voyage has been completed and the Commission's auditors have verified the correctness of the same. Any such payments shall be made only after there has been furnished to the Commission such security as it deems to be reasonable and necessary to insure refund of any overpayment."

SEC. 9. Section 604 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 604. If in the case of any particular foreign-trade route the Commission shall find after consultation with the Secretary of State, that the subsidy provided for in this title is in any respect inadequate to offset the effect of governmental aid paid to foreign competitors, it may grant such additional subsidy as it determines to be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That no such additional subsidy shall be granted except upon an affirmative voter of four of the members of the Commission."

SEC. 10. The proviso at the end of section 607 (c) (3) of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That such reimbursement to the Commission, if so deferred, shall be payable upon termination of the contract from any amounts then in the special reserve fund and the capital reserve fund: Provided further, That if any amounts shall have been transferred to the general funds of the contractor from either of such reserve funds and not repaid thereto, or if prepayments of amounts not due before 1 year after the date of termination of the contract have been made from the capital reserve fund pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, then the balance of such reimbursement not paid out of said reserve funds shall be payable out of any other assets of the contractor, but the amounts so payable from such assets shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of the amounts so transferred and not repaid, and the amounts of such prepayments;".

SEC. 11. (a) Section 705 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "No vessel constructed under the provisions of this act, as amended, shall be sold by the Commission for operation in the foreign trade for a sum less than the estimated foreign construction cost exclusive of national-defense features (determined as of the date the construction contract therefor is executed) less depreciation based on a 20-year life, nor shall any such vessel be sold by the Commission for operation in the domestic trade for a sum less than the cost of construction in the United States exclusive of national-defense features less depreciation based on a 20-year life."

(b) Section 706 (b) of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "The Commission shall reject any bid for the charter (under sections 701 to 713, both inclusive, of this title, as amended) of any vessel constructed under the provisions of this act, as amended, if the charter hire offered by the bidder is lower than the minimum charter hire for such vessel would be if chartered under the provisions of section 714, as amended, of this title."

SEC. 12. Section 714 of such act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 714. If the Commission shall find that any trade route (determined by the Commission to be an essential trade route as provided in section 211 of this act) cannot be successfully developed and maintained and the Commission's replacement program cannot be achieved under private operation of such trade route by a citizen of the United States with vessels registered under the laws thereof, without further Government aid in addition to the financial aids authorized under titles V and VI of this act, the Commission is authorized to have constructed, in private shipyards or in navy yards, the vessel or vessels of the types deemed necessary for such trade route, and to demise such new vessel or vessels on bare-boat charter to the American-flag operator established on such trade route, without advertisement or competition, upon an annual charter hire of not less than 5 percent of the price (herein referred to as the 'foreign cost') at which such vessel or vessels would be sold if constructed under title V plus 3½ percent of the depreciated foreign cost computed annually upon the basis of a 20-year life of the vessel. Such charter may contain an option to the charterer to purchase such vessel or vessels from the Commission within 5 years after delivery thereof under the charter, upon the same terms and conditions as are provided in title V for the purchase of new vessels from the Commission, except that (a) the purchase price shall be the foreign cost less depreciation to the date of purchase based upon a 20-year life; (b) the required cash payment payable at the time of such purchase shall be 25 percent of the purchase price as so determined; (c) the charter may provide that all or any part of the charter hire paid in excess of the minimum charter hire provided for in this section may be credited against the cash payment payable at the time of such purchase; (d) the balance of the purchase price shall be paid within the years remaining of the 20 years after the date of delivery of the vessel under the charter and in approximately equal annual installments, except that the first of said installments, which shall be payable upon the next ensuing anniversary date of such delivery under the charter, shall be a proportionate part of the annual installment, interest to be payable upon the unpaid balances of 3½ percent per annum from the date of purchase.

"Such charter shall provide for operation of the vessel exclusively in foreign trade, or on a round-the-world voyage, or on a round voyage from the west coast of the United States to a European port or ports which includes intercoastal ports of the United States, or a round voyage from the Atlantic coast of the United States to the Orient which includes intercoastal ports of the United States, or on a voyage in foreign trade on which the vessel may stop at an island possession or island Territory of the United States, and if the vessel is operated in the domestic trade on any of the above-enumerated services the character will pay annually to the Commission that proportion of one-twentieth of the difference between the domestic and foreign cost of such vessel as the gross revenue derived from the domestic trade bears to the gross revenue derived from the entire voyages completed during the preceding year."

SEC. 13. Section 806 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(d) Whoever knowingly and willfully violates any order, rule, or regulation of the United States Maritime Commission made or issued in the exercise of the powers, duties, or functions transferred to it or vested in it by this act, as amended, for which no penalty is otherwise expressly provided, shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $500. If such violation is a continuing one, each day of such violation shall constitute a separate offense."

SEC. 14. Paragraph (8) of section 1104 (a) of such act, as amended, is amended by striking out the word "or" before the designation "(c)", and by inserting before the period at the end of the paragraph a semicolon and the following: "or (d) in the fishing trade or industry."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senate bill is amendatory of the Merchant Marine Act. The main provision, the one with which we are most concerned, provides for training, by correspondence schools or otherwise, American seamen for our ships. No extra expense is contemplated. It is a necessity that we shall train our seamen and give our young men a better chance. If we cannot get the bill through today by unanimous consent, I shall ask at an appropriate time to have it made a special order, but I hope the bill may pass as it is now.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether the bill amends any of the substantial provisions of the Maritime Act with respect to the operation of vessels.

Mr. BAILEY. No; not with respect to the operation of vessels.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand that it deals solely with the training of officers for the merchant marine?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I said that was the principal object. Certain sections are amended. I have the other language of the Senate bill before me. The amendments are technical in character, and an explanation of them will require a little time, but I do not think any serious objection can be offered to them. They start with the full approval of the Maritime Commission, and the bill was introduced at the request of the Commission.

In the first place, it is proposed to amend the act of 1916 by requiring that all orders of the United States Maritime Commission, other than for the payment of money, made under this act, as amended or supplemented, shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The point I have in mind—and I think the Senator can clear it up very quickly—concerns the provision of the present law which deprives of benefit under the subsidy provisions any American line which enters into an agreement with any foreign line against another American line.

The Senator will recall that the original Maritime Act exempted shipping lines from the provisions of the antitrust law. Later, it developed that in a particular instance an American line which had the benefit of the mail subsidy was in a conference with a foreign line to operate a "fighting" ship against another American line operating between the same ports, the second American line not being the beneficiary of any mail subsidy. It was felt to be improper that any line obtaining a subsidy from the Federal Treasury should be permitted to enter into an agreement condemned by the antitrust law to the detriment of another line. Accordingly, Congress in passing the Maritime Act 3 or 4 years ago so amended it as to prevent such an abuse.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think the pending legislation remotely relates to anything of that sort.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wanted to be sure of that, because an amendment to eliminate that provision was later sent in by the Maritime Commission.

Mr. BAILEY. I assure the Senator that if I discover in conference that there is anything like that in the proposed legislation, I will take all pains to defeat the bill. I give him assurance that there is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thought there was not, but I wanted to be assured.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1960 will be indefinitely postponed.

ACCEPTANCE OF LAND FROM SEATTLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2273) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain land in the city of Seattle, King County, Wash., with improvements thereon, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "Provided further, That the grading and landscaping of said land and the construction of said armory building are satisfactorily completed" and to insert "Provided further, That the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy shall not be made until the grading and landscaping of the said land and the construction of said armory building are completed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized on behalf of the United States to accept from the city of Seattle and county of King, Wash., a site free from all encumbrances, the title in fee simple, together with the improvements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances belonging thereto, including an armory building constructed or to be constructed thereon, for use of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserve: Provided, That the acquisition of said land shall be without cost to the United States, and that the grading and landscaping of said land and the construction and completion of said armory building thereon shall not entail any obligation against appropriations of the Navy Department or relief funds apportioned to it: Provided further, That the acceptance by the Secretary of the Navy shall not be made until the grading and landscaping of the said land and the construction of said armory building are completed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington how the landscaping is to be completed and the building constructed without obligating the Navy Department. Is the Navy to erect the buildings?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; the bill specifically provides that the city of Seattle is to furnish the building and land without obligation on the part of the Navy Department. The amendment inserted by the committee strengthens the proviso which I had placed in the bill. The fact is that the Naval Reserves have very insufficient quarters in which to drill, and the city of Seattle is willing to furnish the land and the building necessary to afford them adequate facilities. The purpose of the bill is to permit the Navy to have control of the building after it has been constructed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPUTATION OF SERVICE IN THE NAVY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2599) to amend the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 (Public, No. 732, 52 Stat. 1175), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 206 of the Naval Reserve Act of June 25, 1938, is hereby amended by striking out the last two provisions and substituting therefor the following: "Provided further, That in the computation of service requisite for transfer of enlisted men of the Fleet Reserve to the retired list of the Regular Navy and for payment of allowances to which enlisted men on the retired list of the Regular Navy are entitled, service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Naval Reserve Force, Fleet Naval Reserve, Fleet Reserve, Marine Corps Reserve Force, and the Marine Corps Reserve, and on the retired list of the Regular Navy shall be included: And provided further, That such service as may heretofore have been authorized by law to be counted as double time shall be credited as double time in this computation."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill is merely a statutory confirmation of the construed meaning of a part of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938. The bill involves no cost to the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I asked for the explanation because the bill does not appear to be in my file, through some omission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR OVERHAULS OF CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6065) to authorize major overhauls for certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to add a section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of effecting major overhauls of the United States ships Tennessee, California, Colorado, Maryland, and West Virginia alterations and repairs to such vessels are hereby authorized and expenditures therefor shall not be limited by the provisions of the act approved July 18, 1935 (49 Stat. 482; 5 U. S. C. 468a), but the total cost of such alterations and repairs shall not exceed $6,660,000 for all 5 vessels, in addition to $450,000 per vessel for each period of 18 consecutive months.

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized to acquire two motor vessels from the Maritime Commission and to convert them for use by the Navy at a total cost of such acquisition and conversion of not more than $2,500,000.

Mr. WALSH. The pending bill has already passed the House. One purpose of the bill is to authorize major alterations and repairs to the battleships Tennessee, California, Colorado, Maryland, and West Virginia, at a total cost not to exceed $6,600,000 over and above the amount of $450,000 now authorized to be expended on each vessel for each period of 18 consecutive months.

The Navy now has 15 battleships in service, and all but those mentioned in this bill have been modernized in accordance with legislation enacted during past Congresses.

This proposed legislation does not contemplate the extensive changes that have been made in the other 10 battleships; however, it proposes to carry out certain alterations and effect such repairs as will materially increase the military efficiency of these ships.

Under the provisions of the act entitled "An act limiting expenditures for repair or changes to naval vessels," approved July 18, 1935 (49 Stat. 482; 5 U. S. C. 468a), the total expenditures for repairs and alterations to a vessel undertaken in navy yards shall not exceed $450,000 for any 18 consecutive months.

This limitation is satisfactory for battleships of average age. On such ships the limitation will permit the maintenance of material in satisfactory operating condition and will permit the accomplishment of a reasonable number of alterations to improve the military qualities of the ships.

This prescribed limitation is no longer adequate for the battleships Tennessee, California, Colorado, Maryland, and West Virginia. A number of alterations of military importance have been deferred for some years in the expectation that these ships would be "modernized." The funds which were expended were used principally to correct major deterioration and obsolescence. It was expected that the other work necessary to bring these ships up to modern standards would be accomplished at less cost during a modernization period; however, complete modernization of these five ships would cost in the neighborhood of $75,000,000 to $100,000,000.

In view of the present battleship-building program authorized by the Naval Expansion Act the modernization of the five battleships in question is considered undesirable both from the standpoint of the expenditure of the necessary funds and the heavy work load which might interfere with the construction of new ships. The elimination of such modernization, however, makes it urgently necessary that certain work which heretofore has been deferred be now undertaken.

It is estimated that, in addition to the work which can be accomplished under the present limitation of $450,000 per ship, the cost of the additional work will not exceed a total of $6,660,000. This additional work will comprise certain repairs to correct the deterioration and obsolescence which has accrued and to perform only the more important military alterations necessary to bring these ships to a minimum standard. The legislation which has been proposed will permit the accomplishment of this work.

Another purpose of the bill is to authorize the acquisition of two motor vessels, the Santa Rita and the Santa Inez, from the Maritime Commission, at a cost of $1,000,000, and to convert them for use by the Navy, at a cost of $1,500,000.

Mr. President, these battleships are 18 years old, and it is thought that the expenditure of this money for the modernization of the vessels will put them in almost as good condition as modern, recently built battleships. This is a request for authorization to proceed with the modernizing of these battleships.

The United States Maritime Commission is now building three new vessels of the C–2 type for the Grace Steamship Line. As part payment for these C–2 type vessels the Grace Line will turn over to the Commission three vessels now in service.

Of these three vessels which will be received by the Commission, it appears that the motor vessels Santa Rita and Santa Inez can be used to advantage by the Navy Department.

One of these vessels is desired as a replacement for the U. S. S. Hannibal, which is now in service as a naval survey ship. The Hannibal was acquired by the Navy Department as a collier in April 1898 and has a displacement of 4,000 tons and a cruising radius of 4,100 miles, at a speed of 8 knots. The Santa Rita and the Santa Inez were built in 1928. Each has a displacement of 6,000 tons and a cruising radius of 19,000 miles, at 13 knots.

The great age of the Hannibal, with consequent high annual repair costs, its low speed, and limited cruising radius, makes its operation very uneconomical and causes its work to be performed very slowly. Space aboard the Hannibal is inadequate for the accommodation of personnel and supplies necessary to prolonged or distant surveying expeditions. The Hannibal is not equipped for plane tending nor does it have an adequate photographic laboratory for the developing, printing, and checking of aerial photography.

The deficiencies of the Hannibal can be remedied through its replacement by either the Santa Rita or the Santa Inez. Either of these vessels, with its size, speed, and sea-keeping qualities, would provide an adequate base from which to conduct surveying operations.

The other of these vessels is needed for use in connection with the preparation and servicing of the naval bases recommended by the Board convened pursuant to section 10 (a) of the act of May 17, 1938 (52 Stat. 403; 34 U. S. C. 498i), particularly those which may be authorized in the near future through enactment of the bill H. R. 4278. It will be fitted for passenger, cargo, and towing services.

It is the purpose of this proposed legislation to authorize the acquisition of both of these vessels from the Maritime Commission and their conversion for use by the Navy.

Enactment of the proposed legislation would authorize an appropriation of $2,500,000, which would cover the cost of conversion and acquisition of both vessels.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would advise us as to the sum total of the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Six million six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BORAH. That is, under this particular bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I was about to ask the Senator as to how much of an appropriation we shall have made at the close of the session for naval construction.

Mr. WALSH. For building alone, or modernizing vessels, not the general appropriations for the Navy Department?

Mr. BORAH. The total appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. Frankly, I am unable to say, because there have been naval appropriation bills and there are appropriations about to be made to be included in the deficiency bill. I should say the naval appropriation bill was for about $700,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I understand the question of the Senator from Idaho, it is a request as to the appropriations made for the Navy Department for the coming year.

Mr. WALSH. No; for new construction.

Mr. BORAH. I asked as to new construction; but I intended to ask as to the other appropriations in order to get some idea of the sum total to be expended.

Mr. WALSH. Somewhere in the neighborhood of $700,000,000.

Mr. KING. In my opinion, the entire appropriations for the Navy will exceed $1,250,000,000 before we adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. Congress has not yet made that much of an appropriation.

Mr. KING. Approximately that amount.

Mr. WALSH. Already?

Mr. KING. Yes; it is over $1,000,000,000 up to date.

Mr. WALSH. I think the appropriation in the naval appropriation bill was in the neighborhood of $700,000,000.

Mr. KING. The authorizations?

Mr. WALSH. The question was not as to authorizations, but as to the appropriations. I ask the Senator from Idaho if that is not correct.

Mr. BORAH. I asked for a statement as to the appropriations, and finally I would like to get a statement as to just what the Navy has obligated itself to pay for naval construction and what the naval appropriations are generally.

Mr. WALSH. By authorizations?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be pleased to give that information to the Senator in complete detail. In fact, I have the information in the office of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Capitol, and I will see that the information is furnished to the Senate as soon as I contact with my office.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat I should like to say that complaints have come from time to time, especially during the past few years, to the effect that some of our battleships are obsolete, and that was urged as a reason for larger appropriations for additional battleships. It seems that now we are reversing our policy and taking some of the so-called obsolete battleships and appropriating five or six million dollars to rehabilitate them.

Mr. WALSH. We are building new battleships so as to increase the number of battleships, and we are modernizing the older battleships. The pending bill provides for the modernization of five 18-year-old battleships which have not had any major repairs made to them during the 18 years. This repair work will save the building of new battleships, and maintaining such battleship strength as the Navy Department thinks we should maintain for our defense.

Mr. KING. We will make no saving because I understand the Navy now is committed to 45,000-ton battleships, larger battleships, and they will soon look with considerable contempt upon the smaller ships to which the Senator is now referring, for which he is pleading for the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion, these modernized ships will always be most useful. It may be that the 45,000-ton battleships will be more valuable and more effective in time of war, but certainly these older battleships will be of great service as part of the fleet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, a short time ago, when a bill was before the Senate granting authority to remodel five battleships, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked me to furnish some information with respect to the appropriations and the authorizations for the next fiscal year, involving larger expenditures by the Federal Government. I have that information brought up to date, and it is as follows:

The total amount of money appropriated by the present Congress for the Navy is as follows:

1. The amount contained in the annual naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940	$773,049,151
(NOTE.—This amount includes $253,604,712 for new ship construction and $50,059,047 for aircraft.)
2. Amount contained in the first and second deficiency appropriation bills	37,357,750
(NOTE.—Of this sum $36,000,000 was to continue the construction of naval vessels for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.)
Total amount appropriated	810,406,901

Additional appropriations have heretofore been authorized by the present Congress, as follows:

(a) For new naval air bases or additions to naval air bases	$66,800,000
(b) For naval public works at various shore stations	60,180,500
(c) For reengining and modernization of three submarines	5,500,000
Total	132,480,500

The expenditures authorized as stated will be spread over a period of years.

WATER SUPPLY OF KETCHIKAN, ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 2413) for the protection of the water supply of the city of Ketchikan, Alaska, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOWANCES TO NAVAL OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2348) relating to allowances to certain naval officers stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters, which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That notwithstanding any other provision of law relating to allowances to officers of the United States for rental of quarters during the fiscal years 1935 and 1936, allowances to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps stationed in the Canal Zone for rental of quarters prior to July 1, 1936, shall be considered as having been subject only to the provisions of section 6 of the act of June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. 628), as amended by section 2 of the act of May 31, 1924 (43 Stat. 250; 37 U. S. C. 10).

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money appropriated for the pay or allowances of officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, to any such officer an amount equal to the amount by which his allowances were reduced, or equal to the amount of any charges raised in the accounts of any such officer and subsequently removed by checkage or otherwise, by reason of provisions contained in the act of April 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 614), or in the act of April 9, 1935 (49 Stat. 120).

SEC. 3. Payments under the provisions of this act shall be made from appropriations current at the time such payments are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECORATION OF REAR ADMIRAL HARRY E. YARNELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2482) authorizing the President to present a Distinguished Service Medal to Rear Admiral Harry Ervin Yarnell, United States Navy, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "October", to strike out "7" and insert "30", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to present a Distinguished Service Medal to Rear Admiral Harry Ervin Yarnell, United States Navy, for his skill and devotion to duty displayed during his tour of duty beginning October 30, 1936, as commander in chief of the United States Asiatic Fleet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA GUTHRIE AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 2903) for the relief of Virginia Guthrie, Jake C. Aaron, and Thomas W. Carter, Jr., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPRESSION OF ATTEMPTS TO INCITE SERVICE MEN TO DISOBEDIENCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1677) to make better provision for the government of the Army and the Navy of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever advises, counsels, urges, or solicits any member of the Army or the Navy of the United States to disobey the laws or regulations governing the Army or the Navy or to disobey the lawful orders of a superior, or whoever publishes or distributes any book, pamphlet, paper, print, article, letter, or other writing which advises, counsels, urges, or solicits any member of the Army or the Navy of the United States to disobey the laws or regulations governing such military or naval forces, or to disobey the lawful orders of a superior, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 2. Any book, pamphlet, paper, print, article, letter, or other writing of the character described in section 1 of this act may be taken from any house or other place in which it may be found, or from any person in whose possession it may be, under a search warrant issued pursuant to the provisions of title XI of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; U. S. C., title 18, ch. 18).

SEC. 3. The term "member of the Army" as used herein shall include all members of the Army of the United States as defined in section 1 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (48 Stat. 153; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 2), when in active Federal service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the measure?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill is one of considerable importance. The Navy has discovered that literature of a nature subversive to the Government has been distributed, in increasing quantities in recent years, to the personnel of the Army and the Navy. The literature, apparently emanating from Communist organizations, seeks to undermine the morale of the services by urging disloyalty and disobedience of laws and regulations for the government of the armed forces.

Existing law is inadequate to curb this propaganda. The pamphlets and leaflets are carefully worded to avoid the insurrection and sedition provisions of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 4 and 6), and the publishers likewise escape the penalties of sections 344 and 345 of title 18, United States Code, by avoiding the use of the mails.

The proposed legislation, it is believed, will protect the military and naval forces of the United States from the contaminating influences of propaganda which has as its ultimate object the overthrow of our Government by force. It does not infringe upon the rights of free speech or of a free press. It does not prevent any person from advocating a change in existing laws by lawful means. It does, however, prevent persons from urging members of the armed forces to violate the laws and regulations by which they are governed.

Enactment of the proposed legislation would result in no increase of cost to the Government.

The Navy Department recommends enactment of the proposed legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the measure.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator in conclusion that there is no present law which reaches the distribution of that kind of literature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF THE ESTATE OF PATRICK HENRY

The bill (S. 1919) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, there is objection to the amendments. In the minds of some of us Patrick Henry was the voice of the Revolution. He was a great man. An official of the Department of the Interior, who has had to do with the bill, does not think Patrick Henry's achievements or his fame are worth a tinker's dam, and therefore he has prevailed upon the committee to make amendments to the bill which will render it worthless, and if they are adopted I shall move to strike the bill from the calendar. Therefore,

I move that the Senate disagree to the committee amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am in hearty agreement with the Senator from Virginia. There is a popular idea among some people of the United States that Patrick Henry was merely a declaimer. He was one of the very greatest geniuses this country has ever known. He was a great man in the Revolutionary period. Five times he was Governor of the State of Virginia. He was offered the sixth term—not consecutive—and he declined it. He was offered the place of Secretary of State by George Washington and he declined that office. He was offered the position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and declined it.

As early as 1765, while the conservatives were holding back, Patrick Henry, by his resolution introduced in the House of Burgesses and by the speech he made in support of it, laid the foundations upon which the Revolution was fought, and by virtue of which the other States, through the intervening period of 10 years from 1765 to 1775, finally joined in the struggle.

When some of the others in the Revolution, who afterward became prominent, were opposing the forward-looking views of Patrick Henry, he was ardently and passionately stirring the Colonies and laying the foundation principles upon which the Revolution was afterward fought. I think the "taxation without representation" speech was an unequalled presentation and interpretation of that fundamental principle of Anglo-Saxon civilization.

I hope the Senate will pass the bill, thereby giving adequate recognition to the grandeur, the eloquence, and patriotism of one of the very greatest men our country has ever produced.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator from Virginia desire that the committee amendments be rejected?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to join with the Senator, because I endorse every word that has been said here about Patrick Henry, and I think we ought to create a proper memorial to him.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I want to assure the Senator from Virginia that I would rather take his word with respect to Patrick Henry than that of any subordinate official of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask, what were the amendments which were placed on the bill that are objected to?

Mr. GLASS. They were simply to emasculate the bill absolutely. They are not as comprehensive as existing law, which authorizes the Government to acquire Patrick Henry's estate.

Mr. BORAH. I was simply asking for information; that is all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that it is regrettable that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is not present at the moment. I was not aware that this bill was reported favorably by the committee. I yield to no one in my admiration of Patrick Henry. His "Give me liberty or give me death" speech was an inspiration to me in my school days. But I do not think there is anything in the property proposed to be purchased to justify the expenditure of $100,000. That has nothing to do with one's reverence for Patrick Henry, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon interpose an objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that if the Senator from Colorado were present he would concur with my suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over on the request of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 791, Senate bill 1919. I desire to withdraw my objection to the immediate consideration of that bill. I have had a conference with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], as well as with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and I am satisfied that the amount provided by the bill is not necessarily the purchase price but the maximum which may be expended for the project. Therefore, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recurring to Senate bill 1919.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1919) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and directed to require by purchase, or otherwise" and insert "to negotiate, but without commitment for the purchase,"; in line 6, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$100,000"; in line 8, after the name "Red Hill", to insert "for the purpose of establishing a permanent public memorial to Patrick Henry to be known as the Patrick Henry National Monument, and to be administered under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Red Hill, estate of Patrick Henry', approved August 15, 1935"; and on page 2, after line 3, to strike out sections 2 and 3, as follows:

SEC. 2. The property acquired under the provisions of this act shall be a permanent public memorial to Patrick Henry, and shall be administered as the Patrick Henry National Monument, as provided in the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Red Hill, estate of Patrick Henry," approved August 15, 1935.

SEC. 3. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to negotiate, but without commitment for the purchase, on behalf of the United States, at a cost not to exceed $100,000, the estate of Patrick Henry in Charlotte County, Va., known as Red Hill, for the purpose of establishing a permanent public memorial to Patrick Henry to be known as the Patrick Henry National Monument, and to be administered under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Red Hill, estate of Patrick Henry," approved August 15, 1935.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

"The clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy, in addition to the places now provided, at Lubbock, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

SEC. 2. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRAVEL PAY FOR GOVERNMENT PERSONNEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 506) to provide for a more efficient and economical mileage table of distances and routes to apply for the payments of travel performed for the United States Government by the military personnel, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the provisions of law providing for the establishment of official distances for travel performed by commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service, when traveling under competent orders without troops, such distances shall be computed on the basis of the shortest usually traveled rail and/or water route via which the carriers authorize the sale of through tickets affording first-class transportation, except when it is determined by the Chief of Finance under the direction of the Secretary of War that conditions of service are unusual or that such routes involve excessive distances compared with highway carrier distances and that the mode of travel customarily used by the traveling public from starting point to destination is highway carrier transportation, or is by other than the through ticket rail route, in which cases such shorter routes shall be considered the usually traveled routes: Provided, That where highway routes are used in no case shall mileage be paid on a basis greater than the travel distance as shown by standard guides, nor shall payment exceed the amount which would be payable on the basis of the officially established rail and/or water distance with deduction for land-grant distance, if any, embraced therein: Provided further, That when travel is performed between points for which the distance has not been previously established, or is not determinable from standard rail, water, or highway guides, payment for such travel shall be made on the basis of such number of miles as may be determined by the Chief of Finance to be fair and equitable to the United States and the traveler: And provided further, That between places where distances are not established, the Chief of Finance may establish distances for payment of mileage claimed after the travel has been completed in accordance with the principles set forth herein.

SEC. 2. (a) Beginning with the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, two persons employed in the office of each Senator and one person employed in the office of each Member of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Senator or Member in whose office they are employed, shall be entitled to receive a mileage allowance for going to and returning from each session of the Congress. The allowance for each mile traveled shall be the same as for travel authorized for officers of the Army and other services in the act of June 10, 1922 (U. S. C. 37:20), and the mileage shall be computed in accordance with the tables provided for in the first section of this act, between Washington, D. C., and the place of residence of such Senator or Representative in the State in which he is chosen. Such allowance shall be paid only if the travel between such points is actually performed. Such allowance shall be paid by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, upon a sworn statement by the person entitled thereto that the travel has been performed; and the determination of such officers with respect to the making of such payments, and the amount thereof, shall be final and conclusive upon all other officers and employees of the Government.

(b) For the purposes of this section persons employed by a committee of the Senate or House of Representatives shall be deemed to be employed in the office of the Senator or Member of the House of Representatives who is chairman of such committee.

(c) As used in this section, the term "Member of the House of Representatives" includes the Delegate from Alaska, the Delegate from Hawaii, and the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

(d) The appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section is hereby authorized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill establishes new and revised mileage tables for calculating the expenses of Government employees while traveling on business of the Government. It also provides that two clerks of a Senator and one clerk of a Member of the House of Representatives shall be granted the mileage allowance for one trip going to their homes and one trip returning to Washington. That, in a few words, is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. KING. Why was it necessary to commingle with the traveling expenses of those in the Army and those in the various bureaus, the expenses of the employees of the Senate?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Every clerk in the Government who travels on the business of the Government receives travel allowance. Certainly the secretaries of Senators who go home with the Senators are also traveling on official business, and the committee thought it would be proper to allow them traveling expenses.

Mr. KING. What mileage is provided?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Eight cents a mile.

Mr. KING. One way or both?

Mr. SHEPPARD. One way. That is, they are paid mileage for two trips, one coming to Washington and one going home. They are allowed 8 cents a mile each way.

Mr. KING. That is a total of 16 cents?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill relating to mileage tables for the United States Army and other Government agencies and to mileage allowances for persons employed in the offices of Members of House and Senate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF OREGON

The bill (S. 2469) relating to the exchange of certain lands in the State of Oregon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. There has been so much in the way of exchange of lands in the West that I should like to know what the bill covers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] desire to explain the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; Mr. President.

The act approved May 31, 1918 (40 Stat. 593), and section 3 of the act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 758), gave the Secretary of the Interior authority to exchange Oregon-California railroad land-grant lands and Coos Bay Wagon Road lands for other lands in private ownership. This bill extends that authority to permit exchanges for State- or county-owned lands. The bill also permits the Secretary of the Interior to make exchanges for cut-over lands or lands containing less than merchantable timber. This additional authority is sought to be granted in order that exchanges may be made whereby new timber may be grown on the land so received in exchange, such new growth to offset the mature timber being cut annually. In this way the whole grant may be operated on a level sustained-yield basis.

The bill has to do with the reforestation, reclamation, and preservation of the timber lands involved.

Mr. BONE. Is this a case in which land which is already timbered is being exchanged for cut-over land? We have had much of that in the West, and I am wondering whether or not this is another example of it. Some things have occurred out there that do not look very good.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree with the Senator. The Senator is harking back to the land-fraud days.

Mr. BONE. Yes. I am going back to the time of Binger Herman. A number of persons went to the penitentiary in connection with such activities.

Mr. HOLMAN. And properly so. I assure the Senator that I am not advocating a continuance of such things, nor a new opportunity to repeat them. The pending bill is hedged about with the proper safeguards to protect the public lands

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I am constrained to accept the Senator's explanation of the bill. I have no way of knowing the facts. However, I know that in the West in times past we have had a number of amiable gentlemen full of plausible arguments, urging the public to turn over valuable timberland in exchange for worthless logged-off land which is not worth a snap of the fingers.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senator is absolutely correct. I myself served for 8 years on the Oregon State Land Board. The record to which the Senator from Washington refers is an appalling one. I reiterate that the proper safeguards are contained in the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in the administration of the act entitled "An act relating to the revested Oregon and California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands situated in the State of Oregon," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 874), is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to exchange any land formerly granted to the Oregon and California Railroad Co., title to which was revested in the United States pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), and any land granted to the State of Oregon, title to which was reconveyed to the United States by the Southern Oregon Co. pursuant to the provisions of the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1179), for lands of approximately equal aggregate value held in private, State, or county ownership, either within or contiguous to the former limits of such grants, when by such action the Secretary of the Interior will be enabled to consolidate advantageously the holdings of lands of the United States: Provided, That all lands and timber secured by the United States pursuant to any such exchange shall be administered in accordance with the same provisions of law as such revested or reconveyed lands exchanged therefor: Provided further, That either party to any such exchange may make reservations of easements, rights of use, and other interests and rights. No fee shall be charged for any such exchange with respect to land owned by the State of Oregon or any county thereof, except one-half of the cost of publishing notice of such proposed exchange.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The act of May 31, 1918 (40 Stat. 593), section 3 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 758), and all other acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, to the extent of such conflict, are hereby repealed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of the Congress to declare war was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2688) to amend section 4884 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 40) was announced as next in order.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, this bill is a measure fixing the time a patent may run from the date of the first application. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and other Senators have spoken to me about the bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Patents. The request has been made that it go over. I ask that it go over for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR PATENTS

The bill (S. 2687) to establish a Circuit Court of Appeals for Patents was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I think the bill had better go over. It seems to me to be a very important bill.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I shall not urge the Senator to withdraw his objection. However, I should like to take a moment to explain to the Senate, so that those who are interested may have the information, that the bill originally drawn and presented to the Senate 2 years ago, and I believe also last year, was a somewhat different bill than the pending bill.

The pending bill creates an orthodox circuit court of appeals. It departs from none of the orthodoxies of appellate procedure. The proposed method of handling appeals preserves in full the unrestrained and unrestricted right of appeal to the Supreme Court. The only difference between the court provided for in the pending bill and the average circuit court of appeals is the fact that all appeals in patent cases are siphoned through the new court. In all other respects it is an orthodox circuit court of appeals. We have taken out of the bill all the other aspects and features to which some objection was registered. If my brethren who are lawyers and who are interested in this particular kind of litigation will take the trouble to read the bill they will necessarily have to narrow their inquiry to a consideration of whether or not they feel that it is wise to send patent appeals through one court. Personally I believe it is. I was impressed with the logic of the argument made by the proponents of this viewpoint.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I observe that the bill creates a new court.

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. The bill was considered by the Committee on Patents, a committee which properly has jurisdiction over the subject matter of patents. Does not the Senator think that any bill creating a new court should be considered by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate?

Mr. BONE. I confess I find it difficult to argue with the Senator from New Mexico on that question. It is true that all the members of the Committee on Patents are lawyers. All of them have had experience in Federal appellate procedure. If the bill went to the Committee on the Judiciary that committee of course, would have to consider the same problem we considered. There would be more lawyers, to be sure, who would have to consider the matter; but they encounter the same problem: Shall we siphon patent appeals through one court? Is it the part of wisdom to do so? The lawyers on the Committee on Patents believe it is. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that it has been the view of the Commissioner of Patents and his predecessors in office that this is a wise provision. It does not change the mechanics of the law. It does not threaten anyone's substantive rights. It does not affect the basic patent law. It is simply an attempt to get away from the conflicting opinions which now prevail in some 11 circuit courts of appeal.

For example, a patent case goes through one circuit, and the same patent may be involved in another circuit, and a directly opposite opinion may be rendered. Many of those who are fighting the cases through are not blessed with too much of this world's goods, and they find themselves with four or five conflicting opinions. If there is anything we ought to seek it is certainly to bring litigation to repose at some point, and not to wear people out by endless circumlocution and endless rounds of litigation. There is nothing in this world that is absolutely just, and we cannot set up a court which is absolutely just; but we have tried to provide a maximum of human justice in one court, with the free and unlimited right of appeal to the Supreme Court through the process of certiorari, direct appeal, review, or even certification by the court to the Supreme Court when questions of law perplex the court. I think the provisions of the bill are wise.

We shall have to determine whether or not we ought to set up a court for that purpose. Personally, I think it is a wise provision, and I think it ought to appeal to lawyers and businessmen. We have had businessmen before the committee, and most of them feel that the bill would be a wise enactment. They are soul-weary as well as financially belabored and bedeviled by having to chase cases through 11 circuit courts of appeals and obtain conflicting opinions from some of them. Lawyers have told us—and it seems true beyond peradventure of doubt—that some courts have a sort of slant or bias. Please do not misunderstand me when I use the term "bias." I am not talking about a bad or vicious attitude of mind. However, some judges are constrained to uphold patents. Other judges are inclined to look at them with a very critical eye and say, "It is our view that a patent ought not to be sustained unless there is evidence of such a convincing character as would be sufficient to hang a man." American businessmen who are the owners of patents are confronted with that sort of oblique business.

We did not report the bill without mature reflection and consideration of the issues involved. The printed hearings are nearly half an inch thick.

Mr. President, I do not propose to press for action on the bill at this time. Under the 5-minute rule I do not now wish to make an issue of the bill on the floor. However, I want my brethren to understand that we reported the bill only because we sincerely felt that it was the part of wisdom and that it was the decent thing to do for businessmen. The law in its present state is a reproach. Certainly good lawyers in this body should be willing to help us find some way out of the morass we have set up in patent law.

A committee, headed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], has recommended the passage of five or six bills, some of which are on the calendar and others of which will later be before the Senate. The bills to which I refer have met the blessing and approval of businessmen. We are now merely trying to make the patent law a simple, workable instrumentality so far as it is humanly possible to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. KING. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island objected to the bill because he thought it should not come up under the 5-minute rule. I think the statement of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] sustains that contention. The bill is evidently very important. I should like to look into the matter more thoroughly and study it. I therefore ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF JUDGES FOR DISABILITY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1282) to extend the privilege of retirement for disability to judges appointed to hold office during good behavior, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in section 3, page 3, line 4, after the words "equal to", to strike out "such proportion of the" and insert "one-half of the annual"; in line 6, after the word "retirement" and the semicolon, to strike out "as the total of his years of service bears to the period of ten years", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any judge or justice of any court of the United States, appointed to hold office during good behavior, who becomes unable because of permanent disability to perform the duties of his office, may retire from regular active service on the bench and the President shall thereupon be authorized to appoint a successor.

SEC. 2. Any district or circuit judge, other than a senior circuit judge, who desires to retire under the provisions of this act shall certify his disability in writing and shall furnish a like certificate made by the senior circuit judge of the judicial circuit in which the court of which he is a member is situated. Any Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, other than the Chief Justice of the United States, who desires to retire under the provisions of this act shall certify his disability in writing and shall furnish a like certificate made by the Chief Justice of the United States. If the Chief Justice of the United States retires under the provisions of this act he need not furnish any certificate in addition to his own. Any judge of the Court of Claims, other than the chief justice, any judge of the United States Customs Court, or any judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, other than the presiding judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, who desires to retire under the provisions of this act shall certify his disability in writing and shall furnish a like certificate made by the chief justice of the Court of Claims if he be a judge of the Court of Claims, or by the presiding judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, if he be a judge of the United States Customs Court or the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Any other judge or justice who desires to retire under the provisions of this act shall certify his disability in writing and shall furnish a like certificate made by the Chief Justice of the United States.

SEC. 3. Any judge or justice who retires under the provisions of this act, after he has served less than 10 years, shall receive annually, in equal monthly installments, during the remainder of his life, a sum equal to one-half of the annual salary he is receiving at the date of retirement; and any judge or justice who retires under the provisions of this act, after he has served 10 years or more, shall receive in like manner during the remainder of his life the salary he is receiving at the date of retirement.

SEC. 4. The term "senior circuit judge," as used in this act, includes the chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. The term "judicial circuit," as used in this act, includes the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill for the RECORD?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I introduced the bill after considerable thought and investigation. It was recommended—in fact, if I remember correctly, drawn—by the Department of Justice. Elaborate hearings were held, and testimony was taken. The hearings were printed. During the hearings the Department of Justice sent a representative to appear before the committee. I had the good judgment to commit the bill to the care of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who held the hearings, and who is familiar with the bill. I shall ask him to be kind enough to make a statement with respect to the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think the purposes of the bill are plainly understood. The bill is occasioned by conditions which exist in several districts in some of the circuits throughout the United States. When judges appointed to the bench for life become totally disabled and are unable to discharge the duties of their office, if the statutory age for retirement has not yet been reached, they are not eligible to retirement under existing law. Most, probably all, these judges are men of very moderate means; they are totally disabled not only from performing the duties of office, but if they retire they have no means, no way of making a living for themselves and their families. I have no criticism of a judge who finding himself in such a position does not retire, for he does exactly as any of us would do under the same circumstances. Nevertheless, that condition is adversely affecting the administration of justice in several districts of the country today.

In order to meet that situation, this bill was drafted, giving to a judge who is totally disabled the privilege of retiring. It does not give him full pay unless he has served the full 10 years, which is the requisite period under the statute.

The disability must be certified by the Chief Justice of the United States, by the senior circuit judge, or by the chief justices of other courts, as the case may be. The bill is amply safeguarded in that respect.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico, is retirement voluntary on the part of the judge?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it is voluntary. If he does retire, though, the President is authorized to appoint a successor. He has to make a certificate himself. It is strictly voluntary; there is nothing compulsory about it.

Mr. GEORGE. It is entirely voluntary on the part of the judge himself?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that is, a judge could not be forced to retire; there is nothing in the bill that would compel a judge to retire. The bill is designed to give a judge the privilege of retiring with some pay when he has not served the full time on the bench which would authorize his retirement under the statute.

Mr. GEORGE. The question I am asking is whether the retirement would be on the judge's own motion?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Or could any pressure be brought to bear on him to compel his retirement?

Mr. HATCH. No; there is nothing in the bill that would enable any pressure to be brought to bear.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. Would it be constitutional to compel retirement?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; I think not. We cannot compel a judge to retire. He is appointed for life, and he may remain in office.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BONE. May I say to the Senator from New Mexico and to the Senate that I have become aware of one or two cases that certainly come within the four corners of a proposed statute of this character. I know of the case of a judge who has served 15, 16, or 18 years and has tripped on life's rugged pathway and found himself a very ill man. Pride in his work and the natural pride which is a part of every human being has kept him on the bench when he has not been able to do a good job because of physical disability. I do not know what is the appropriate thing to do under those circumstances, but it seems to me that this bill which has been presented to us by the Judiciary Committee is probably the best answer to it. I have known judges in my section of the West who should come under such a bill as this. I think the bill is a worthy one.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I want to say in that connection that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], and also the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] have been before the committee and described conditions in their States which make the passage of the bill almost necessary.

Let me say to the Senator from Georgia that if he will read the second section of the bill he will find that it is clearly a voluntary act on the part of the judge. There is no compulsion about it whatever. The pay under 10 years of service is fixed at one-half the salary. After 10 years of service the judge would receive full salary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERNESTINE HUBER NEUHELLER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1998) for the relief of Ernestine Huber Neuheller.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. Does the Senator from Vermont desire to explain the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. If I understand correctly, it is a case where a lady was convicted of a crime and, therefore, an immigration visa was denied?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will have to examine the report in order to state the circumstances. It is very brief. The purpose of the bill is to provide—

That in the administration of the immigration laws, relating to the issuance of immigration visas for admission to the United States for permanent residence and relating to admissions at ports of entry of aliens as immigrants for permanent residence in the United States, that provision of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 875), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (c)), which excludes from admission into the United States "persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude," shall not hereafter be held to apply to Ernestine Huber Neuheller, who is the wife of Fritz Neuheller, an American citizen, on account of a conviction abroad for perjury, the alleged offense having been committed in a civil action where the alien, as a witness, denied for personal reasons having met the defendant, a friend, at a certain time. The appellate court judge reviewing the case considered the alien's action incomprehensible and declared her to be an otherwise truthful, faithful, and decent person in no way immoral or tainted with moral turpitude. If she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws, an immigration visa may be issued and admission granted to Ernestine Huber Neuheller (nee Ernestine Huber) under this act upon application hereafter filed.

Mr. President, evidently the bill seeks to remove a hardship created by what seems to be almost an anomaly—significance being given to a very slight act which did not involve "moral turpitude."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I merely wish to assure the Senator and other Senators on the floor that this bill and the succeeding bill received due consideration at the hands of the committee; representatives of the Department were present; and the committee, as I remember, unanimously reported in favor of the bills.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I notice, however, the Secretary of State says that—

She was an applicant for an immigration visa at the American consulate at Basel, Switzerland, but that since she was convicted in Switzerland of the crime of giving false testimony as a witness in a judicial proceeding, the consul had no other alternative than to refuse the issuance of an immigration visa to her.

If she was convicted "of giving false testimony," was it in regard to her visa or some other matter?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. Mr. President, this is what it was about. The report shows she was a witness in a civil action and for personal reasons——

Mr. McKELLAR. It was not in regard to the visa?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. For personal reasons she denied having met the defendant, a friend, at a certain time. That was all there was to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. Refusal to grant the visa was a violation of the legal maxim de minimis non curat lex.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 2, after line 14, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LATE ENSIGN JOSEPH HESTER PATTERSON, UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up a noncontroversial matter which will take only a minute, so that I may leave to attend a conference on the social-security bill.

There is on the calendar Senate bill 2723, Calendar No. 852. There is also on the calendar a House bill dealing with the same subject, House bill 7052, Calendar No. 861. These are bills to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy. The Senate bill was introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

This young man was the only officer who met his death in the Squalus disaster. He had been notified of his promotion to the rank of lieutenant from ensign, had purchased his uniforms, and every other step had been taken except the actual issuing of the commission, which would have been done within 2 weeks. This bill is to permit a posthumous commission to be issued to him. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be considered and passed, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 7052. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7052) to provide a posthumous advancement in grade for the late Ensign Joseph Hester Patterson, United States Navy, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2723 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HAIM GENISHIER, ALIAS HAIM SATYR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1478) for the relief of Haim Genishier, alias Haim Satyr, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to cancel the outstanding deportation proceedings against Haim Genishier, and the admission of the said Haim Genishier through the port of New York from the steamship Vauban on November 25, 1923, under the name Haim Satyr be declared a legal, permanent admission of the said Haim Genishier to the United States.

SEC. 2. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill comes within the same category that I mentioned a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LENA HENDEL, NEE LENA GOLDBERG

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1328) for the relief of Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the warrant of arrest and the order of deportation against Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg, heretofore issued on the ground that on October 4, 1926, admission to the United States had been fraudulently gained pursuant to the commission of a passport or visa offense which, subsequent to such admission, has heretofore been held by the Attorney General of the United States to be within the purview of "crimes involving moral turpitude" and thereupon Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg, shall hereafter be deemed to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence at New York, N. Y., on October 4, 1926. Any declaration of intention to become a citizen or any petition for citizenship heretofore filed by, or any admission to citizenship ordered and certificate of naturalization heretofore issued to, Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg, which were predicated upon the claim of lawful admission to the United States for permanent residence on October 4, 1926, shall hereafter be deemed valid, unless the original 7-year period of validity of such declaration of intention has heretofore expired or Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg, has heretofore been found otherwise not eligible to such benefit under the naturalization laws.

SEC. 2. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the nonpreference category of the quota during the current year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMIGRATION OF CERTAIN FILIPINOS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4646) to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration, with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill? It seems to be an excellent bill, but it is so long that I cannot go over it. I shall not object to its consideration, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 2, line 5, after the words "United States", to insert "or in the case of a Filipino residing in Hawaii, to a port in that Territory"; in section 2, page 2, line 17, after the words "United States", to insert "or, in the cases of residents of Hawaii, to a port in that Territory"; in section 3, page 3, line 5, after the words "United States", to insert "and in Hawaii"; in line 10, after the word "between", to strike out "any port on the west coast of the United States" and insert "the port of embarkation in the United States or Hawaii"; and in section 7, page 4, line 9, after the word "from", to strike out "the United States, its Territories or possessions", and insert "any State or Territory or the District of Columbia", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any native Filipino residing in any State or Territory or the District of Columbia on the effective date of this act, who desires to return to the Philippine Islands, may apply to the Secretary of Labor, upon such form as the Secretary may prescribe, through any officer of the Immigration Service for the benefits of this act. Upon approval of such application, the Secretary of Labor shall notify such Filipino forthwith, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War that such Filipino is eligible to be returned to the Philippine Islands under the terms of this act. Every Filipino who is so certified shall be entitled, at the expense of the United States to transportation and maintenance from his present residence to a port on the west coast of the United States, or in the case of a Filipino residing in Hawaii, to a port in that Territory, and from such port, to passage and maintenance to the port of Manila, P. I., on either Navy or Army transports, whenever space on such transports is available, or on any ship of United States registry operated by a commercial steamship company which has a contract with the Secretary of Labor as provided in section 2.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts with any railroad or other transportation company, for the transportation from their present residences to a port on the west coast of the United States or, in the cases of residents of Hawaii, to a port in that Territory, of Filipinos eligible under section 1 to receive such transportation, and with any commercial steamship company, controlled by citizens of the United States and operating ships under United States registry, for transportation and maintenance of such Filipinos from such ports to the port of Manila, P. I., at such rates as may be agreed upon between the Secretary and such steamship, railroad, or other transportation company.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this act, to enter into the necessary arrangements with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, to fix the ports on the west coast of the United States and in Hawaii from which any Filipinos shall be transported and the dates upon which transportation shall be available from such ports, to provide for the identification of the Filipinos entitled to the benefits of this act, and to prevent voluntary interruption of the journey between the port of embarkation in the United States or Hawaii and the port of Manila, P. I.

SEC. 4. No Filipino who receives the benefits of this act shall be entitled to return to the United States, its Territories or possessions except as a quota immigrant under the provisions of section 8 (a) (1) of the Philippine Independence Act of March 24, 1934, during the period such section 8 (a) (1) is applicable.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. All amounts so appropriated shall be administered by the Secretary of Labor, and all expenses, including those incurred by the Navy and War Departments, shall be charged thereto.

SEC. 6. No application for the benefits of this act shall be accepted by any officer of the Imimgration Service after December 1, 1940; and all benefits under this act shall finally terminate on December 31, 1940, unless the journey has been started on or before that date, in which case the journey to Manila shall be completed.

SEC. 7. Nothing in this act shall be construed as authority to deport any native of the Philippine Islands, and no Filipino removed from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act shall hereafter be held to have been deported from the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF LABOR AND STIMULATION OF EMPLOYMENT

The bill (S. 409) to protect American labor and stimulate the employment of American citizens on American jobs was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let the bill go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask that this bill be set on the calendar for a day certain, when it may be discussed in the Senate, at a time not more than I week from today.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I object.

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon ask unanimous consent to make this bill a special and continuing order of business 1 week from today, or does he give notice that he will move to do so?

Mr. HOLMAN. I give notice to that effect.

Mr. KING. I should object to unanimous consent being given to make the bill the unfinished business at a certain time.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, there is objection to a unanimous-consent request for the consideration of the bill at that time.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that he may move to take up the bill at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I give notice that I shall move to take up the bill at the earliest possible date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION CHARGES ON UNITED STATES RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6984) to provide a feasible and comprehensive plan for the variable payment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects, to protect the investment of the United States in such projects, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this bill is the result of long negotiations which have been carried on by the Bureau of Reclamation, the National Reclamation Association, the Federal Irrigation Congress, and numerous water users' associations throughout the West.

It will be recalled that beginning with the year 1931, when the agricultural depression became most severe, Congress passed several moratorium laws postponing the obligations for the repayment of construction charges upon all reclamation projects. Full 100-percent moratoria were granted up to and inclusive of the year 1935. In 1936 the blanket moratorium plan was abandoned, and postponement of repayment obligations was granted only to persons who were actually found by the Department to be altogether unable to meet their charges. This plan was followed again in 1937 and 1938.

By authority of the act of August 21, 1937, a special commission was appointed to study the whole problem of reclamation construction repayment. This bill is intended substantially to carry out the recommendations of that commission, which are to be found in House Document No. 673 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, third session.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill does not provide for any more appropriations from the Treasury in regard to these projects?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is not an appropriation bill at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I mean it is not an authorization for appropriations?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The bill does not provide for any additional appropriation; it does not authorize any additional appropriation, and it does not authorize any further moratorium. It is an attempt to place the whole matter on a business basis. It provides for the repayment of construction charges in accordance with a flexible formula based upon the crop returns from the various projects. The amounts to be paid annually are increased in good years and decreased in bad years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that the Department very strongly recommends the bill, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Department is intensely interested in the passage of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. From the beginning it has been the purpose of the Bureau of Reclamation, as well as of the settlers on reclamation projects, to administer these projects as an investment of the public funds, and not as a gift from the Federal Government.

The reclamation fund is made up of the income of the Federal Government derived from the sale of public lands, from royalties and rentals on public-domain leases, and from Federal water-power licenses. As of May 31, 1939, the total accretions to this fund amounted to $202,479,224.11. A bond loan of $25,000,000, which has since been repaid, and collections in the amount of $124,202,096.83, made a grand total for the reclamation fund of $351,681,320.94. Disbursements in addition to the bond repayments amounted to $304,232,091.28, leaving a balance in the fund as of May 31, 1939, of $22,449,229.66.

This balance does not take cognizance of the repayments which have been postponed by reason of the various moratoria. The sum of these is $11,109,561. The repayment of this sum over a period of years is provided for in this bill.

It may be of interest to point out that the total postponements for the year 1937 amounted to $261,689, and the postponements for 1936 to $724,425, whereas for the years 1931 to 1935, inclusive, the lowest postponement for any single year was $1,702,539 in 1935. In other words, it is clear from these figures that the reclamation projects of the United States have been restored to a paying basis.

It would be difficult, however, for the settlers who have been unable to meet the charges for the past 7 or 8 years to do so if Congress did not provide by law an equitable repayment plan. That is the object of this bill.

Repayment contracts now in force are not upon a standard basis. Some were originally drafted to require total repayment in 10 years, some in 20 years, and some in 40 years. This bill places all projects upon the same general standard; but authority is granted to the Secretary in a few special cases to make special contracts. Such contracts, however, are not to become effective until submitted to Congress for its approval.

I ask that the amendments be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "plan", to insert "for an economical and equitable treatment of repayment problems and", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing for United States reclamation projects a feasible and comprehensive plan for an economical and equitable treatment of repayment problems and for variable payments of construction charges which can be met regularly and fully from year to year during periods of decline in agricultural income and unsatisfactory conditions of agriculture as well as during periods of prosperity and good prices for agricultural products, and which will protect adequately the financial interest of the United States in said projects, obligations to pay construction charges may be revised or undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 14, line 4, after the word "would", to strike out "be impracticable" and insert "not be practicable nor provide an economically sound adjustment", so as to read:

SEC. 7. (a) The Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the repayment problems of any existing project contract unit in connection with which, in his judgment, a contract under section 3 or 4 of this act would not be practicable nor provide an economically sound adjustment, and to negotiate a contract which, in his judgment, both would provide fair and equitable treatment of the repayment problems involved and would be in keeping with the general purpose of this act.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 22, line 9, after the words "less than", to strike out "3½" and insert "3"; in line 11, after the word "proper", to insert: "Provided further, That in said sales or leases preference shall be given to municipalities and other public corporations or agencies; and also to cooperatives and other nonprofit organizations financed in whole or in part by loans made pursuant to the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 and any amendments thereof"; and in line 20, after the word "project" to insert: "The provisions of this subsection respecting the terms of sales of electric power and leases of power privileges shall be in addition and alternative to any authority in existing laws relating to particular projects"; so as to read:

(c) The Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts to furnish water for municipal water supply or miscellaneous purposes: Provided, That any such contract either (1) shall require repayment to the United States, over a period of not to exceed 40 years from the year in which water is first delivered for the use of the contracting party, with interest not exceeding the rate of 3½ percent per annum if the Secretary determines an interest charge to be proper, of an appropriate share as determined by the Secretary of that part of the construction costs allocated by him to municipal water supply or other miscellaneous purposes; or (2) shall be for such periods, not to exceed 40 years, and at such rates as in the Secretary's judgment will produce revenues at least sufficient to cover an appropriate share of the annual operation and maintenance cost and an appropriate share of such fixed charges as the Secretary deems proper, and shall require the payment of said rates each year in advance of delivery of water for said year. Any sale of electric power or lease of power privileges, made by the Secretary in connection with the operation of any project or division of a project, shall be for such periods, not to exceed 40 years, and at such rates as in his judgment will produce power revenues at least sufficient to cover an appropriate share of the annual operation and maintenance cost, interest on an appropriate share of the construction investment at not less than 3 percent per annum, and such other fixed charges as the Secretary deems proper: Provided further, That in said sales or leases preference shall be given to municipalities and other public corporations or agencies; and also to cooperatives and other nonprofit organizations financed in whole or in part by loans made pursuant to the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 and any amendments thereof. Nothing in this subsection shall be applicable to provisions in existing contracts, made pursuant to law, for the use of power and miscellaneous revenues of a project for the benefit of users of water from such project. The provisions of this subsection respecting the terms of sales of electric power and leases of power privileges shall be in addition and alternative to any authority in existing laws relating to particular projects. No contract relating to municipal water supply or miscellaneous purposes or to electric power or power privileges shall be made unless, in the judgment of the Secretary, it will not impair the efficiency of the project for irrigation purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee be printed in full in the RECORD, and that there also be printed in the RECORD at this point a table which I send to the desk, showing the status of the reclamation fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report (No. 758) submitted by Mr. O'MAHONEY on July 11, 1939, is as follows:

The Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6984) to provide a feasible and comprehensive plan for the variable payment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects, to protect the investment of the United States in such projects, and for other purposes, having considered the same, hereby report it, with amendments, to the Senate and recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendments referred to are as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "plan", insert the following: "for an economical and equitable treatment of repayment problems and."

Page 14, line 5, strike out the words "be impracticable" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not be practicable nor provide an economically sound adjustment."

Page 22, line 8, by striking the figures "3½" and inserting in lieu thereof "3."

Page 22, line 10, by changing the period after the word "proper" to a colon and inserting thereafter the following: "Provided further, That in said sales or leases preference shall be given to municipalities and other public corporations or agencies; and also to cooperatives and other nonprofit organizations financed in whole or in part by loans made pursuant to the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 and any amendments thereof."

Page 22, line 13, after the word "projects", insert a new sentence as follows: "The provisions of this subsection respecting the terms of sales of electric power and leases of power privileges shall be in addition and alternative to any authority in existing laws relating to particular projects."

H. R. 6984 as passed by the House, except for a few amendments, is in the form of H. R. 6773, which is a companion bill of S. 2591. These companion bills, which were transmitted to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House by the Acting Secretary of the Interior on June 9, are the product of 37 years' experience in the irrigation and reclamation of arid and semiarid lands in the West under the basic Reclamation Act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), and of the investigation and report on repayment problems provided for by the Congress in the act of August 21, 1937 (50 Stat. 737). The Commission created by this 1937 act reported to the Congress on May 18, 1938, and its report was printed as House Document No. 673, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session.

The committee conducted several hearings on S. 2591 and heard testimony given by a number of representatives of water users and irrigation districts. After full consideration of S. 2591 and H. R. 6984, which contains the amendments made by the House, the committee finds that the proposed legislation is adequate to provide flexibility in the annual construction charges under repayment contracts so that the repayment obligations of a reclamation project each year will move up or down contemporaneously with increases or decreases in the crop returns realized by the farmers. The other provisions of the proposed legislation provide for simplification and economies in administration of the reclamation program and provide a sound basis for undertaking new construction.

With one exception the amendments made by the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation in H. R. 6773 and reflected in H. R. 6984 do not involve any substantial change and are acceptable to this committee.

One of the amendments to H. R. 6773 adopted by the House committee on June 24 was: "Page 6, line 22, strike out the word 'conclusive' before the word 'judgment' and strike out the word 'conclusive' and 'conclusively' wherever it may appear in the bill." Neither the printed hearings nor the printed report of the House committee gives any explanation or reason for this amendment. The Senate committee therefore has been compelled to analyze the effect, if any, of this amendment. If this amendment to H. R. 6773, reflected in H. R. 6984, were made to S. 2591, the word "conclusive" or "conclusively" would be stricken at the following places: Page 5, line 12; page 6, line 22; page 7, lines 12 and 23; page 8, lines 7 and 15; page 9, line 11; page 12, line 21; page 15, lines 9, 18, and 19; page 21, line 19; page 22, line 3; page 23, lines 8 and 21; and page 26, line 11. Also on page 17, line 6, a period would be placed after the words "United States" and the remaining words of the sentence would be stricken; and on page 18, line 15, the words "whose determination shall be conclusive" would be stricken.

The Senate committee, after carefully considering each of these deletions, is of the opinion that none of them changes the effect of the language of the proposed legislation. In each instance S. 2591, and likewise H. R. 6984, provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix a repayment period, schedule installments which in his judgment are proper, determine crop returns or normal returns, or similarly make determinations, render decisions or exercise his judgment. The proposed legislation calls for his determinations, decisions, and judgments and it is clear that they are to be conclusve even though the words "conclusive" or "conclusively" do not appear in the language used.

The words, if inserted, would add nothing to the language of H. R. 6984 in which they do not appear. Since the words are mere surplusage and since their deletion does not, therefore, diminish the conclusiveness of the determinations, decisions, and judgments required of the Secretary, the committee has no objection to the form of H. R. 6984 in which these words do not appear.

In the hearings on S. 2591 representatives of projects in Colorado suggested the amendments above outlined for pages 1 and 14 of the bill. While the committee is of the opinion that the scope of authority granted by sections 1 and 7 of H. R. 6984 (which are identical with the same sections of S. 2591) is adequate without the amendments suggested on behalf of the Colorado projects, since the Secretary under section 7 can investigate any repayment problems which in his judgment require treatment by a special contract and can negotiate and, with the consent of Congress, make effective a special contract dealing with those problems. The amendments, however, seem to clarify the purpose of the bill and, therefore, have been adopted by the committee.

The provision that interest at not less than 3½ percent per annum shall be figured on power in the determination of power rates appears to the committee to be too high. It may well be that with respect to a number of projects interest should be figured at 3½ percent or perhaps at an even higher rate. However, as a "floor" below which the interest rate cannot go 3½ percent is considered excessive. Accordingly the committee has adopted an amendment revising the minimum rate to 3 percent.

The House committee amended section 9 (c) of H. R. 6984 by striking from that part of section 9 (c) which deals with the disposal of surplus power available on reclamation projects the proviso which reads:

"Provided further, That in said sales or leases preferences shall be given to municipalities and other public corporations or agencies and to cooperatives."

This proviso is considered by the committee to be in accord with the policy of Congress first incorporated into law in the act of April 16, 1906 (34 Stat. 116, 117), and reenacted in the act of February 24, 1911 (36 Stat. 930). The proviso in question does not change this long-continued policy under which surplus power from reclamation projects has been disposed of to the mutual satisfaction of privately and publicly owned utilities and without any controversy over the power questions which are such live issues in other parts of the country. It is therefore deemed appropriate that this proviso be included; and the committee has adopted an amendment to H. R. 6984, accordingly. So amended, section 9 (c) of H. R. 6984 will read the same as section 9 (c) of S. 2591.

The amendment recommended to be inserted on page 22, line 13, is designed merely to prevent the possibility of a repeal by implication of a special statute under which the Salt River project in Arizona and certain other projects operate. It has not been intended by this bill to alter the present arrangements on these projects, and the amendment is merely a clarifying one.

The letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, which follows, sets forth his views on the proposed legislation and contains a full explanation of the provisions of the bill.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 9, 1939.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Transmitted herewith is a draft of proposed legislation to provide a feasible and comprehensive plan for the variable payment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects, to protect the investment of the United States in such projects, and for other purposes.

The enclosed draft of bill, for the most part, deals with the repayment of the construction costs of United States reclamation projects. This subject was investigated and reported on by the Commission created by the Congress in the act of August 21, 1937 (50 Stat. 737). The Commission's report was made to Congress on May 18, 1938, and was printed as House Document No. 673, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session. The report of the Commission has been carefully studied by this Department and has been given consideration by various organizations of western irrigation interests. This Department has considered the recommendations of the Commission and the comments thereon made by various irrigation interests, in the light of the repayment policy established by the Congress when it created the reclamation fund and initiated the Federal irrigation program by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388). The product of this departmental consideration is the enclosed draft of proposed legislation which I recommend for prompt and favorable consideration by the Congress.

The bill, if enacted, would provide legislative authority for modifying existing contracts in accordance with an equitable and flexible plan for the repayment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects. The proposed plan provides for variation in the annual payments of construction charges in accordance with variations in the water users' ability to pay, without detriment to the established repayment policy that underlies the existing reclamation laws.

Due to the fact that the existing contracts for repayment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects are of a great variety, having been made under several different acts of Congress, it has been possible to prepare a draft of bill of general application only by resort to relatively technical and complicated language.

In the following paragraphs the salient points of the proposed legislation are explained.

Section 3 would provide for a type of slight modification of existing contracts which is desired on several projects. There are a number of repayments contracts which still call for repayment of construction charges on the basis of definite repayment periods of less than 40 years, although a 40-year period has been recognized as proper since the act of May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 636). Many of the water users obligated under these contracts need and desire only such modification of their existing repayment plans as would provide for the payment of the unaccrued balances of their construction charges on the basis of longer definite repayment periods. Section 3 would authorize such modifications, subject to the limitations that any such longer definite period for the payment of the unaccrued construction charges shall not exceed the basis of a 40-year period, and that in no event shall the unexpired part of any such longer period exceed double the number of remaining years in which the unaccrued charges would become due and payable under the existing obligations. For example, if an existing obligation is to pay construction charges, amounting in all to $100, on the basis of a 20-year period with equal annual installments, the charges each year are $5. On the basis of a 40-year period the charges each year would be $2.50. If under the existing obligation the unaccrued charges, including those deferred under moratoria acts, were $25, and if the remainder of the original repayment period as extended by moratoria were 5 years, then under section 3 the longer definite period for payment of the $25 balance could not exceed 10 years.

Section 4 would provide a comprehensive plan for the annual variation of payments of construction charges in response to variations in the water users' ability to pay, a so-called normal and percentages repayment plan. Under a contract entered into pursuant to section 4 the following-described steps would be taken:

The unaccrued construction charges on the lands to be covered by the new contract would be merged in a total and general repayment obligation of the organization making the contract. These unaccrued construction charges are payable at present under a variety of forms of obligations. There are still some individual water-right applications and these do not have the same repayment periods, even though they relate to the same project. This is due to the fact that water-right applications may have been made in each year of perhaps a 5- to 20-year period during which the numerous tracts of land on a project were progressively put under irrigation. On other projects where the construction charges are the primary obligation of an irrigation district or other form of water users' organization there may be several contracts with the district or organization bearing different dates. All of such charges covered by a new contract would be merged and the total general obligation of the contracting organization would be arranged in installments on a schedule determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be an equitable and practicable consolidation of the existing obligations. Determination of this schedule might involve, in some cases, an appropriate rearrangement of charges. If, for example, a district received a moratorium as to 50 percent of the charges due and payable for the year 1936 and received similar relief for the year 1937 the two deferments might be combined in the schedule established under section 4, making up a full installment for one of the years on the schedule.

In determining a schedule of installments for unaccrued construction charges payable under contracts entered into pursuant to the so-called Fact Finders' Act, act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 672, 701), an amount of gross crop returns, for the purpose of determining the schedule of installments, would be fixed and utilized. For example, if $45 were the unaccrued balance per acre under such a contract, and if $30 per acre were fixed as the gross crop returns per acre for the purpose of the determination, then 5 percent of $30, or $1.50 per acre per annum, would be the annual installment, and would be so scheduled over a period of 30 years. Each year the installment of $1.50 per acre would be increased or decreased under the normal and percentages plan.

On projects where existing repayment contracts are in part under the Fact Finders' Act, and in part under other acts of the Federal reclamation laws, the unaccrued charges could be merged into two general obligations, one for each type of contract.

Section 4 (c) would provide for taking each year a census of annual gross crop returns per acre of the area in cultivation, a procedure which is now followed on practically all projects, and would provide that the normal returns for each year shall be determined. The normal returns would be determined by averaging the 10 best years out of 13 years, using the year for which the determination is made and the preceding 12 years. The average would be weighted; that is, consideration would be given to annual variations in the areas cultivated. By eliminating the 3 lowest years of the 13-year period, the normal returns used in the plan as a basis would not reflect, to the disadvantage of the water users, those years in which because of adverse climatic conditions or market prices the gross crop returns were extremely low.

Each year the contracting organization would be required to pay as construction charges the amount of the installment for the particular year as stated on the schedule of installments determined under section 4 (b), increased or decreased in accordance with the normal and percentages plan. The amount of any such increase or decrease would be determined as follows: The percent of the normal returns for the year involved by which the annual returns of that year are greater or less than the nomal returns would be determined, and for each percent that the annual returns are greater or less than the normal returns there would be a 2 percent increase or decrease in the installment for that year. For purpcses of illustation, if the normal returns for a project contract unit in the year 1944 should be $30, and the annual crop returns of that year should be $20, then the annual returns being 33⅓ percent less than the normal returns there would be a 66⅔-percent reduction in the installment of the organization's obligation scheduled for that year. If the organization's installment for 1944 were $45,000, under the normal and percentages plan only $15,000 would be required to be paid as construction charges for that year. Under the provisions of section 4 (e) the unaccrued balance of the installment—that is, $30,000—would be included in those subsequent installments of the organization's obligation to which the amount could be added equitably, or would be established as an installment or parts of installments of years subsequent to the last year for which an installment was provided on the schedule fixed under section 4 (b). However, by reason of express limitation in section 4 (e) an installment could not thereunder be revised to or established in an amount exceeding the largest installment determined under section 4 (b). In a year when the crop returns were in excess of the normal returns for such year the amount of the installment would be increased under this same procedure. There would be contract provisions for offsetting increases and decreases in the installments.

Section 4 (g) would require payment of an additional charge of 3 percent per annum on the balance of the organization's obligation which has not, by the last year for which an installment was scheduled under section 4 (b), accrued under the normal and percentage plan. The payment of this additional charge would offset any detriment to the reclamation fund in the event that, under the normal and percentages plan, installments are decreased more than they are increased.

Section 5 would authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to require that contracts entered into pursuant to the new legislation provide for collection and payment of construction charges on dates substantially contemporaneous with the dates when water users receive their crop returns. Such provisions are necessary to the most effective functioning of any repayment plan. Some existing repayment contracts permit a considerable lag between the time when crop returns are received and the time when construction charges must be paid. In order to prevent inequitable pyramiding of installments when the rearrangement of dates becomes effective, the Secretary would be permitted to provide necessary deferments.

Under section 6 provision would be made for proper accounting, for protection of the irrigation works and the farm lands in the project, and for penalties on delinquencies.

The repayment problems in connection with some projects are unique. Such projects may need specialized amendatory contracts and authority to negotiate them would be granted by section 7. This section expressly provides, however, that the Secretary of the Interior shall not execute any such special contract unless and until approval of the proposed contract has been given by act of Congress.

Classification and reclassification of farm lands on the projects is a matter that has been of concern for several years. The commission created by the act of August 21, 1937, recommended careful consideration of this subject. The land-classification problems that merit consideration are rooted in a variety of factual situations. Therefore, the most feasible method of handling such problems is to provide for classifications and reclassifications on projects where such work apparently is justified and to have reports and recommendations, based on such work, made to the Congress. The water-users' organizations should bear half the cost of such work, and the other half should be borne by the United States. No adjustment of any repayment contract should be made by reason of any such classification or reclassification, except pursuant to an act of Congress. Section 8, providing for classifications and reclassifications, has been drafted accordingly.

Section 9 relates to the construction of new projects, new divisions of projects, and new supplemental works on projects. The provisions of this section would require, as a condition precedent to the authorization of any such construction or to the expenditure of moneys therefor, findings by the Secretary of the Interior as to any appropriate allocations of the estimated costs to irrigation, power, and miscellaneous purposes and a report thereon submitted by him to the President and the Congress. Such allocations for flood control or navigation as the Secretary of the Interior might find to be proper, on consultation with the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, would be permitted. Any such construction would be deemed authorized by this section only if the total amount of the allocations made for the above-mentioned purposes were equal to the estimated cost of construction. The provisions of this section are substantially in accordance with recent special acts of Congress relating to multiple-purpose projects constructed by the Bureau of Reclamation and would give effect to sound public policy. They recognize the widespread and multiple benefits derived from construction under the reclamation program and provide for an equitable and more widespread distribution of the costs of those benefits.

Section 9 would provide also for return to the United States of the costs allocated by the Secretary of the Interior to irrigation, power, and miscellaneous purposes. The contracts covering return of the costs allocated to irrigation could be made, in general, on either of the alternative plans provided in sections 3 and 4 for existing projects.

The provisions of sections 10 to 14, inclusive, would permit more economical and orderly construction and operation and maintenance of reclamation projects than is possible under existing laws.

In order to allow time for negotiating and consummating modification of existing contracts, section 17 (a) would permit modification of such contracts under sections 3 and 4 of the legislation for 5 years from the date of enactment. As a temporary measure to permit needed relief pending negotiation of such amendatory contracts, section 17 (b) would extend for 5 years the authority of the Secretary of the Interior which has been granted by the act of May 31, 1939 (Public, No. 97, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), which authorizes further relief to water users on United States and Indian reclamation projects.

The other sections and provisions of the enclosed draft of proposed legislation are clearly self-explanatory. It will be noted that the draft makes no provision for Indian reclamation projects. This omission is because existing acts of Congress, the act of July 1, 1932 (47 Stat. 564), and the act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1803), are deemed to contain adequate authority for comprehensive consideration and adjustment of the repayment problems on Indian projects. There are at present pending before the Congress several bills that are the product of administrative action taken under the acts referred to above.

The proposed legislation is consonant with the repayment policy that underlies the Federal reclamation program. If enacted, it will provide the flexibility that is necessary in order to vary payments of construction charges so that they can be met regularly and fully from year to year during periods of decline in agricultural income and unsatisfactory conditions of agriculture as well as during periods of prosperity and good prices for agricultural products. It is a natural result of the legislative and administrative experience accumulated in the 37 years since initiation of the Federal reclamation program in 1902. In accordance with the congressional direction given in the act of August 21, 1937, it would, if enacted, bring the general body of Federal reclamation laws into accord with the present-day conditions and requirements. It is urgently needed, and I recommend strongly that it be enacted.

I am advised by the Bureau of the Budget that the proposed legislation would not be in conflict with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY SLATTERY,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

JOHN A. FARRELL

The bill (S. 1977) for the relief of John A. Farrell was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to (1) permit John A. Farrell to withdraw the final proof made by him upon his homestead entry Great Falls 076763, (2) rescind the cancelation of such entry, (3) restore such entry to a pending status, and (4) extend for 3 years from the date of enactment of this act the period during which said John A. Farrell may submit final proof with respect to compliance with residence requirements applicable to such entry.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT LAWS

The bill (S. 2689) to amend section 33 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of this bill. Does it refer to infringement? If so, why is the language used "as conditions precedent to exclusion of any work in which copyright is claimed"?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I shall be glad to explain the bill for the benefit of the Senator from Vermont and others.

This bill is purely administrative. Under existing law the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General are charged with the duty of prohibiting the importation of piratical works on which copyrights are held by Americans. Frequently American-copyrighted books, pictures, and other things are reproduced abroad and shipped into the United States. It is very difficult, however, for the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General to administer the law at present, for the reason that there is only one Catalog of Copyrights, which is apparently indexed in a way that is not suitable to ready reference by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, and it has become almost impossible, in using this catalog, to discharge the duty imposed on them by existing law of keeping out these piratical works.

The pending bill merely provides that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General may make such rules and regulations as will compel any author or copyright owner to file with the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate that he owns the copyright and has complied with the copyright laws, in order that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General may compile their own index, or catalog, for the purpose of excluding piratical works from abroad. If an author does not file such a certificate, then to that extent the existing law is amended so that he is not protected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I understand the explanation, the language to which I called attention means "as conditions precedent to exclusion of any work in which copyright is claimed" by others than the importer. In other words, as I read the bill, I first thought that the claim referred to was the claim of the importer, but now I understand from the explanation made by the distinguished Senator from Idaho that it means something else, that is that the claim is by others than the importer. Is that correct?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Yes; it is by the copyright owner.

Mr. AUSTIN. Assume that the copyright owner is the importer, what then?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. He could not be. The copyright owner in this country is imposed upon when a work which he has copyrighted is reproduced abroad and is smuggled in.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does not the Senator recognize that there can be such a condition that the valid owner of a copyright is the importer?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, then it would not be a piratical work. Then there would be no duty on the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postmaster General to prevent the importation.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that, but we would have confusion, would we not, because there would be someone in the United States also claiming title to the copyright. I suggest to the Senator that he consider adding words which would make clear what the sentence means, namely, the words, "by others than the importer."

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I see the point of the Senator from Vermont. The bill was carefully prepared by the attorneys of the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department; but I have no objection, if the Senator feels that there may be some lack of clarity in the bill, to having it go over for further consideration.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber, and I did not hear the objection raised by the Senator from Vermont. Will he be kind enough to restate it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I wish to repeat what the Senator from Idaho has stated, that this is merely an administrative matter. The counsel for both departments, facing the vexatious problems they have in ascertaining what is what in this vast and illimitable field, are trying to have some orderly procedure set up.

Mr. AUSTIN. The subject matter of the bill is a copyrighted article of a certain class or kind, namely, a copyrighted article, the copyright on which is claimed by others than the importer, if the explanation of the bill is to be followed; but it does not so provide, and I merely suggest that certain words be added.

Mr. BONE. It refers to the copyright proprietor.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the confusion. Who is the copyright proprietor?

Mr. BONE. The man who owns the copyright. He is the only one who is really injured.

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose an importer owns the copyright, and a person here claims the copyright also. If this is not cleared up to take care of controversies over copyrights, it is of no benefit at all.

Mr. BONE. Of course, we have merely done what the departments have suggested out of the wisdom of their ablest legal advisers.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. If the Senator will permit me, this bill merely requires the owner of the copyright, the proprietor of the copyright, whether he be importer or anyone else, to file evidence with the Department, in the form of a certificate, that he does own a certain copyright. If he files such a certificate, then the departments will undertake to enforce the duties now imposed upon them by the law, and can do so effectively, because they will prepare a catalog. I do not quite understand the Senator's objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not objected.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I do not mean that the Senator objected; I refer to the Senator's query.

Mr. AUSTIN. When I first read this phrase, "as conditions precedent to exclusion of any work in which copyright is claimed" I interpreted it to mean by the importer. That is the way I construed it. Perhaps there are others equally dumb, and instead of clarification we might have confusion growing out of the amendment.

Mr. BONE. The enforcing officers, who are charged under the general statute with the duty of attempting to exclude foreign piratical matter, suggested this language as sufficiently broad to protect American authors. What we are trying to do is to protect Americans from the influx of piratical stuff, and if the language is not sufficiently broad, they can come to us later and ask us to do something else.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is not a question of broadness at all; it is a question of confusion.

Mr. BONE. I do not like to sit in judgment on departmental lawyers who say this is what they want, since it is purely administrative.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest that the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Idaho, Do both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General approve the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. As a matter of fact, they sent it to us.

Mr. BONE. The Departments sent the bill to the Congress with an apostolic blessing and said this would give them the law wherewith to protect American authors.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have great respect for the departments and for the judgment of their counsel, but I ask that the bill go over on account of my lack of judgment. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. I would not want the RECORD to show that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

DETENTION OF ALIENS ORDERED DEPORTED

The bill (H. R. 5643) to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States otherwise is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final, to authorize such detention orders in certain cases, to provide places for such detention, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word about this bill. It was reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, of which I am a member; and lest the reporting of the bill and its appearance on the calendar might indicate that there was unanimous action by the Committee on the Judiciary, I wish to say on behalf of myself and for other members of the committee who did not happen to be present on the day when the bill was reported that this is by no means the unanimous action of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. Personally, I feel that it is a very vicious bill; certainly it can never pass by unanimous consent, and I hope it will never pass in any way.

Ostensibly the bill is a reasonable measure, providing as to certain classes of alien criminals who have served terms in prison in punishment for crimes which they have committed in this country, and are subject to deportation, if it develops that the country to which they should be deported will not receive them, they may be continued in confinement. Under the terms of the bill a man who has committed an offense against our laws may serve the full penalty of imprisonment provided by the law, and then remain in prison for the remainder of his life because he happens to be an alien and subject to deportation and the country to which he should be deported will not receive him. I am unalterably opposed to the bill; but I understand it has already been objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 105 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 186), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I assume this bill does not call for the appointment of a judge, and does not create a new judicial district. Under that assumption I have no objection, but if it should appear that a new judicial district is to be created or a new judge is to be appointed, I shall ask for reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The motion was agreed to.

LOUIS SIMONS

The bill (S. 2252) for the relief of Louis Simons was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Louis Simons, of Hampton Beach, N. JESSE CLAUD BRANSON

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000" and insert: "That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jesse Claud Branson, of Kansas City, Mo., the sum of $3,000. Said sum shall be in full settlement of his claim against the United States on account of damages sustained by him when he was injured and his automobile damaged by a United States rural mail carrier's automobile in a collision at the intersection of a side road with United States Route No. 50, about 2 miles east of Walton, Kans., on April 29, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEESBURG WELDING & GARAGE CO.

The bill (S. 2289) for the relief of the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wyoming to explain the bill and to state whether it provides a direct appropriation or merely an authorization.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay. Does the Senator want me to explain the bill?

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the recommendation was adverse; that the matter ought to be submitted to the Court of Claims. That the Comptroller did not favor a direct appropriation.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. KING. There were so many conflicting circumstances that it was believed the matter should be adjudicated rather than that Congress should assume to pass a measure recognizing the validity of the claim.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I fear the Senator has some other bill in mind. I will explain the bill if the Senator from Utah desires.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the Senator do so.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The W. P. A. was carrying on some work in Florida, and the superintendent in charge of the work requested the Leesburg Welding & Garage Co. to make some repairs on cars. In the files of the committee are each one of the orders for the repairs. There is a large number of them. They total about $1,100. The Department finds that the work was done and the repairs were furnished, but the difficulty was that the superintendent who ordered the repairs did not have the legal authority to do so, and he proceeded to act in ignorance. No steps were taken to advertise the work that was being done from day to day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. KING. The report reads in part as follows:

The record is such that it is impossible to determine whether the services and materials were in fact rendered and furnished as alleged, and if so rendered and furnished, the reasonable value thereof. In such circumstances I am unable to recommend favorable consideration of the proposed bill.

The character of the claim is such that it could be presented to the United States Court of Claims or the United States district court for the district in which the claimant company is located; and in view of the absence of official record as to the facts involved, it would seem that the claimant should be left to establish its claim by appropriate judicial proceedings.

That is the report signed by Fred H. Brown, Comptroller General of the United States. In view of that statement made by the Comptroller, I feel disposed to ask that the measure go over.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If the Senator will yield a moment further. The work was performed at the direction of the superintendent, and it was performed under the Works Progress Administration, and the Works Progress Administration is the Bureau which knows about the merits of the matter. It was all predicated at the start on the fact that this official did not have the authority to act, but he did so out of ignorance. The Works Progress Administration recommend the enactment of the measure in such amount as Congress may deem appropriate. The items themselves are not in dispute, so that we are in the situation that, knowing that there was a legal difficulty in the way, the Works Progress Administration finds that the work was ordered in good faith, and the work was performed, and there is no question about the value of the services rendered. Then we find this legal difficulty. In my judgment the Accounting Office has it only within its jurisdiction to say that there was no legal authority for the bill. There was no legal authority for the performance of the work, but it was all done in good faith, and therefore the committee and the W. P. A. recommended that the bill be paid.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, there is no question about the Government owing the amount in question. I ask the Senator from Utah not to press his objection. The close of the session is near at hand. The debt is an honest debt, and I see no reason why the Government should not pay it. The committee has reported the measure favorably. It has heard the testimony. I ask the Senator from Utah if he will please withdraw his objection, and let this honest debt be paid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that is a very stirring appeal. Fortunately, we have in the various departments men of character and ability. One of them is former Senator Fred H. Brown, who is now Comptroller General of the United States. He states that from the record it is impossible to determine whether the services and materials were in fact rendered or furnished as alleged, and he states that the character of the claim is of such a nature, so indefinite, that it ought to go to a judicial tribunal for the purpose of determining the validity of the claim. It seems to me it places Senators in rather an awkward position. They must determine whether to accept the recommendation of committees which perhaps did not have all the facts before them which some of the departments may have had, in order to reach the conclusions they submit.

I ask that the bill go over, and I will talk to the Senator further, and at the next call of the calendar I shall not object further to consideration of the bill. I desire to communicate with Mr. Brown or his assistants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, earlier in the day the Senate passed Senate bill 2557, being Calendar No. 794, which relates to the time of holding court in the northern district of Texas. The matter is a simple one. Since the passage of the Senate bill an identical House bill, H. R. 6672, has come over from the House. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate bill 2557 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. I now ask that House bill 6672 be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representaitves.

The bill (H. R. 6672) to amend the act entitled "An act to create a new division of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas," approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 747), was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask that the Senate bill 2557 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2557 is indefinitely postponed.

FRANK M. CROMAN

The bill (H. R. 3614) for the relief of Frank M. Croman was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT PRIVILEGES FOR RESERVE OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 6070) to amend section 5 of the act of April 3, 1939 (Public, No. 18, 76th Cong.), was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. On April 3, 1939, the Congress passed an act giving Reserve officers, after they had been called to service for more than 30 days, the same retirement privileges that were available to Regular Army officers. On April 20 the President sent a message to the Congress asking us to make an exemption of Reserve officers who were serving in the C. C. C. camps. That is what the bill does. The President gave as his reason that Reserve officers serving in C. C. C. camps were practically in civilian service, and that they were not doing Regular Army work. So far as I know, there is no objection whatever to the bill.

The President wants it, the Reserve officers want it, and everyone else wants it.

Mr. KING. As I understand, the bill places such Reserve officers in the status of civilian employees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct insofar as retirement is concerned.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The bill effects a saving to the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It does.

Mr. KING. If it does, we should pass it.

COPYRIGHT REGISTRATION OF COMMERCIAL PRINTS AND LABELS

The bill (H. R. 153) to transfer jurisdiction over commercial prints and labels, for the purpose of coyright registration, to the Register of Copyrights was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the bill effects a purpose which I think has been approved by every Register of Copyrights and every Commissioner of Patents for many years. It has had the approval of the American Bar Association, the Brookings Institution, and other institutions interested in public affairs. All the bill seeks to do is to provide for the registration of copyrights and labels by the Register of Copyrights instead of by the Commissioner of Patents. As I understand, back in 1870 it was provided that copyrights be registered in the Library of Congress. The Library of Congress soon outgrew the space available, and in 1874 the Patent Office became the repository of these registrations.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the only change made is that jurisdiction over copyright registration is transferred to the Register of Copyrights.

Mr. WHITE. That is the only substantial change.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after "June 30", to strike out "1939" and insert "1940", so as to make the section read:

That effective at the close of business of June 30, 1940, section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the law relating to patents, trademarks, and copyrights," approved June 18, 1874 (17 U. S. C. 63), is hereby repealed, but all original or renewal copyrights effected thereunder shall continue in full force and effect for the balance of the respective unexpired terms, subject to all the rights and remedies afforded by existing copyright law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 5, after the words "articles of", to strike out "manufacture" and insert "merchandise", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. Section 5 (k) of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, is hereby amended to read: "(k) Prints and pictorial illustrations, including prints or labels used for articles of merchandise."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 2, line 10, after the word "of", to strike out "manufacture" and insert "merchandise"; in line 12, after "June 30", to strike out "1939" and insert "1940"; in line 16, after "June 30", to strike out "1939" and insert "1940"; and in line 19, after the word "applicants.", to insert: "There shall be paid for registering a claim of copyright in any such print or label not a trademark $¢, which sum shall cover the expense of furnishing a certificate of such registration, under the seal of the Copyright Office, to the claimant of copyright", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That commencing July 1, 1939, the Register of Copyrights is charged with the registration of claims to copyright properly presented, in all prints and labels published in connection with the sale or advertisement of articles of merchandise, including all claims to copyright in prints and labels pending in the Patent Office and uncleared at the close of business June 30, 1940. All such pending applications and all fees which have been submitted or paid to or into the Patent Office for such pending applications, and all funds deposited and at the close of business June 30, 1940, held in the Patent Office to be applied to copyright business in that Office, shall be returned by the Commissioner of Patents to the applicants. There shall be paid for registering a claim of copyright in any such print or label not a trade-mark $6, which sum shall cover the expense of furnishing a certificate of such registration, under the seal of the Copyright Office to the claimant of copyright.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 2, line 25, after "July 1", to strike out "1939" and insert in lieu thereof "1940", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. Subsisting copyrights originally registered in the Patent Office prior to July 1, 1940, under the provisions of law repealed by section 1 hereof, shall be subject to renewal in behalf of the proprietor upon application made to the Register of Copyrights within 1 year prior to the expiration of the original term of 28 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, when the reorganization bill was under consideration there were certain foreign officers in the Department of Commerce known as commercial attachés. There were some in the Department of Agriculture. All those have now been transferred into the State Department. The object of the bill is to allow them to have credit, under the civil-service rules, for the time they served in other departments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to me the purpose of the bill is entirely worthy. I have not had time to read the bill, but I am wondering if there is anything in the bill which provides for the adjustment of salary allowances?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; there is not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the bill relate only to retirement?

Mr. PITTMAN. It relates only to retirement. It allows credit for service in other departments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the bill is worthy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. Does the bill continue in the service of the Government persons who have been in the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Commerce in fields where it is now deemed unnecessary to maintain representatives?

Mr. PITTMAN. No. The bill merely permits the employees to obtain credit for service in other departments.

Mr. KING. It is not intended, then, to blanket into the State Department a large number of persons whose services may not be needed?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it is not.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that that completes the bills on the printed calendar.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the able Senator from Kentucky stated that when we had considered the bills on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 755, and proceeded to the end of the calendar, we would then start at the beginning of the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not understand the Senator's statement.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the Senator from Kentucky said that when we concluded with the bills on the calendar, commencing with Order of Business 755, we would start with the beginning of the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I so stated.

MARKERS FOR CERTAIN GRAVES

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is a bill which was reported from the Military Affairs Committee this morning which is not on the printed calendar. Similar Senate bills, which I have introduced, have been twice reported from the committee previously and have twice passed the Senate. The House has now passed a bill on the same subject. The House bill has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs and reported favorably without amendment. I ask that the bill may be considered at this time, despite the fact that it is not on the printed calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 985) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certain markers for certain graves was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of existing law, the Secretary of War is directed to furnish a flat stone grave marker, a standard flat bronze grave marker, or an upright stone grave marker or headstone for the grave of any deceased person for which the Secretary of War is authorized to furnish a marker or headstone. Either of the above shall be furnished at the option of the relative or representative of the deceased war veteran: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall furnish the upright stone marker authorized by section 4877 of the Revised Statutes for cemeteries under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War.

CONSIDERATION OF BRIDGE BILLS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, today I understand the Committee on Commerce has reported 28 bridge bills to which there is no objection. It would save considerable expense in printing if we could have those bills considered and passed now, because there is no objection to them. They simply grant permission to build bridges. I ask unanimous consent, before beginning the call of the calendar at the beginning, that the bridge bills to which reference has been made be now considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, before we pass 28 bridge bills, without even knowing what they are, I should like to know how much money they will cost the Federal Treasury and what the bridges are.

Mr. BARKLEY. They involve the expenditure of no money on the part of the Federal Government. They simply permit other private citizens or corporations to build bridges across navigable streams. They are in the usual form of bridge bills.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this matter came up in the Commerce Committee this morning, of which I am ranking minority member. It was voted unanimously to report the bills. They involve no Federal expense whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bridge bills en bloc?

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I do not think that should be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not ask that they be considered and passed en bloc. I asked that they be considered now, and acted upon, so as to save the expense of having them printed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the bridge bills referred to by him be considered at this time?

Mr. BARKLEY. That they be taken up, one at a time, and considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FRANKLIN C. RICHARDSON

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, a few moments ago when Calendar No. 800, Senate bill 2366, for the relief of Franklin C. Richardson was reached, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked that it go over. Since that time the Senator from Utah has had an opportunity to examine the bill, and it is my understanding he has now no objection to its present consideration. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2366) for the relief of Franklin C. Richardson, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments in line 5, after the word "authorize", to strike out "and directed"; and in line 11, after the word "reenlistment", to insert "Provided, That he meets the other requirements for reenlistment in the Army", so as to make the bill read:

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 856, Senate bill 21. This bill was called a short time ago and was passed over on the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. Since that time I have spoken to the Senator from Utah and I understand that he now has no objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 21) relating to the citizenship of Harry Ray Smith, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration, with amendments on page 1, after line 2, to strike out:

That in the administration of any laws of the United States, Harry Ray Smith, of Sweetgrass, Mont., a native-born citizen of the United States, who was suspended from his position in the Department of Labor pending a determination of his citizenship status on the assumption that he lost his citizenship while a minor by reason of the naturalization of his father as a citizen of Canada, shall be held and considered to have been a citizen of the United States since May 17, 1926.

On page 2, at the beginning of line 1, to strike out "Sec. 2. The", and insert "That the"; in the same line, after the word "is", to strike out "authorized and directed" and to insert "authorized, in her discretion,"; in line 3, after the word "employee," to strike out "the said"; in the same line, after the name "Smith", to insert "of Sweetgrass, Mont.", so as to make the bill read:

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk proceed to call bills on the calendar now from the beginning of the calendar up to the point where the Senate began the consideration of the calendar today.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) providing for a Committee on Civil Aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be pased over.

INDIAN MEASURES PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over; and let all the Indian bills go over. There are a number of them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Has objection been made to a block of bills on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that the Senator from Utah objected to all the Indian bills.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a number of these bills have been considered by a regular standing committee of the Senate. Later on, I understand, the bills were referred to some Department, and they have been passed upon by some minor official in some other Department of the Government.

I shall not be content to permit the reports of minor officials from some other department of the Government to override the report of a standing committee of the Senate. For example, take the case of Calendar No. 101, Senate bill 784: This bill has been considered by the Senate committee and favorably reported. The House committee reported favorably upon a similar bill, and the House has passed an identical bill. Now an objection is made to the consideration of either the Senate bill or the House bill because of a report from someone. I do not know whence the report came.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think perhaps the Senator has some reason for complaint at the delay. I received information from the Indian Office, and particularly from the Department of Justice, that some of these claims were objected to, and the Department of Justice has set apart an organization for the purpose of investigating every claim, with a view to determining those which are just, and what recommendations will be made. I have been expecting the report for some time. A representative of the Department of Justice visited me a few days ago and stated that he was ready to take up the matter at the earliest possible moment with the subcommittee which has been appointed by the Judiciary Committee, as I recall, for the purpose of considering all these claims. I will say to the Senator that if action is not speedily taken by the Department of Justice in connection with these claims, I shall not object to their consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Utah, the following bills and resolutions will be passed over:

Senate Joint Resolution 45, to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes";

Senate bill 783, to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925;

Senate bill 784, for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency, Nebr.;

Senate bill 790, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States;

Senate bill 1222, authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States;

Senate bill 767, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes;

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be only temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXCHANGE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN OREGON

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert again to Calendar No. 805, Senate bill 2469. I find that the House has passed an identical House bill. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 6503, which is identical with Senate bill 2469, which was passed by the Senate today, and that House bill 6503 be considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon that the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 6503? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6503) relating to the exchange of certain lands in the State of Oregon was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. In line 7, page 1, after the words "Puerto Rico" and before the word "when", I move to insert the word "and." That is the recommendation of the Commandant of the Coast Guard and comes out of the Commerce Committee with a favorable recommendation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the words "Puerto Rico" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the word "and", so as to read:

And when requested—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr. President. The bill merely contemplates that it will be possible to have officers of the Coast Guard assigned for the purpose of instruction only. The Commandant of the Coast Guard appeared before the Senate Commerce Committee and made a statement on the bill. It was favorably recommended by the subcommittee and favorably recommended by the full Committee on Commerce, and I hope it will be agreeable to the Senate to pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah when we may reasonably expect that these bills will be passed?

Mr. KING. The Department of Justice will make a report within a very short time, and a subcommittee was appointed by the Judiciary Committee to consider the validity of some of these claims. If that subcommittee does not act promptly I shall have no objection to their being taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT

The bill (S. 446) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 680, House bill 4998, which is an identical bill passed by the House, be considered at this time in lieu of Calendar No. 428, Senate bill 446.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4998) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsections (a) and (b) of section 310 of the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"(a) May determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable rate or charge, or rates or charges, to be thereafter in such case observed as both the maximum and minimum to be charged, and what regulation or practice is or will be just, reasonable, and nondiscriminatory to be thereafter followed; and

"(b) May make an order that such owner or operator (1) shall cease and desist from such violation to the extent to which the Secretary finds that it does or will exist; (2) shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate or charge for the furnishing of stockyard services more or less than the rate or charge so prescribed; and (3) shall conform to and observe the regulation or practice so prescribed."

SEC. 2. The following new section is added to title III of said act:

"SEC. 317. No person not now conducting the business of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer shall conduct the business of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer at any stockyards at which he is not now conducting such a business unless and until he has obtained a certificate from the Secretary that public convenience and necessity requires or will require the conduct of such business at the stockyard or stockyards at which it is proposed to conduct the same. The application for such certificate shall be in such form as the Secretary may prescribe from time to time and such certificate shall only be issued after a hearing had upon such notice as the Secretary may prescribe. Said certificate shall not be transferable."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain just what the bill does?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, the bill does two definite things. It is the remnant of a bill which was introduced at several sessions, but finally has been cut down to two proposals. One is to make the reasonable rate, as fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, for the performance of certain services in the purchase of livestock, both the maximum and the minimum rate. He is to fix a just and reasonable rate to be charged for the services. The other provides for the issuance of a certificate of convenience and necessity to new agencies that wish to enter the business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 446 will be indefinitely postponed.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming how much is involved in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much per annum?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. As I recall, it is something like three and a half million dollars.

Mr. SHEPPARD. About three and a half million.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Under the bill, as amended, providing rates equivalent to 75 percent of those applicable to war veterans, it is estimated that 24,147 veterans would receive increases for the fiscal year 1940, at a cost of approximately $3,565,548.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, heretofore I have challenged attention to this bill, with which I have a good deal of sympathy. General Hines, the able head of the Veterans' Administration, has reviewed this matter in a rather lengthy letter, which appears in the report, and he expresses opposition to the amount recommended to be appropriated and suggests, as I recall, 60 percent instead of 75 percent. I ask the Senator whether he will not be willing to accept the recommendation of General Hines, who is speaking for the Government, I think.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I cannot accept the amendment because it seems to me the 75 percent is of itself a very modest and low rate, considering the nature of military activity at this time. At the last session we passed a bill allowing these veterans 80 percent, and I introduced the pending bill giving them 90 percent. A subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I was not a member, took the matter up, and then the committee itself acted, and concluded to reduce the figure to 75 percent, which is 5 percent lower than the figure the Senate adopted last year.

As I stated, if for like injuries they are given 75 percent of the compensation given to World War veterans, there will be an annual cost, according to the Administrator, of $3,565,548. If they are given 60 percent, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, the annual cost will be $2,852,438, so that there would be a difference of about $713,110 between the 60 percent and the 75 percent. I hope we will be able to keep the figure at 75 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide pensions to members of the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who become disabled by reason of their service therein, equivalent to 75 percent of the compensation payable to war veterans for similar service-connected disabilities, and for other purposes."

ALBERT P. DUNBAR

The bill (S. 1033) for the relief of Albert P. Dunbar was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Albert P. Dunbar, who was a member of Company A, Third Regiment Texas Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 9th day of November 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1650) to promote peace and the national defense through a more equal distribution of the burdens of war by drafting the use of money according to ability to lend to the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EXPEDITIOUS SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

IMPLEMENTING ADMINISTRATIVE RULES

SEC. 2. (a) Hereafter administrative rules and all amendments or modifications or supplements of existing rules implementing or filling in the details of any statute affecting the rights of persons or property shall be issued by the head of the agency and by each independent agency respectively charged with the administration of any statute only after publication of notice and public hearings. All such rules shall be published in the Federal Register within 10 days after the date of their approval by the head of the agency or the independent agency concerned, and shall not become effective until such publication, except when the President declares that a public emergency exists.

(b) Administrative rules under all statutes hereafter enacted shall be issued as herein provided within 1 year after the date of the enactment of the statute subject to the adoption thereafter of further rules from time to time as provided in this act.

(c) Any person substantially interested in the effects of an administrative rule in force on the date of the approval of this act may petition the head of the agency or the independent agency which administers any statute under which the rule was issued for a reconsideration of any such rule; and the head of such agency or the independent agency shall, after publication of notice and public hearing, if requested within 10 days thereafter, determine whether such rule shall be continued in force, modified, or rescinded. All amendments of such rules shall be in accordance with the procedure provided in subsection (a) of this section and all action of the head of such agency or the independent agency on such petitions and all new or amended rules shall be published in the Federal Register as prescribed in said subsection (a) for the publication of rules.

(d) No person shall be penalized or subjected to any forfeiture or prosecuted for any act done or omitted to be done in good faith in conformity with a rule which has been rescinded or declared invalid by any final judgment entered as hereinafter provided, unless the act was done or omitted to be done more than 30 days after the publication in the Federal Register of the rescission or final judicial determination of the invalidity of such rule.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF RULES

SEC. 3. In addition to the jurisdiction heretofore conferred upon the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, that court shall have jurisdiction, upon petition filed within 30 days from the date any administrative rule is published in the Federal Register, to hear and determine whether any such rule issued or continued in force in accordance with section 2 of this act is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which issued. No rule shall be held invalid except for violation of the Constitution or for conflict with a statute or for lack of authority conferred upon the agency issuing it by the statute or statutes pursuant to which it was issued or for failure to comply with section 2 of this act. A copy of the petition and copies of all subsequent pleadings shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, who shall direct the defense of the rule. The court may refer such petition and any reply thereto for the taking of such evidence as shall be material and relevant thereto. The court shall give preference to such petitions and shall have no power in the proceedings except to render a declaratory judgment holding such rule legal and valid or holding it contrary to law and invalid. If the rule is held contrary to law and invalid, the rule thereafter shall not have any force or effect except to confer immunity as provided in section 2 of this act. Nothing contained in this section shall prevent the determination of the validity or invalidity of any rule which may be involved in any suit or review of an administrative decision or order in any court of the United States as now or hereafter authorized by law.

STATUTORY APPROVAL AND AUTHORITY FOR ADMINISTRATIVE BOARDS AND PRESCRIBING THEIR PROCEDURE

SEC. 4. (a) Every head of an agency shall from time to time designate three employees of his agency for such intra-agency boards (including the field service of such agency) as may be necessary and desirable. Where there are intra-agency boards existing on the date of approval of this act, they shall be reestablished and function in accordance with this act. Wherever practicable, such boards shall be designated in various sections of the United States to hear any controversy which may have there arisen. At least one employee designated for each such board shall be a lawyer, who shall act as chairman of the board. When the members of any board are not engaged in the hearing of administrative appeals as hereinafter provided, such employees shall be assigned to other duties in the service of the agency concerned. No member of a board who has participated in a particular case or in the preparation, draft, or approval of any rule which may be involved, shall sit in appeal of the case or application of the rule. Each board shall be impartial, free, and independent in the hearing and determination of administrative appeals.

(b) When any person is aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee of any agency, such person may notify the head of the agency in writing of objections thereto, specifically requesting that the controversy be referred to a board, constituted as hereinbefore provided, for hearing and determination. Such notice shall be given not more than 20 days after the date of receipt of a registered letter notifying him of the decision, act, or failure to act. Such written objections shall be referred promptly to an intra-agency board for the agency concerned. At a time and place to be designated and communicated to the aggrieved person, he shall have an opportunity at an early day for a full and fair hearing before said board, at which time there shall be introduced into the record the testimony and any documents or objects relating to the appeal before said board. Any person having a substantial interest in the controversy shall have the right to intervene herein. A stenographer shall be assigned to the hearings before the board to take and transcribe the testimony. All testimony, other evidence, and all proceedings before the board, shall be reduced to a written record and filed in the agency concerned and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the aggrieved person upon his written request therefor at a charge not exceeding the actual cost thereof. Within 30 days after the day the evidence and arguments are closed, the board shall make written findings of facts and separate decision thereon, which shall be subject to the written approval, disapproval, or modification of the head of the agency concerned or of such person as he shall designate in writing to act for him. A copy of the findings of fact and decision, showing the action if any, of the head of the agency concerned or his representative, shall be filed in the agency as a part of the written record in the case and a copy shall be mailed to the aggrieved person and to the intervenors, if any. The United States shall take such action as may now or hereafter be provided by law to enforce the decision of the agency unless there be pending judicial review thereof as hereinafter provided.

(c) The chairman of any board, upon request of any party to the proceedings, shall require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documents and all other objects before said board without other showing than required by the rules in United State district courts for the issuance of subpenas by such courts. Any witness subpenaed or whose deposition is taken shall receive the same fees and mileage as witnesses in courts of the United States, to be paid by the party at whose instance the witness appears or deposition is taken. In the event of disobedience of a subpena issued as herein provided, the chairman, or any party to the proceedings, may apply to any district court of the United States of the jurisdiction in which the witness may be found for an order requiring his attendance and testimony and the production of all documents and objects described in the subpena. The chairman of the board shall be authorized to administer oaths to witnesses and there shall be a right of examination and cross-examination of witnesses.

(d) When the matter in controversy is such that the delay incident to the hearing and decision of the case would create an emergency contrary to the public interest and there is administrative action or inaction prior to or without such hearing and determination, resulting in the destruction of the property or damage to the aggrieved person involved in such controversy the findings of fact and decision when made by the board shall state the amount of pecuniary damage suffered by the aggrieved person and upon approval thereof by the head of the agency concerned, the amount of damages so approved, if acceptable to the aggrieved person, shall be certified to the Congress for an appropriation with which to pay the same.

(e) Where any matter arises out of the activities of any independent agency, it may be provided by rule that such matter may be heard in the first instance by one of its trial examiners, who shall file with the independent agency the written record and his written findings of fact and separate decision, which shall be made in all instances, whether by the examiner or the independent agency, after reasonable public notice and a full and fair hearing as hereinbefore in this section provided. A copy or copies thereof shall be sent by registered mail to the aggrieved party. The independent agency shall enter at the expiration of 30 days such appropriate decision as may be proper unless within said 30 days the aggrieved party shall signify his written consent to the entry of the decision or shall file by registered mail with the independent agency his written objections to the findings of fact and decision of the examiner, in which event the independent agency shall not enter its decision without first according a public hearing upon reasonable notice to such party. Such hearing shall be before the members of the independent agency, if it has not less than three members, or before any three of such members. If the independent agency has less than three members, an intra-agency board shall be constituted in the manner provided in subsection (a) of this section, upon which the member or members of such agency may serve at his or their election.

(f) No hearing shall be permitted before any agency or independent agency seeking affirmative relief against the United States concerning any controversy which arose more than 1 year prior to the date on which there was filed with such agency or independent agency a written request for such hearing as provided in this section.

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OR ORDERS OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

SEC. 5. (a) Any party to a proceeding before any agency or independent agency as provided in section 4 of this act who may be aggrieved by the final decision or order of any agency, or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days after the date of receipt of a copy thereof, may at his election file a written petition (1) with the clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; or (2) with the clerk of the circuit court of appeals within whose jurisdiction such aggrieved party resides or maintains his principal place of business or in which the controversy arose, for review of the decision. Before filing a petition such party may within 10 days make a motion to the agency or independent agency concerned for a rehearing, tendering a statement of any further showing to be made thereon which shall constitute a part of the record, and the time for appeal shall run from the order on such motion if denied or the order made on such rehearing if a rehearing shall be had. The petition shall state the alleged errors in the decision of the agency or independent agency concerned. The Attorney General of the United States and the agency or independent agency shall each be served with a copy of the petition and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to cause appearance to be entered on behalf of the United States within 30 days after the date of receipt by him of a copy of the petition and it shall be the duty of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days or such longer time as the court may by order direct, after receipt of a copy of the petition to cause to be prepared and filed with the clerk of such court the original or a full and accurate transcript of the entire record in such proceeding before such agency or independent agency. The court may affirm or set aside the decision or may direct the agency or independent agency concerned to modify its decision. Any case may be remanded for such further evidence as in the discretion of the court may be required but no objection not urged before the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, shall be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused by the court for good cause shown. To facilitate the hearing of such appeals and avoid delay in the hearing of other matters before the court, such court may constitute special sessions thereof to consist of any three judges competent in law to sit as judges of a circuit court of appeals, which special sessions may be held concurrently with the regular sessions of said court. Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (3) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; or (4) that the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing; or (5) that the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be; or (6) that the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States; or (7) that the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

(b) The judgments of the circuit courts of appeals shall be final, except that they shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(c) Where the cause of action is otherwise within the jurisdiction of the United States Court of Claims as provided in sections 136 to 187, inclusive, of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 241 to 293, inclusive), the petition provided in this section may be to the said Court of Claims at the election of the aggrieved party.

(d) Where a circuit court of appeals or the Court of Claims finds itself in disagreement with a previously rendered decision of another court having jurisdiction under this section, it shall certify to the Supreme Court of the United States a distinct and definite statement of the question or proposition of law upon which such disagreement rests, with a statement of the nature of the cause and of the facts on which such question or proposition of law arises, together with a statement of the reasons in support of such disagreement. Such further proceedings shall be as provided in section 239 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 346).

JURISDICTION OF COURTS TO IMPOSE DAMAGES WHERE APPEAL WAS FOR DELAY AND FOR COSTS

SEC. 6. The courts shall have jurisdiction and power to impose damages in any case where the decision of the agency or independent agency is affirmed and the court finds that there was no substantial basis for the petition for review. In all cases the costs on review shall be allowed the prevailing party after final judgment, to be collected according to law.

EXCEPTIONS AND RESERVATIONS

SEC. 7. Nothing contained in this act shall operate to modify or repeal any rights or procedure as now provided by law for any person to have his controversy with the United States heard and determined in any district court or circuit court of appeals of the United States.

(b) Nothing contained in this act shall apply to or affect any matter concerning or relating to the conduct of military or naval operations; the trial by courts martial of persons otherwise within the jurisdiction of such courts martial; the conduct of the Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission; the conduct of the Department of State; the conduct of the Department of Justice and the offices of the United States attorneys, except as otherwise herein specifically provided; or any matter concerning or relating to the internal revenue, customs, patent, trade-mark, copyright, or longshoremen and harbor workers' laws; or any case where the aggrieved party was denied a loan, or may be dissatisfied with a grading service in connection with the purchase or sale of agricultural products, or has failed to receive appointment or employment by any agency or independent agency. Sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to the General Accounting Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. In behalf of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 442) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"(c) The chairman of any board, upon request of any party to the proceedings shall require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documents and all other objects before said board without other showing than required by the rules in United States district courts for the issuance of subpenas by such courts. Any witness subpenaed or whose deposition is taken shall receive the same fees and mileage as witnesses in courts of the United States, to be paid by the party at whose instance the witness appears or deposition is taken. In the event of disobedience of a subpena issued as herein provided, the chairman, or any party to the proceedings, may apply to any district court of the United States of the jurisdiction in which the witness may be found for an order requiring his attendance and testimony and the production of all documents and objects described in the subpena. The chairman of the board shall be authorized to administer oaths to witnesses, and there shall be a right of examination and cross-examination of witnesses.

"(d) When the matter in controversy is such that the delay incident to the hearing and decision of the case would create an emergency contrary to the public interest and there is administrative action or inaction, prior to or without such hearing and determination, resulting in the destruction of the property or damage to the aggrieved person involved in such controversy, the findings of fact and decision when made by the board shall state the amount of pecuniary damage suffered by the aggrieved person and upon approval thereof by the head of the agency concerned, the amount of damages so approved, if acceptable to the aggrieved person, shall be certified to the Congress for an appropriation with which to pay the same.

"(e) Where any matter arises out of the activities of any independent agency, it may be provided by rule that such matter may be heard in the first instance by one of its trial examiners, who shall file with the independent agency the written record and his written findings of fact and separate decision, which shall be made in all instances, whether by the examiner or the independent agency, after reasonable public notice and a full and fair hearing as hereinbefore in this section provided. A copy or copies thereof shall be sent by registered mail to the aggrieved party. The independent agency shall enter at the expiration of 30 days such appropriate decision as may be proper unless within said 30 days the aggrieved party shall signify his written consent to the entry of the decision or shall file by registered mail with the independent agency his written objections to the findings of fact and decision of the examiner, in which event the independent agency shall not enter its decision without first according a public hearing upon reasonable notice to such party. Such hearing shall be before the members of the independent agency, if it has not less than three members, or before any three of such members. If the independent agency has less than three members, an intra-agency board shall be constituted in the manner provided in subsection (a) of this section, upon which the member or members of such agency may serve at his or their election.

"(f) No hearing shall be permitted before any agency or independent agency seeking affirmative relief against the United States concerning any controversy which arose more than 1 year prior to the date on which there was filed with such agency or independent agency a written request for such hearing as provided in this section.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DECISIONS OR ORDERS OF ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES

"SEC. 5. (a) Any party to a proceeding before any agency or independent agency as provided in section 4 of this act may be aggrieved by the final decision or order of any agency, or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days after the date of receipt of a copy thereof, may at his election file a written petition (1) with the clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; or (2) with the clerk of the circuit court of appeals within whose jurisdiction such aggrieved party resides or maintains his principal place of business or in which the controversy arose, for review of the decision. Before filing a petition such party may within 10 days make a motion to the agency or independent agency concerned for a rehearing, tendering a statement of any further showing to be made thereon which shall constitute a part of the record, and the time for appeal shall run from the order on such motion if denied or the order made on such rehearing if a rehearing shall be had. The petition shall state the alleged errors in the decision of the agency or independent agency concerned. The Attorney General of the United States and the agency or independent agency shall each be served with a copy of the petition and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to cause appearance to be entered on behalf of the United States within 30 days after the date of receipt by him of a copy of the petition, and it shall be the duty of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, within 30 days or such longer time as the court may by order direct, after receipt of a copy of the petition to cause to be prepared and filed with the clerk of such court the original or a full and accurate transcript of the entire record in such proceeding before such agency or independent agency. The court may affirm or set aside the decision or may direct the agency or independent agency concerned to modify its decision. Any case may be remanded for such further evidence as in the discretion of the court may be required, but no objection not urged before the agency or independent agency, as the case may be, shall be considered by the court unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused by the court for good cause shown. To facilitate the hearing of such appeals and avoid delay in the hearing of other matters before the court, such court may constitute special sessions thereof to consist of any three judges competent in law to sit as judges of a circuit court of appeals, which special sessions may be held concurrently with the regular sessions of said court. Any decision of any agency or independent agency shall be set aside if it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court (1) that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous; or (2) that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence; or (3) that the decision is not supported by the findings of fact; or (4) that the decision was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded the aggrieved party for a full and fair hearing; or (5) that the decision is beyond the jurisdiction of the agency or independent agency, as the case may be; or (6) that the decision infringes the Constitution or statutes of the United States; or (7) that the decision is otherwise contrary to law.

"(b) The judgments of the circuit courts of appeals shall be final, except that they shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"(c) Where the cause of action is otherwise within the jurisdiction of the United States Court of Claims as provided in sections 136 to 187, inclusive, of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 241 to 293, inclusive), the petition provided in this section may be to the said Court of Claims at the election of the aggrieved party.

"(d) Where a circuit court of appeals or the Court of Claims finds itself in disagreement with a previously rendered decision of another court having jurisdiction under this section, it shall certify to the Supreme Court of the United States a distinct and definite statement of the question or proposition of law upon which such disagreement rests, with a statement of the nature of the cause and of the facts on which such question or proposition of law arises, together with a statement of the reasons in support of such disagreement. Such further proceedings shall be as provided in section 239 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 346).

"JURISDICTION OF COURTS TO IMPOSE DAMAGES WHERE APPEAL WAS FOR DELAY AND FOR COSTS

"SEC. 6. The courts shall have jurisdiction and power to impose damages in any case where the decision of the agency or independent agency is affirmed and the court finds that there was no substantial basis for the petition for review. In all cases the costs on review shall be allowed the prevailing party after final judgment, to be collected according to law.

"EXCEPTIONS AND RESERVATIONS

"SEC. 7. Nothing contained in this act shall operate to modify or repeal any rights of procedure as now provided by law for any person to have his controversy with the United States heard and determined in any district court or circuit court of appeals of the United States.

"(b) Nothing contained in this act shall apply to or affect any matter concerning or relating to the conduct of military or naval operations; the trial by courts martial of persons otherwise within the jurisdiction of such courts martial; the conduct of the Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Interstate Commerce Commission; the conduct of the Department of State; the conduct of the Department of Justice and the offices of the United States attorneys, except as otherwise herein specifically provided; or any matter concerning or relating to the internal revenue, customs, patent, trade-mark, copyright, or longshoremen and harbor workers' laws; or any case where the aggrieved party was denied a loan, or may be dissatisfied with a grading service in connection with the purchase or sale of agricultural products, or has failed to receive appointment or employment by any agency or independent agency. Sections 2 and 3 of this act shall not apply to the General Accounting Office."

PURPOSES OF THE BILL

The basic purpose of this administrative-law bill is to stem and, if possible, to reverse the drift into parliamentarism which, if it should succeed in any substantial degree in this country, could but result in totalitarianism with complete destruction of the division of governmental power between the Federal and the State Governments and with the entire subordination of both the legislative and judicial branches of the Federal Government to the executive branch wherein are included the administrative agencies and tribunals of that Government. This drift has become very pronounced during the past 50 years with the increasing complexity of social and economic problems.

This administrative-law bill does not attempt to expand or to constrict the functions, duties, and responsibilities conferred or imposed by statutes on the various and sundry agencies of the Federal Government. The bill is concerned solely with the adjective or procedural aspects of these statutes and as to the importance thereof we cannot do better than quote from Professor, now Mr. Justice Frankfurter in his address in 1938 to the Cincinnati Administrative Law Conference wherein he said:

"Remember, there are very precious values of civilization which ultimately, to a large extent, are procedural in their nature. * * * All tribunals, administrative or judicial, have to inquire and examine before they decide. Historic experience lies behind the right to a day in court, and a full day. Those who decide should record their judgments and give reasons for them, which in itself will have a fruitful psychological effect. You feel much more responsible—all of us do—if we have to sit down and write out why we think what we think."

This administrative-law bill has four basic purposes: (1) The mandatory requirement for the administrative formation of rules and regulations, or the exercise of quasi legislative power by the existing personnel in filling in the details of the statutes which the officers and employees of the United States are required to administer; (2) the establishment and uniformity of procedure for the hearing of administrative appeals by existing personnel within the single-headed administrative agencies and uniformity of procedure before the multiple-headed administrative tribunals; (3) the establishment and uniformity of procedure for, and scope of, judicial review of all administrative rules and of all administrative decisions and orders by the existing United States circuit courts of appeals, including the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, whether issued by or rendered by single-headed or multiple-headed administrative agencies of the Federal Government; and (4) last, but not least, the authorization of the Supreme Court of the United States to issue uniform rules of trial practice and procedure before all Federal administrative agencies in their exercise of quasi judicial power and for judicial review of the decisions or orders of such agencies.

The bill contemplates the more efficient utilization of existing personnel in the administrative branch of the Federal Government and of the circuit courts of appeals, though it may later become necessary to add additional judges to some of these courts.

THE PROBLEM UPON US

The Judiciary Act of 1789 was drawn with such infinite care and foresight that its basic principles regulating the jurisdiction of the Federal courts have stood for a century and a half. It was only recently that the Congress authorized by statute, and the Supreme Court of the United States has issued uniform rules of practice and procedure controlling both law and equity practice in the Federal courts; thus recognizing a fact, which had been vigorously denied since the days of Lord Coke, in that it is not only possible to have uniform rules of trial procedure in the various and sundry law actions in the courts but that it is possible to have such uniformity as between law and equity actions.

The statutes commencing with those of 1789, establishing the administrative agencies of the Federal Government, were not drawn with such infinite care and foresight. Unlike the situation with respect to the courts, the Constitution made no provision whatever for an administrative service and there are but two indirect references in the Constitution to the fact that there might be established an administrative service. The obvious implication to be made from these two constitutional provisions is that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the establishment of administrative or executive departments, and the organization of such departments by statutes enacted by the Congress. And that has been the course of our administrative history, though they have not been manned by Members of the Congress as was to some extent the procedure under the Articles of Confederation. In the early case of Kendall v. Stokes (12 Peters, 524, 610; 1838) the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the lower court in its conclusion that the Congress may "prescribe the duties of the office, at the time of its creation or from time to time, as circumstances may require" and said that—

"It by no means follows that every officer in every branch of that department [the Executive] is under the exclusive direction of the President * * *. It would be an alarming doctrine, that Congress cannot impose upon any executive officer any duty they may think proper, which is not repugnant to any rights secured and protected by the Constitution; and in such cases the duty and responsibility grow out of and are subject to the control of the law, and not to the direction of the President."

It was 30 years later in Floyd's Acceptances (7 Wallace, 666; 1868), that the same Court said, with respect to any inquiry as to the authority of an officer of the United States:

"The answer, which at once suggests itself to one familiar with the structure of our Government, in which all power is delegated, and is defined by law, constitutional or statutory, is, that to one or both of these sources we must resort in every instance. We have no officers in this Government, from the President down to the most subordinate agent, who does not hold office under the law, with prescribed duties and limited authority."

The Congresses which have gone before us are not to be criticized for their failure in establishing the first administrative agencies in 1789, or in the additions thereto from time to time since that date, to delimit administrative authority with the precision adopted in the original Judiciary Act of 1789. The problems of the Federal administrative service have not been static though they were relatively simple prior to 1887 and consisted chiefly in the maintenance of peace at home and the protection of our citizens abroad, the transportation of the mails, and the distribution of the public lands with the collection of comparatively small revenue sufficient for such purposes.

With the adaptation to governmental conditions characteristic of Anglo-Saxon peoples, we required no elaborate administrative machinery of government for these purposes. By means of private bills for the relief of contractors and pensioners the Congress was able to sit in review of the administrative agencies in these respects until 1855 when the Court of Claims was established to hear and determine de novo certain classes of money claims against the United States arising principally out of contracts and pay matters. The Federal courts, quite early, developed a procedure for suits at common law against collectors of customs and collectors of internal revenue to recover from them personally illegal or erroneous collections and this procedure was subsequently regulated by statute. There since has been created the right to sue the United States in both the Federal district courts and in the Court of Claims for refund of taxes and, in 1890, there was reorganized the customs procedure to provide for the establishment of both trial and an appellate court for the review of administrative decisions in customs cases. The latter court has been given jurisdiction to review the administrative decisions in patent and trade-mark cases.

The sale of public lands presented no questions which the Treasury Department and later the Interior Department were not able to settle, with the aid of extraordinary writs developed by the courts of the District of Columbia upon the basis of procedure supposed to have been derived via the State of Maryland from the English judicial system. However, the settlement of land claims under foreign grants in the territories which the United States successively secured from France, Spain, and Mexico did give rise to serious disputes with the administrative agencies charged with the settlement thereof. In the earlier statutes the Congress sat in review of the administrative settlement of the claims, these earlier laws generally providing that the action of the administrative land boards should be confirmed by the Congress. However, the acquisition of the Southwest Territory under the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the almost simultaneous discovery of gold in California, and the immense value of the lands in the California territory, made it necessary that some more exact and scientific procedure be established for the proper determination of those who claimed under Spanish or Mexican land grants entitled to protection under the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The act of May 26, 1824 (4 Stat. 52), had provided that as to French and Spanish grants in the territories of Missouri and Arkansas a petitioner could submit his land claim to the Federal district court to be inquired into de novo and determined, but there seemed to have been too many such claims in California for the use of a similar procedure. Accordingly, the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. 631, 634), established a California Land Commission, or board, to consist of three individuals who were required, with the United States attorney representing the public interests, to inquire into and determine such land claims as existed in California.

This statute of 1851 provided that a claimant dissatisfied with the decision of the land commission or the United States attorney could petition the district court for California for review of the record before the land commission and its decision thereon. There was thus avoided the delay and expense of a trial de novo which had been the situation under the act of May 26, 1824, with respect to the Missouri and Arkansas land grants, but it is to be noted that the courts were authorized to make a full review of the board decisions, being in this respect similar to the complete appellate review which is the long-established procedure in equity and admiralty cases. The California Land Board procedure worked exceedingly well.

Thus we swung into the aftermath of the Civil War with our experiences with the administrative procedure in adjusting French, Spanish, and Mexican land-grant claims; our experiences under common-law procedure, regulated by statute, in adjusting claims for illegal or erroneous collections of customs and internal revenue; our experiences with the office of the Comptroller of the Currency regulating the national banks where there is virtually no judicial review; and our experiences with the Court of Claims having jurisdiction de novo in restricted classes of actions against the United States.

But the problems confronting the United States in the post Civil War period were much unlike those which had confronted the country during its earlier history. Great aggregations of capital forgot, in many instances, their responsibility to the people of the United States and laboring men, too, attempted to establish an imperium in imperio. This was the period of the rise of great corporations, the rise of the Granger and Populist movements, and the rise of the great labor unions. All of these elements were more or less mutually in opposition, and it is not too much to say that the period from the close of the Civil War to at least the beginning of the World War was one of extremists and that there was much injustice to all, including the great unorganized public.

THE PRESENT SITUATION

Driven on by the unrest and dissatisfaction of the farmers, of small-business men, of labor unions, and by resolutions of State legislatures, the Congress embarked in the Interstate Commerce Act upon regulation and control of the railroads, a regulation and control which since has been extended to many other lines of endeavor in the Federal Trade Commission Act, in the Federal Communications Act, in the Securities and Exchange Commissions Act, in the Wages and Hours Administrative Act, in the National Labor Relations Act, and in many other statutes which have become law since that date. Throughout this period since 1887 the prime consideration and emphasis have been on strengthening the powers of the Federal Government so as to regulate and control the governed with practically no consideration being given to providing means and methods whereby the governors could be governed and the regulators could be regulated. The time has come when some of these regulators consider themselves above the statutes and when they show contemptuous disregard for both the Congress and the courts. Unless this country is to become first a parliamentary and then a totalitarian government, with the States reduced to mere police provinces, and with both the legislative and judicial branches of our Government dominated by the administrative agencies of Government, these administrative agencies must be required to both observe the terms of the statutes and to exercise good faith in their administration of such statutes.

Unfortunately, the statutes providing for hearings before the so-called independent agencies of the Federal Government as well as those providing for the conduct of the affairs of the single-headed agencies, do not provide for uniform procedure for such hearings or for a uniform method and scope of judicial review. All arguments that such uniformity is neither possible nor desirable is answered by the fact that uniformity has been found possible and desirable for all classes of both equity and law actions in the courts exercising the whole of the judicial power of the Federal Government. It would seem to require no argument to demonstrate that the administrative agencies, exercising but a fraction of the judicial power may likewise operate under uniform rules of practice and procedure and that they may be required to remain within the terms of the law as to the exercise of both quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial power.

The results of the lack of uniform procedure for the exercise of quasi-judicial power by the administrative agencies have been at least threefold; (1) the respective administrative agencies give little heed to, and are little assisted by, the decisions of other administrative agencies or by decisions of the courts applicable to such agencies; (2) the courts are placed at considerable disadvantage because they must verify the basic statutes of all decisions relating to other administrative agencies which are cited to them, thus slowing up the writing of opinions in particular cases; and (3) individuals and their attorneys are at a disadvantage in the presentation of their administrative appeals, with the result that there is a tendency to emphasize the importance of the judiciary in the administrative process.

In fact, the present situation of indescribable confusion is due to the fact that the Congress has ignored the development of the administrative process prior to 1861; that since such time the Congress has created administrative agencies without regard to any uniformity of the judicial review provisions and without regard to the procedure developed and proven prior to that time; and that the law schools have placed undue emphasis on the pathological aspects of administrative procedure rather than upon the statutes and the administrative processes. Added to all this has been the constantly growing complexity of the Federal Government and the resulting lack of training of most lawyers and businessmen therein.

Furthermore the statutes, commencing with the Interstate Commerce Act, have made no provision whatever for improvement of the administrative process and rarely have these statutes attempted to prescribe, even in a general way, the scope of judicial review. The result has been that the administrative agencies and the courts have been required to work out the procedure from case to case with unnecessary fumbling in the administrative process and with unnecessary criticisms of the courts when they have attempted—not altogether with success—in their decisions to lay down general rules of trial and appellate procedure.

IMPLEMENTATION OF STATUTES

Section 1 of the amended bill is devoted to definitions, and sections 2 and 3 thereof are devoted to the mandatory requirement of administrative implementation of the statutes by means of rules and regulations and to provisions for the judicial reviews thereof in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

There are now outstanding a body of rules and regulations which have been issued, amended, and reissued from time to time since the foundation of the Government. As to these rules, the bill provides that an individual, materially interested, may petition for a hearing with respect thereto and that upon such petition public notice shall be issued and a hearing granted. As to statutes enacted after the effective date of this bill when enacted into law the requirement is that public notice shall be issued, public hearings held if requested, and rules implementing the statutes shall be issued within 1 year from the date such statutes are enacted into law. All amendments of existing regulations shall be after public notice and public hearing, if requested.

The bill also provides in section 3 thereof that, upon petition filed within 30 days from the date any rule is published in the Federal Register, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have power to review the rule as to whether it is in accordance with the Constitution and the statute under which it has been issued.

The bill further provides that the individual shall be protected as to any action taken in good faith in accordance with any rule and for 30 days after publication of notice that the rule has been rescinded or has been held by the courts to be invalid. Ample provision is made for the issuance of rules in an emergency without notice or hearing—but only with the approval of the President of the United States. Such approval has been required to prevent any abuse of the emergency power to issue rules without notice and hearing.

Discretionary authority has existed since the statutes of 1789 for the issuance of rules and regulations. However, the rules which have been issued, except in certain instances in the Customs, Internal Revenue, and Interstate Commerce Commission services, very generally have been limited to the adjective side of the statutes. Only in rare instances have the rules attempted to interpret the substantive terms of the statutes; that is, to fill in the details which the Congress necessarily has had to leave to administrative discretion. More often the administrative agencies have failed to exercise such authority and the burden of interpreting the statutes has fallen upon the courts where they have had jurisdiction, and often without any guide as to the administrative viewpoint.

This trial and error method—the case by case interpretation of the statutes—may have been entirely satisfactory in the early days of the Government but as to that we cannot know for the reason that, except as above mentioned, the courts had no general jurisdiction to determine claims and other controversies with the administrative services and, too, such services were not concerned with present-day economic and social problems. Subordinates in the field are entitled to know what their administrative superiors may believe the statutes to mean and, if the administrative superiors know so little about the statutes as not to be able to issue rules interpreting the statutes and filling in the details, the private individual must know much less about them. He should not be required to assume the expense of securing from the courts for the administrative agencies an interpretation as to the meaning of the statutes.

The interpretation of statutes from case to case does not permit of either consistent interpretations or justify the research, investigation, and study which may be used preliminarily to the issuance of general interpretative rules. The bill does not intend that the interpretation of a statute shall be frozen into rules issued within a year after the effective date of such statute, as ample provision has been made for amendments of the rules from time to time—but only after public notice, public hearing, if requested, and subject to judicial review.

Even though the courts are not to be bound by such rules, they will be of great assistance to the courts in reaching a correct interpretation. The judicial review is limited to the questions whether the rule is in accordance with the Constitution and the statute. All questions of discretion or wisdom of the rule are left to the administrative agencies and, of course, to the Congress in event the rule should come to its attention. In some of the States the reasonableness of certain rules issued by State agencies is a matter left to the courts, but this committee has not deemed it wise to go so far at this time.

IMPLEMENTATION OF STATUTES IS NOT SOMETHING NEW

A number of the States, notably New York, Wisconsin, and Illinois, have long provided for the implementation of some of their statutes after public notice and public hearing and subject to judicial review, though, as above stated, the scope of judicial review is somewhat broader than that contemplated by this bill. Further, some of the Federal administrative agencies, notably the Department of Agriculture, in the administration of statutes requiring for success in administration cooperation on the part of States and individuals, have long followed the procedure of public notice and public hearing. Such practice in both Nation and State has served as a mutual educational process for all concerned and has operated to make the rules more reasonable and to reduce litigation to a minimum.

Further, some recent statutes enacted by the Congress, particularly the Copeland Pure Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and the Civil Aviation Authority Act have provided for public notice and public hearing if requested, preliminary to the issuance of rules and for judicial review of the rules when issued. Some other agencies have voluntarily, in certain instances, given public notice of hearings and have held hearings on various aspects of the statutes administered by them before the rules thereunder have been issued.

What the States and some Federal agencies have been required by law to do and what some Federal agencies have voluntarily done may be done by all Federal agencies engaged in administration of the laws. And it is not without importance in this connection to note that practically in all instances proposed legislation before the Congress is printed in the form of bills; the bills are made available to both the proponents and the opponents of such legislation; and public hearings are held at which all viewpoints may be presented by interested witnesses for consideration of the various committees and of the Congress as to whether amendments to the bills should be made.

In the exercise of the quasi legislative authority delegated to them the administrative agencies of the Federal Government exercise but a fraction of the vast legislative power of the Congress and there is no reason why these agencies should not follow substantially the procedure of the Congress in the exercise of such legislative power as is delegated to them.

Last, but not least, such procedure will not only give the ex officio experts of the Federal Government the viewpoints and experience of labor, industry, and others who may be affected by the rules, but the rules will operate as advance opinions or declaratory judgments by the administrative officials as to what they believe the statutes to mean. Thus all concerned will have a guide for the conduct of their affairs; there will not be the danger of politics as in the issuance of decisions or interpretations pursuant to individual questions; the courts will have a guide when they come to consider individual cases as to what the administrative officials believe the statutes to mean; and there will not be the present necessity for many years to elapse before the administrative agencies interpret the statutes administered by them.

Practically all of the some one-hundred-and-odd administrative agencies are required to exercise quasi-judicial authority in the determination of claims and controversies arising in the administration of the statutes under their respective supervision. If there ever was a time when the investigational, prosecutional, and judicial functions exercised by administrative agencies in the administration of statutes could be segregated, that time has long since passed. The complexities of modern-day governments necessitate the combination of such functions in the administrative process, and this is entirely aside from the fact that the administrative agencies determine many times more controversies within a given period than do the traditional courts. Even if the courts were otherwise qualified to exercise de novo the judicial process as to all such controversies, the number thereof would swamp any judicial system which we have had in America.

And such segregation of the administrative process is unnecessary and undesirable. So long as a controversy is decided in accordance with the law and the facts it is immaterial whether it is decided in the judicial process. Since the administrative agencies of the Government are wholly creatures of statutes, the Congress may distribute this judicial power as best suits the interest and convenience of the people and there is needed a uniform procedure for administrative determinations and for judicial review thereof to see that the administrative agencies remain within the terms of the law, both in the hearings accorded and in applying the law to the record facts.

Sections 4 and 5 of the amended bill are devoted to this phase of the problem. Section 4 provides for a uniform procedure for appeals within the single-headed administrative agencies and for a uniform procedure before the multiple-headed agencies while section 5 provides for a uniform procedure for judicial review of all administrative decisions and orders, whether made by the single- or multiple-headed agencies. Section 6 is complementary to these two sections in the authorization and request that the Supreme Court of the United States issue uniform rules of trial practice and procedure for the exercise of the adjudicatory process in the administrative agencies and for the appellate review. It is assumed that in complying with such request the Supreme Court of the United States will duplicate the procedure followed in formulating uniform rules for the trial courts and appoint an able committee, consisting of representatives of the administrative agencies, members of the bar in private practice, and others to make the necessary studies and prepare the rules of trial practice and procedure. In fact the Attorney General of the United States now has a committee engaged in making studies in this connection, and the work accomplished by that committee may be made available in drafting the uniform rules.

It will be noted that the administrative agencies are to remain free in the discharge of both their quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial authority and, of course, free in their administration of the statutes in accordance with the law and the facts. However, the exercise of discretion in the quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions does not contemplate that the administrative officials shall exercise other than a legal discretion; they do not have a roving commission to obey the law or not obey it as they see fit, to change and adopt policies contrary to the policies stated in the law, or in any other manner to assume an autocratic attitude as to what they shall or shall not do when private and public rights are involved.

Any question as to whether the administration has exercised a wise discretion is not for the courts but for the Congress. The only question for the courts is whether a legal discretion has been exercised by the administrative agencies in the quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial processes and while the constitutional requirement of a "case or controversy" has its place in litigation between private parties it has no place in the distribution which the Congress may make of the judicial power as between the Federal courts and the administrative agencies in the decision of controversies arising in the administration of the statutes as between the Federal Government and the individual.

The procedure stated in sections 4, 5, and 6 of this bill does not contemplate that the courts shall assume or exercise any part of the strictly administrative duties and responsibilities of the various agencies of the Federal Government but it does contemplate that the courts shall review these agencies in their exercise of quasi-judicial power and that the courts shall see to it by means of rules and appellate review that such a record of the facts is made in each and every case coming before them that they may determine whether there has been exercised a legal discretion within the scope of the judicial review provision in section 5 of the bill.

Further, in order to reduce delays in the courts to a minimum in securing a final and uniform judicial determination, section 5 (d) of the bill requires that any reviewing court disagreeing with a prior decision of another court as to the matters arising under the bill, the disagreeing court shall forthwith certify to the Supreme Court of the United States a distinct and definite statement of the question or proposition of law upon which such disagreement rests, etc., where further proceedings shall be as now provided by law for certified questions to that Court. By such means it is hoped to cut down the time now required to harmonize conflicting decisions among the several circuit courts of appeal and the Court of Claims.

Section 7 of the bill adopts existing statutes pertaining to costs on review and damages for frivolous appeals to the courts, and section 8 is a section of reservations. It has not been thought desirable to repeal at this time the laws relating to suits against the United States or for judicial reviews in certain instances of administrative decisions. The legal profession believes that existing procedures should be continued in effect for the time being and until there has been a period of satisfactory experience with the procedure stated in the bill. Also, some administrative agencies enumerated in section 8 have been specifically exempted for reasons which it is believed will be apparent to all concerned.

CONCLUSION

It has not been possible to draft an administrative-law bill which would be entirely satisfactory to everyone, but it is doubtful if there has been legislation proposed in a century which has had more extended and careful study than that given to this bill. It was under consideration for more than 3 years by the American Bar Association and the principles thereof have been approved by the board of governors and the house of delegates of that association and by the State bar associations of California, Colorado, Illinois, Nebraska, Ohio, and Oregon as well as by the city bar associations of Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, and St. Louis. Doubtless other bar associations will approve the bill as they meet from time to time during the coming months. A number of business organizations have approved the bill and it is understood to be acceptable to a large labor organization.

Much time has been given to the bill by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. In fact, the chairman of that committee in 1928 directed attention to the problem in a bill which he introduced and in an address which he made in the Senate.

The object of all concerned has been to leave the administrative agencies as free as possible to function consistent with the supremacy of the law and to provide only such judicial review as is necessary to insure both the supremacy of the law and substantial justice in controversies between the United States and individuals. Of course, much of the success of the reform will depend upon the able and wise use made by the administrative agencies of the power conferred upon them by this proposed legislation as well as upon the restraint and ability of the courts in their exercise of their reviewing jurisdiction. However, it is believed that we may safely trust this matter to the wisdom of all concerned to the end that there may be developed in this country a body of administrative law in accordance with the received common-law traditions with both the administrative agencies and the courts jealously concerned to remain within their respective allotted spheres—both being anxious to interpret and apply the constitutional statutes as enacted by the elected representatives of the people.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 188) authorizing the delegation of certain authority within the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROVISIONAL, PROBATIONARY, AND TEMPORARY WORLD WAR OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 457) to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b), section 202, of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Any individual holding a permanent or provisional commission or permanent or acting warrant in any branch of the military or naval forces, or (while holding such commission or warrant) serving under a temporary commission in a higher grade—in each case for the period of service under such commission or warrant or in such higher grade after the accrual of the right to pay thereunder. This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer nor to any provisional, probationary, or temporary officer of the military or naval forces or Coast Guard, under the grade of major or lieutenant commander, who served subsequent to April 6, 1917, and who is now in a status of honorable separation from the military, naval, or Coast Guard service: Provided, That applications under this act must be made within 1 year from the date of enactment."

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this is a bill to amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act so as to give the bonus to World War provisional and probationary officers. Technically, these former officers have been considered a part of the Regular armed forces. The act of 1924 precluded members of the Regular armed forces from receiving the bonus. Practically, however, these officers were in the same category with emergency officers, who did receive the bonus.

These officers did not enter the armed forces during the World War with a view to receiving permanent commissions. They did not know that provisional or probationary appointments made them members of the Regular forces.

When the war was over they returned to civil life. They served along with the emergency officers, who have received their bonus. Their services were identical, and there appears to be no logical reason why they should not also receive the bonus.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has not all legislation affecting adjusted compensation heretofore always gone through the Finance Committee?

Mr. KING. I answer that affirmatively.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is a special subcommittee of the Committee on Finance charged with the exclusive jurisdiction of all compensation matters. I do not desire to comment on the merits of the measure, but I think it should be referred to the Finance Committee, and passed upon by its special subcommittee dealing with this subject.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has had jurisdiction of legislation relating to provisional and probationary officers for a number of years, and it has never been questioned until today.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator's committee has jurisdiction over the officers, but the Finance Committee has always had exclusive jurisdiction over all matters relating to compensation, if my memory serves me correctly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the measures have gone about equally to both committees.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much money will this require annually?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Less than $2,000,000.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 188) to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Judicial Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new chapter to be numbered XV and entitled "The Administration of the United States Courts," as follows:

"CHAPTER XV—THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS

"SEC. 302. There shall be at the seat of government an establishment to be known as the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, with a Director at the head thereof who shall be appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States and hold office at the pleasure of and be subject to removal by the aforesaid Court. There shall be in said establishment an Assistant Director, to be appointed and hold office in like manner, who shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the Director and, during the absence or incapacity of the Director or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as Director. The Director and Assistant Director shall receive annual salaries of $10,000 and $7,500, respectively. The Director shall cause a seal of office to be made for the said establishment of such design as the Supreme Court of the United States shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken of the said seal.

"SEC. 303. The Director, with the approval of the Supreme Court, shall have authority, subject to the civil-service laws, to appoint such employees as are deemed necessary to perform the functions and duties vested in said establishment by this chapter, and the Director shall fix their compensation according to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. During his term of office or employment, no officer or employee of said establishment shall engage directly or indirectly in the practice of law in any of the courts of the United States.

"SEC. 304. The Director shall be the administrative officer of the United States courts and shall have charge, under the supervision of the conference of senior circuit judges, of—

"(1) All administrative matters relating to the offices of the clerks and other clerical and administrative personnel of the courts, but nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed as affecting the authority of the courts to appoint their administrative or clerical personnel, or the authority of the Attorney General respecting United States marshals and their deputies, United States attorneys and their assistants;

"(2) Examining the state of the dockets of the various courts and securing information as to their needs for assistance, if any, and the preparation of statistical data and reports of the business transacted by the courts, and promptly transmitting the information so obtained quarterly to the senior circuit judges of the respective circuits, to the end that proper action may be taken with respect thereto, but inspections of the dockets of the courts outside the continental United States shall be made through officials of the United States Government residing within the jurisdiction, respectively, of the said courts;

"(3) The disbursement, directly and through the several United States marshals as now provided by law, of the moneys appropriated for the maintenance, support, and operation of the courts;

"(4) The purchase, exchange, transfer, and distribution of equipment and supplies;

"(5) The examination and audit of vouchers and accounts of the officials and employees covered by this chapter;

"(6) The providing of accommodations for the use of the courts and the various officials and employees covered by this chapter; and

"(7) Such other matters as may be assigned to him by the Supreme Court and the conference of the senior circuit judges. The clerks of the district courts, their deputies and assistants, and all other employees of said courts shall comply with any and all requests made by the Director or one of his assistants for information and statistical data bearing on the state of the dockets of such courts.

"SEC. 305. The Director, under the supervision of the conference of senior circuit judges, shall prepare and submit annually to the Bureau of the Budget estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary for the maintenance and operation of the United States courts and the administrative office of the United States courts, and such supplemental and deficiency estimates as may be required from time to time for the same purposes, in accordance with the provisions of the Budget and Accounting Act. Such estimates in respect of the circuit courts of appeals, the district courts of the United States, and the courts hereinafter referred to in the Territories and possessions, and of the administrative office shall be approved by the conference of senior circuit judges before their presentation to the Bureau of the Budget. Such estimates in respect to the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the Court of Claims, and the United States Customs Court shall be approved by the judges of such courts, respectively, before submission to the Bureau of the Budget. The Director shall submit annually to the conference of senior circuit judges a report of the activities of the administrative office and of the state of business of the courts, together with the statistical data compiled and submitted by him to the senior circuit judges as provided by clause 2 of section 304, with his recommendations. Such report shall be filed at least 2 weeks prior to the annual meeting of the conference, and a copy thereof shall also be filed with the Congress and with the Attorney General. Such report shall be a public document.

"SEC. 306. To the end that the work of the district courts shall be effectively and expeditiously transacted, it shall be the duty of the senior circuit judge of each circuit to call at such time and place as he shall designate, but at least twice in each year, a council composed of the circuit judges for such circuit, who are hereby designated a council for that purpose, at which council the senior circuit judge shall preside. The senior judge shall submit to the council the quarterly reports of the Director required to be filed by the provisions of section 304, clause (2), and such action shall be taken thereon by the council as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of the district judges promptly to carry out the directions of the council as to the administration of the business of their respective courts. Nothing contained in this section shall affect the provisions of existing law relating to the assignment of district judges to serve outside of the districts for which they, respectively, were appointed.

"SEC. 307. A conference shall be held annually in each judicial circuit, at such time and place, as shall be designated by the senior circuit judge thereof, which conference shall be composed of circuit and district judges in such circuit who reside within the continental United States, with participation in such conference on the part of members of the bar under rules to be prescribed by the circuit courts of appeals, for the purpose of considering the state of the business of the courts and advising ways and means of improving the administration of justice within the circuit. The senior circuit judge and each judge summoned and attending such conferences shall be allowed his actual expenses of travel and his necessary expenses for subsistence, not to exceed $10 per day, which payments shall be made by the United States marshal for the district in which the conference is held, upon the written certificate of the judge incurring such expenses.

"SEC. 308. The provisions of this chapter shall apply to the several United States circuit courts of appeals, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the several district courts of the United States in the continental United States, the Court of Claims, the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, the United States Customs Court, the District Court for the District of Alaska, the District Court for the District of Hawaii, the District Court of the United States for Puerto Rico, the United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone, the District Court of the Virgin Islands, and the United States Court for China. The term 'courts' as used in this chapter means the courts specified in this section. The term 'continental United States' as used in this chapter means the States of the Union and the District of Columbia. For the purposes of this chapter, the District of Columbia shall constitute a judicial circuit. The chief justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have the duties, powers, and authority of the senior circuit judge for such circuit, and the associate justices of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have the duties, powers, and authority of circuit judges for said circuit.

"SEC. 309. The following quoted provision of the act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the Department of Commerce (H. R. 6392) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, approved June 29, 1939, Public Act No. 156, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, to wit: 'That no part of this appropriation shall be used to defray the salary or expenses of any probation officer whose work fails to comply with the official orders, regulations, and probation standards promulgated by the Attorney General: Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used to defray the salary or expenses of any probation officer unless the district judge shall have so far as possible required the appointee to conform with the qualifications prescribed by the Attorney General: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to abridge the right of the district judges to appoint probation officers, or to make such orders as may be necessary to govern probation officers in their own courts:' is hereby repealed."

SEC. 2. Those employees of the Department of Justice engaged in the audit of accounts and vouchers referred to in section 304 of the Judicial Code shall, as far as practicable, be transferred to the Administrative Office of the United States courts. In such event, the appropriations available for the current fiscal year, from which such employees are paid shall be apportioned between the Department of Justice and the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, on the basis of duties transferred to the latter office. All records, documents, and papers relating to the audit of accounts referred to in section 304 of the Judicial Code shall be transferred from the Department of Justice to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

SEC. 3. All unexpended appropriations for the support, maintenance, and operation of the courts specified in section 306 of the Judicial Code for the current fiscal year, and all unexpended appropriations covering judicial personnel as specified in section 304 (1) of the Judicial Code, including appropriations for the salaries of justices and judges who have retired or who have resigned under the provisions of section 260 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 375), are hereby transferred to the control of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

SEC. 4. All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Department of Justice or the Attorney General, relating to the administrative audit of the accounts and vouchers referred to in section 304 of the Judicial Code, are hereby transferred to and vested in the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

SEC. 5. All administrative powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Department of Justice or the Attorney General, respecting clerks of courts, deputy clerks of courts and clerical assistants, law clerks, secretaries, and stenographers to the judges, and librarians in charge of libraries of the courts, are hereby vested in the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect 90 days after its approval.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before asking concurrence in the House amendment, I make a brief explanation. I read from the Annual Report of the Attorney General of the United States for the fiscal year 1937:

> I believe, too, that there is something inherently illogical in the present system of having the Budget and expenditures of the courts and the individual judges under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. The courts should be an independent, coordinate branch of the Government in every proper sense of the term.

No one believes that either the present Attorney General or the preceding one would use his position to attempt to intimidate any judge; but we know enough about human nature to know that no man, not even a judge, is coldly impersonal and objective with one who holds the purse strings.

A word as to the expenses of the judicial branch of the Government. During the last fiscal year the expenses of the judicial branch were but one-eighth of 1 percent of the total expenditures of the Federal Government.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the House has drastically amended Senate bill 281 to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act, and the bill as amended has been returned to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that an appropriate number of copies of the measure in its present form be printed for the information of the Members of this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGAL REQUIREMENTS FOR APPOINTEES TO GOVERNMENT POSITIONS—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1610) to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools and those acquiring their legal education in law offices in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience was announced as next in order.

Mr. GREEN. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to request that the Senator who made the objection withhold it until I can make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. GREEN. Very well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, by way of introduction, I should like to say that S. 1610 is designed to correct a condition in connection with legal employment in the service of the Federal Government, which is well known to everyone in Washington. Either through outright regulations as in the case of some departments and agencies, or through indirect methods which are understood by those who come in contact with the employment situation, discrimination is practiced against graduates of certain law schools, those who acquired their legal education in law offices or at home, and in some cases against those who did not graduate from one of three particular law schools.

The purpose of S. 1610 is to keep open the paths of opportunity to all American citizens who have the energy and initiative to prepare themselves for the legal profession by studying law, either at home, in a law office, or in a school, until qualified to pass the necessary examination and be admitted to the bar of one of the States so far as the jurisdiction of the Federal Government is concerned. Any attempt to restrict employment in the Federal Government to a class, no matter how such a class is set up, is contrary to the democratic principles on which the Government was founded and to the best interests of the Government.

Much comment is made on the necessity for improving the standards of the bar and, under the guise of improving such standards from time to time, encroachments have been made on the opportunities for qualifying for admission, unless a person either has the money himself or has relatives able to send him to a college for prelegal education, either 2 years or 4 years, depending on the school in which he takes his law studies, and this deplorable procedure has gradually become infiltrated into the Federal system of making selection for attorneyships. Under this system many of the most brilliant men in the history of the American bar would have been prevented from serving the Federal Government, and the Government would have been prevented from taking advantage of their legal qualifications.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me inquire of the able Senator from Texas if it is not a fact that under the rule in question, which was discussed in the hearing on the bill, it appeared that neither Abraham Lincoln nor Patrick Henry ever could have qualified for service or for the right to take an examination for legal service in at least one department of the Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is very true.

Mr. ANDREWS. The same applies to the immortal John Marshall.

Mr. NEELY. Yes; and to an innumerable throng of other illustrious American lawyers.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. As the chairman of the subcommittee which conducted the hearings on the bill, I venture the assertion that the rule which this measure is designed to annul is unfair, un-American, and unsound in the highest degree.

The evidence adduced upon the hearing demonstrates the fact that at least one important department of the Government has adopted and observes an unfair, unsound, and undemocratic rule of determining the eligibility of those who seek appointments as attorneys in the Federal service. The effect of this objectionable rule is, indirectly, to substitute the stamp of approval of the American Bar Association for merit and the label of the Association of American Law Schools for officially determined qualifications for Federal service.

Under the rule, an applicant of extraordinary intelligence, thorough education, and surpassing aptitude for the branch of service which he seeks to enter would be wholly ineligible for appointment in the absence of a certificate of graduation from a university or college "accredited" by one of the above-named associations.

The observance of the rule unjustly places a premium on the endorsement of two private associations, which are destitute of official status or responsibility; unduly favors the wealthy and the well-to-do who can afford to obtain their collegiate training in the more expensive institutions of learning; and closes the door of opportunity in the face of the qualified and deserving whose unavoidable circumstances have compelled them to acquire their legal education, which has enabled them to obtain admission to the bar, by long years of apprenticeship in law offices or by working their way through night schools.

I sincerely hope that the distinguished Senator who has objected to the consideration of the bill will generously withdraw his opposition and permit the Senate to vote on this meritorious measure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, the test of a man's preparation for the practice of the law is, or should be, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, whether or not he knows the law and whether or not his character is such as to entitle him to practice that profession. When he has been found qualified through the machinery set up to determine the fitness of a candidate to practice law, then he should be given equal opportunity. When carried to its logical conclusion, the practice of preventing free opportunities for those who obtained their education at home, in a law office, or a school from serving the Federal Government involves a denial of equal opportunity to those who are financially unable to obtain a prelegal education and a legal education in schools which require such training as a requisite for admission, and denies the opportunity to serve the Federal Government to those who have not been able to obtain such college training before studying law while earning their living. It has a deeper social implication, however. If there is any ideal that an American possesses, it is the belief that social stratification must be prevented and that equal opportunity must be preserved for all.

It seems to me that it is possible and probable that any lack of college training may be greatly offset by other qualifications, such as experience which comes with maturity, knowledge of procedure in the business world, initiative, and the desire to qualify for employment in the legal service of the Federal Government.

This bill is justified primarily to correct a condition, well known to exist, in connection with the selection of appointees to legal places in certain branches of the Federal Government, which, if permitted to flourish, will result in the establishment of a class system destructive to opportunity and to that extent, that is, lack of equal opportunity for Federal legal appointments, the undermining of our democratic system of government which stands on the basis of equal opportunities for all and special privileges for none.

I trust the Senator who objected will permit us to vote on the measure.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall be glad to reply to the arguments which have just been made. I do not suppose this is the proper time, during the consideration of the calendar, to do so.

I am in sympathy with the object of the bill which is to prevent any department in the United States Government from limiting selection of possible legal advisers to the graduates of one, two, or three law schools. However, the remedy chosen goes too far, when it provides a lower standard for the lawyers who shall advise the Government departments than is provided in legislation of 41 of the States of this country for practice at the bar of those States. Provisions requiring education for lawyers is not un-American. There is no inherent right of everybody to practice law whether or not they know any law. The reason for the laws of the various States requiring a certain amount of education for lawyers is to protect the American public so that those who are not fully qualified may not impose upon their clients. There is no reason why the departments of the Federal Government should have lower standards than those of the bars of 41 States of the United States. I assume that before long all the 48 States will have similar standards.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, at the first opportunity I shall move to take up this measure for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARY PIERCE AND JOHN K. QUACKENBUSH

The bill (S. 2500) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of Mary Pierce and John K. Quackenbush was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claims of Mary Pierce, New Hampton, N. Y., for $125; and John K. Quackenbush, Denton, N. Y., for $200, for the cost of replacing fences on their lands taken for firewood by enrollees of the Civilian Conservation Corps while engaged in removing field stones from such lands for use on the Wallkill River flood-control project in the fiscal year 1937, and to allow in full and final settlement of the claims the sum of not to exceed $325. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $325, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claims: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with these claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

EXPORTATION OF CERTAIN FIR AND CEDAR LOGS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1108) to restrict the exportation of certain Douglas fir peeler logs and Port Orford cedar logs, and for other purposes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Douglas fir peeler logs shall not be exported from the United States, or any Territory or possession thereof, except with the approval of the President on the joint recommendation of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture, after an application made to the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act, a "peeler log" shall mean a log (a) having a diameter of 24 or more inches at either end; (b) suitable for rotary veneer cutting and capable of producing not less than 20 percent of clear veneer, based upon the scale content of the log; (c) having not less than eight annual rings per inch at the smaller end; and (d) not containing such defects as shatter, excessive splits, loose annual rings, loose or soft heart decay, or any other defect which makes such a log unsuitable for rotary veneer cutting. Any defect apparent at both ends of a log shall be considered to exist throughout a log.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this act, Port Orford cedar logs shall not be exported from the United States irrespective of size or quality.

SEC. 4. Any person who knowingly exports or causes to be exported any such logs without the approval of the President, as provided in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction in any district court of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

COMMERCE IN DOMESTICALLY PRODUCED FISHERY PRODUCTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1852) to promote the free flow of domestically produced fishery products in commerce, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the numerals "1939" to strike out "and for each fiscal year thereafter", and insert "and for three fiscal years thereafter"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "act" to insert "not to exceed 50 per centum of the amount annually available thereafter", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939, and for 3 fiscal years thereafter, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated an amount equal to 40 percent of the duties on fishery products under the customs laws during the period January 1 to December 31, both inclusive, preceding the beginning of each such fiscal year as calculated by the United States Department of Commerce. Such sums shall be maintained in a separate fund and shall be used by the Secretary of Commerce to (1) promote the free flow of domestically produced fishery products in commerce by conducting a fishery educational service; (2) develop and increase markets for fishery products of domestic origin; (3) reestablish the purchasing power of fishermen and encourage the domestic consumption of fishery products by diverting such products from the normal channels of trade and commerce, by the payment of benefits or indemnities or by other means; and (4) foster the conservation of the commercial fishery resources of the United States and Alaska by making payments in connection with the capture or taking from the water of any commercial fishery product for domestic consumption. Determinations by the Secretary of Commerce as to what constitutes diversion and what constitutes normal channels of trade and commerce and what constitutes capture or taking for domestic consumption shall be final. The sums hereby authorized to be appropriated under this section shall be expended for such one or more of the above-specified purposes, and at such times, in such manner, and in such amounts as the Secretary of Commerce finds will effectuate substantial accomplishment of any one or more of the purposes of this section.

SEC. 2. To aid the Secretary of Commerce in carrying out the provisions of clause (3) of section 1 of this act, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture, from time to time, such funds authorized to be appropriated under this act, not to exceed 50 percent of the amount annually available thereafter, as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire fishery products and distribute such products through Federal, State, and private relief agencies.

SEC. 3. The provisions of law relating to the acquisition of materials or supplies for the United States shall not apply to the acquisition of commodities under this act.

SEC. 4. As used in this act, the term "fishery products" includes fish, shellfish, crustacea, seaweeds, and other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life and the products and byproducts thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk certain additional amendments which I have been instructed to offer on behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The additional amendments offered by the Senator from Florida on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 8, after the word "means" and the semicolon, it is proposed to strike out the word "and."

On page 2, lines 11 and 12, after the word "consumption", it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following: "and (5) investigate basic biological research problems to increase existing fundamental knowledge concerning the life of our coastal waters leading to the protection and improvement of our natural resources."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the bill contemplates that there shall be available for aid to the fishing industry a sum of money equal to 40 percent of the customs receipts derived from the importation of fish products into this country. The Senator is aware that under the existing law no benefit at all is available to the fishing industry. A year or so ago we passed a bill appropriating about $1,000,000 for the purpose of helping the fishing industry by letting fish products come within the definition of agricultural products, so as to receive the benefit of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. That benefit expired with the appropriation made at that time. So under the existing situation no funds at all are available to the fishing industry.

Mr. RUSSELL. Can the Senator tell us approximately how much revenue is derived from the imposition of tariff duties on fish?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the estimates are about $5,000,000; and the Senator will observe that 40 percent of that figure would be about $2,000,000 a year, which would be available to the entire fishing industry.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would the effect of the Senator's amendment be to take funds away from the funds allocated by section 32 of the farm legislation?

Mr. PEPPER. No, Mr. President. The bill was intended to avoid that effect. In other words, it goes outside the scope of the appropriation made available under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, so as not to interfere with agricultural commodities receiving the full benefit of that appropriation. However, we felt that fishery products were equally entitled to the consideration and assistance of the Government. In order to accomplish that object without interfering with agriculture, I introduced the bill. The committee held hearings upon it and considered it at length. Representatives of the fishing interests appeared before the committee.

I should like to call the Senator's attention particularly to the fact that under the provisions of the bill half the appropriation must be devoted to educational purposes, to educate the people in the use of fish products and make them aware how such products may be economically employed. So at least half the appropriation under the bill is designed to stimulate private enterprise with respect to the fish industry. That activity is under the Bureau of Fisheries, and not under the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. Not to exceed 50 percent of the appropriation may be turned over by the Bureau of Fisheries to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, so that it may divert excess surpluses by purchases.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a further question. It occurs to me that the bill would have the effect of reducing the funds available under section 32, because it takes 40 percent of all the funds derived from the duties on fish or fish products, and section 32 takes 30 percent of all funds derived from all sources. How does the bill avoid reducing the amount available under section 32?

Mr. PEPPER. It does not take the specific dollars, as it were. It merely takes an amount equal to 40 percent of the amount of the revenues derived from the importation of fish products. What is the percentage now taken under section 32?

Mr. RUSSELL. Thirty percent.

Mr. PEPPER. That is, of course, 30 percent of the whole. Under the bill, 40 percent of the amount taken in from the importation of fish products through the Customs Service would be made available out of the Treasury, but no specific funds would be earmarked. That figure is merely used as a yardstick to determine the amount. The bill is drawn to avoid conflict with agricultural interests, which I thought were entitled to receive the full benefit of section 32. However, I was sure the agricultural interests did not wish to deny the fishing interests similar consideration, provided the fishing interests did not compete with the agricultural interests.

Mr. RUSSELL. I see great objection to the administration of section 32 and the administration of the fishery fund by the Bureau of Fisheries. Does the bill undertake to give the Director of the Bureau of Fisheries any power to regulate the amount of fish taken from the sea?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Are we now proceeding under the 5-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that the Senate is now proceeding under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not intend to take the Senator off the floor by that inquiry; but I ask him to yield in order that I may give notice that I have been requested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to object to the consideration of the bill, because he has a brief which he wishes to present in opposition to the bill. He has been necessarily called from the Chamber.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator make that statement. I was not aware that the bill was called up until it was actually under consideration. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] asked for an explanation of it, and I was endeavoring to give an explanation. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] did say he wanted to interpose an objection, but a little later he stated that he would withdraw the objection. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Florida if he will explain to us at this time the relationship between Senate bill 1852, Calendar No. 630, and Senate bill 2110, Calendar No. 724.

Mr. PEPPER. Is that a House bill?

Mr. DANAHER. No; Senate bill 2110. That bill purports to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to authorize the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to purchase fish, including shellfish, and the products thereof; and apparently it relates in every particular to the same subject matter described in the bill now on the calendar as No. 630, Senate bill 1852.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator again state the number? I am anxious to have the privilege of making an explanation.

Mr. DANAHER. The bill to which I refer is Senate bill 2110, Calendar No. 724. It is the one about which the Senator spoke to me a few minutes ago.

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad to have an opportunity to make the explanation.

Mr. President, the bill to which I am sure the Senator refers is a House bill which is now upon the Senate Calendar. That bill enlarges the class of products which may be available for the benefit of the funds possible under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It merely says that fishery products, as well as agricultural products, may be purchased by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. That is the provision of the House bill.

My bill provides not that section 32 funds but that other funds which have not so far been appropriated shall be the funds from which fishery products may receive some benefit. We merely use the yardstick of the amount of the customs receipts from the importation of fish commodities into this country to determine the amount of Federal assistance to the fishing industry, and, based upon that yardstick, the calculation would be about $2,000,000 a year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask that it be noted in the RECORD at this time that there are three bills pending, all dealing with substantially the same subject matter; the first being Senate bill 1852, Calendar No. 630; the second being Senate bill 2110, Calendar No. 724; and the third being House bill 5681, Calendar No. 854. The relationship between them will be the occasion for further discussion at another time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF LAND-GRANT COLLEGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1850) to aid the States and Territories in making provisions for the retirement of employees of the land-grant colleges, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 2, line 19, after the word "deposits" to insert "and contributions"; in line 25, after the word "deposits" to insert "and contributions"; and on page 3, line 9, to insert a further proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, pursuant to the recognized obligations of governments to guarantee the social security of their employees and in order to provide for the retirement on an annuity, or otherwise of all persons being paid salaries in whole or in part from grants of Federal funds to the several States and Territories pursuant to the terms of the act approved July 2, 1862, for the endowment and support of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts, and acts supplementary thereto providing for instruction in agriculture and mechanic arts, for the establishment of agricultural experiment stations, and for cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics, all States and Territories are hereafter authorized, notwithstanding any contrary provisions in said acts, to withhold from expenditure, from Federal funds advanced under the terms of said acts, amounts designated as employer contributions to be made by the States or Territories to retirement systems established in accordance with the laws of such States or Territories, or established by the governing boards of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts in accordance with the authority vested in them, and to deposit such amounts to the credit of such retirement systems for subsequent disbursement in accordance with the terms of the retirement systems in effect in the respective States and Territories: Provided, That there shall not be deducted from Federal funds and deposited to the credit of retirement accounts as employer contributions, amounts in excess of 5 percent of that portion of the salaries of employees paid from such Federal funds: Provided further, That, for the purpose of making deposits and contributions in retirement systems in favor of any employee, in no event shall the deductions from any Federal fund advanced pursuant to the foregoing acts be in greater proportion to the total deductions for such employee than the salary received under such Federal funds bears to the total salary from Federal sources: Provided further, That the deposits and contributions from funds of Federal origin to any retirement system established by a State or a land-grant college must be at least equaled by the total contributions thereto on the part of the individuals concerned, the State, and the counties: And provided further, That no deductions for the foregoing purposes shall be made from Federal funds in support of employees appointed pursuant to the terms of the foregoing acts, whose salaries are paid wholly by the States or Territories: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any employee paid in whole or in part from Federal funds who may be subject to the United States Civil Service Retirement Act, as amended.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARKING METERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 2048) authorizing the installation of parking meters and other devices on the streets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered in their discretion, within the limits of appropriations therefor by Congress, which are hereby authorized, to secure and install mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction and control of the said Commissioners (in addition to those mechanical parking meters or devices installed pursuant to the authority conferred on the said Commissioners by section 11, page 40, of Public, No. 458, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, approved April 4, 1938), such meters or devices to be located at such points as the Commissioners may determine, and the said Commissioners are authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and as an aid to such regulation and control of the parking of vehicles the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the parking of vehicles where meters or devices are installed.

SEC. 2. The said Commissioners are further authorized and directed to deposit all such fees as are collected to the credit of the special fund entitled: "Highway fund, gasoline tax, and motor-vehicle fees, District of Columbia," except those which are required to complete the payment of the purchase price and cost of installation of such mechanical parking meters or devices as were authorized by section 11, page 40, of Public, No. 458, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, approved April 4, 1938.

SEC. 3. The said Commissioners shall include in their annual estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1940 and for each fiscal year thereafter such amounts as may be necessary for the purchase and installation of additional mechanical parking meters or devices and the maintenance and operation of all such parking meters or devices, including personal services and other necessary expenses.

REGISTRY OF PURSERS AND SURGEONS AS STAFF OFFICERS ON VESSELS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6076) to provide for the registry of pursers and surgeons as staff officers on vessels of the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 5, page 4, line 13, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any vessel of the United States engaged in ferry operations", and insert in lieu thereof "That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any vessel of the United States operated on bays, sounds, inland waterways, and lakes, other than the Great Lakes, or to passenger ferries and car ferries operated on the Great Lakes", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. (a) It shall be unlawful to employ any person or for any person to serve in any grade or perform the duties of any grade specified in section 1 of this act on any vessel of the United States unless he shall be in bona fide possession of a certificate of registry, issued under the provisions of this act, as an officer in such grade; and anyone violating this provision shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense: Provided, That in the event no registered staff officer is available and obtainable at the time of sailing, the vessel may sail with an unregistered staff officer or without any staff officer: Provided further, That such staff officer shall not be included in the vessel's inspection certificate.

(b) Any staff officer registered under the provisions of this act who shall change by addition, interpolation, or erasure of any kind, any certificate of registry referred to in this section shall have his registry and his certificate of registry revoked and be punished by a fine of not more than $100: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any vessel of the United States operated on bays, sounds, inland waterways, and lakes, other than the Great Lakes, or to passenger ferries and car ferries operated on the Great Lakes.

(c) Any registry or certificate of registry issued under the authority of this act to any staff officer shall be suspended or revoked upon satisfactory proof of bad conduct, inattention to his duties, or the willful violation of any provisions of this act applicable to him, in the same manner and with like procedure as is provided in the case of suspension or revocation of licenses of officers under the provisions of section 4450 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 2, line 9, after the word "than", to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. On page 3, line 22, after the words "on any" I move to insert the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. On page 3, line 23, after the name "United States", I move to insert the words "designated therein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1740) to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining, in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARKETING AND MARKETING SERVICES FOR FARM COMMODITIES

The bill (S. 2212) to provide for the development of marketing and marketing services for farm commodities was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I inquire if objection was made to Senate bill 2212?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] requested that the bill go over.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me state for the information of the learned Senator from North Carolina that recent correspondence which I have had regarding this bill shows that there are negotiations pending which may straighten out some differences between the State departments of agriculture and the land-grant colleges and extension service which will enable the Senator from South Carolina to have enacted the principle of his bill. All this correspondence indicates that the object of the bill is a good one, and both sides agree on it, but there are evidently some things that ought to be straightened out in connection with the measure.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bill is, after all, only an authorization and carries no appropriation. If it should go through now, we could put in the proper amendment when the agricultural appropriation bill comes up next year. I should like very much to get the bill off the calendar and have it in a position where appropriations could be made next year. In the meantime, the Secretary of Agriculture has endorsed the proposed legislation in a formal letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to have an opportunity to submit to the Senator from North Carolina some of the correspondence to which I have referred, in order that he may know the point of my objection to the present consideration of the bill. I should like to have it go over.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well; but I had hoped I could secure the passage of the bill today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF HAWAIIAN ORGANIC ACT

The bill (H. R. 161) to amend section 73 of the Hawaiian Organic Act, approved April 30, 1900, as amended, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 73 of the Hawaiian Organic Act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding at the end of paragraph (i) of said section 73 the following: "Provided, however, That any such lot not taken or taken and forfeited, or any lot or part thereof surrendered with the consent of the Commissioner, may, instead of being disposed of as hereinabove provided, be disposed of for cash and forthwith patented to any citizen of the United States, possessing the qualifications of a homesteader as now provided by law, applying therefor and who has qualified for and received a loan under the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. IV, title 7, ch. 33), for the acquisition of a farm: And provided further, That any patent issued upon any such sale shall contain the same restrictive provisions as are now contained in a patent issued after compliance with a right of purchase lease, cash freehold agreement, or special homestead agreements."

SEC. 2. This act shall be in force and effect from and after its passage.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The bill (H. R. 5835) to authorize the President to render closer and more effective the relationship between the American republics was announced as next in order.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE IN SEEDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5625) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in seeds, to require labeling and to prevent misrepresentation of seeds in interstate commerce, to require certain standards with respect to certain imported seeds, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has heretofore been considered and there is pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 24, it is proposed to add the following proviso:

And provided further, That such seeds produced or sold by him when transported or offered for transportation to any State, Territory, or district shall not be exempted from the provisions of sections 201 and 202 unless said seeds shall be in compliance with the operation and effect of the laws of such State, Territory, or district, enacted in the exercise of its police power, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such seed had been produced, sold, offered, or exposed for sale in such State, Territory, or district, and shall not be exempted therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GURNEY subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GURNEY. Has House bill 5625, Calendar No. 658, been passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Dakota that the bill was passed.

Mr. GURNEY. I was called from the Chamber a few minutes ago. I intended to object to the bill for the reason that I do not believe a bill of this nature should be passed when bills on the calendar are being considered by unanimous consent. Objections have been made to various other bills. I had some amendments in mind that I should like to propose. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. GURNEY. I now ask that the bill be passed over. The sponsors of the bill may bring it up at any time, at which time I shall have some amendments to offer to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I inquire what became of Calendar No. 656, House bill 5835?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] objected to its consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would withhold his objection, unless he cares to state what it is.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will be glad to withhold the objection temporarily.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this bill was sent up by the State Department simply to implement an act which has already been passed. Several weeks ago the Senate passed a bill authorizing an appropriation to carry out the treaties and understandings adopted at Buenos Aires and at Lima, Peru. That bill authorized an appropriation. The bill now before the Senate is purely to allow the departmental agencies to serve under the act we have already passed. If we do not pass this bill, then, under the ruling of the Comptroller General, the services not being designated, services by various departmental officers of the State Department would meet objection. The bill is very short. All it states is that these various departmental agencies may carry out the law which we have already passed.

It adds to that one other section, I will say to the Senator from Georgia. It allows the State Department to appoint an advisory committee, particularly with regard to cultural matters. The Senate committee amended that. The advisory committee was at first allowed $10 a day when they were serving; they were allowed mileage. The Senate committee reported an amendment to provide mileage in the United States, for the advisory committee are not supposed to go anywhere except to Washington. That is all this bill is.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the reason for my objection to the bill was statements I saw when I looked at the rather lengthy report of the committee and saw references to funds to be appropriated from the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of carrying on agricultural endeavors in South American countries. It so happens that the Subcommittee on Appropriations handling the Agricultural Department appropriation bill very carefully went into the matter of the policy of appropriating funds from the Treasury of the United States for the survey of forest resources of South America and for the purpose of encouraging the growth of rubber and other agricultural products in South American countries. I am not clear even after listening to the explanation of the Senator from Nevada—and I know that is due to my own stupidity—as to what effect this bill would have on the Government of the United States projecting itself into agricultural activities in the South American republics.

Mr. PITTMAN. I may say that the report sets forth the recommendations of what is called the interdepartmental committee. They are only recommendations.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does not the bill authorize the program to which I have referred to be carried out?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it does not at all. The Senator will see that in the bill it is provided that services may be performed in connection with the treaties subject to such appropriations as may be made. It is expressly put in that way.

There are some things that may be attended to now in connection with the treaties, such as the exchange of professorships and the exchange of scholarships. Those are all provided for. The law also provides for furnishing experts of various kinds to South American governments. We pay for them, of course, but the South American governments reimburse us.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Nevada does not contend, does he, that the governments of the South American countries ever propose to pay us back the amount which it is contemplated will be spent for agricultural purposes?

Mr. PITTMAN. No, I agree with the Senator as to that, but this bill is only to authorize officers of the Department to perform some other services whenever the appropriation is made. We are about to leave here. I do not know what will be appropriated. Some money has been appropriated already in connection with these matters; other sums have not been appropriated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield in a moment. It is totally impossible, though, for the officers of the Department to perform these outside services unless they are authorized to do so by Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. If this bill is passed by the Congress will it not be possible to send a scientific expert from the Department of Agriculture to South American countries to conduct the service to which I have referred?

Mr. PITTMAN. It would not be unless there were an appropriation for it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not limited to appropriations to be made for that specific purpose, is it?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; but the bill says "subject to appropriations that may be made." It is only to qualify officers of the Department to serve when the money shall be furnished. I think that it would be unfortunate to go away from here and not provide for them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Nevada whether I am right in my understanding that the purpose of this proposed legislation is to make it possible for our Government to promote good will in Latin-American countries through the printed page and the exchange of professors and moving pictures.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is largely the purpose; that has to do with cultural relations.

Mr. LODGE. I have also been asked whether this program might result in furnishing South American countries with knowledge regarding agricultural and industrial processes which they do not now possess, thereby building them up to become competitors of ours which now they are not. Is there any substance to that suggestion?

Mr. PITTMAN. I asume that a number of those countries have asked for experts from our agricultural departments, such as from the Bureau of Entomology, to go down there and make a study of the destruction of certain pests. We have been willing to do that and a law authorizing that to be done is now on the statute books. How much money will be provided for that work I do not know, but a law making provision for that service has been passed. The law authorizing our Government to carry out the treaties with South America has already been passed. The only things this bill provides for are two: First, to authorize the members of the Department to serve in the capacity of carrying out treaties and agreements which have been entered into with South American governments and to provide for the appointment of an advisory committee, which advisory committee shall simply serve in an advisory capacity in the State Department.

Mr. RUSSELL. The distinguished Senator from Nevada has referred to treaties and agreements which have been entered into with foreign countries. I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, so I will ask the Senator in what treaty has this Government assumed any responsibility for expending large sums of money to teach the people of South America how to grow various agricultural commodities that we think might be beneficial to us or to them, or to survey the forest resources of South America, and to develop the quantity and quality of various products that are capable of production in South American republics?

Mr. PITTMAN. The only extent to which I remember that those treaties go is that it is the intent and purpose of the parties to exchange scientific knowledge.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is aware of this recommendation that has been made to the Committee on Appropriations, and the reference in the committee report—not to any exchange of scientific knowledge but to appropriations to be made by the American Congress for the purpose of establishing experiment stations and teaching the people of the South American republics how to produce these various agricultural commodities.

Representatives of both the State Department and the Department of Agriculture appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and went into the matter rather fully. The bill does not contemplate any exchange of information; but they did recommend that appropriations be made by Congress for the purpose of assisting and supplementing the work now being done by the departments of agriculture of the several South American republics.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; and the Congress does not have to adopt any of the recommendations made by that unofficial committee, and apparently it is not adopting some of them, and may not adopt all of them. The bill simply provides that these members of the Department may serve, subject to any appropriation which may be made. One of them is purely implementing the matter in advance, while the other is left to the appropriations which may be made. I cannot say what they will be.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am very loath to object to any bill dealing with international relations which is urged by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, but I should like to have an opportunity to go into this matter further. On the next call of the calendar I shall probably withdraw my objection, but for the time being I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may have this matter in proper sequence, I call attention to what I think is the part of the committee report which really expresses the point involved in this bill. It is on pages 16 and 17 of the report. Briefly, it is as follows:

> Taking cognizance of the increasing importance of cultural relationships, the Congress last June provided for the establishment in the Department of State of a Division of Cultural Relations which is already functioning. It will serve as the channel of communications to foreign governments for all branches of the Government of the United States in regard to cultural and intellectual matters, as an administrative agency, and as a clearing house for information, proposals, etc. Since much of its work will be in the field of education, including student fellowships and exchanges of professors, the new division will function in close relation to the Office of Education of the Interior and to the Smithsonian Institution and the Library of Congress. It will also function as the liaison agency between educational institutions and foundations in the United States, and similar institutions in the other American Republics.

I wish to comment in passing that I think this is a constructive piece of legislation, having a tendency to inform South Americans of North American culture, to inform North Americans of South American culture, and to create a more intimate and friendly relationship between the people of the two countries.

This is not a novel idea. As a matter of fact, some of the business institutions of America conceived this plan at least 25 years ago, and themselves privately financed an exchange of students between the Latin-American countries and the North American countries for the same objective that this bill has. Section 2, on page 2 of the bill, which provides for paying the expenses of meetings, is guarded, so that it cannot be made a junketing proposition, by an amendment which has been accepted by the committee, and which I assume is expected to be adopted when the bill is passed.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true, of course. When the bill comes up, that amendment will be offered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. So, Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from Georgia will give the bill further study and ultimately favor it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to refer the Senator from Vermont to page 7 of the committee's report, under subsection A, Department of Agriculture, and invite his attention to the four or five subdivisions therein stated as to the work that it is proposed the Department of Agriculture shall do in these South American republics.

First, we are to have four new agricultural attachés, in Mexico City, Habana, Rio de Janeiro, and Panama City, plus strengthening present office in Buenos Aires. These offices are to investigate agricultural and economic resources both as to noncompetitive and competitive products, serve as regional headquarters for future technical investigations, and advise United States missions regarding agricultural matters at an expense of $120,000 per annum.

Second, there is to be a survey of hardwood forest products of tropical American republics, at an expense of $65,000 per annum.

Third, a survey regarding soils, vegetation, climatic factors, disease conditions, and so forth, in the Tropics, especially as to rubber, quinine, and other products not grown in the United States, at an expense of $65,000 per annum.

I may further state to the Senator from Vermont that the Secretary of Agriculture and a representative of the State Department, in testifying before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, stated that these expenditures were only the beginning of a much larger and more comprehensive program, which would result in an annual cost of more than $1,000,000 on the Treasury of the United States in experimenting and demonstrating to the people of the South American republics the proper method of production of agricultural crops. I feel that it is somewhat overstepping any exchange of cultural background when our Department of Agriculture puts that much expense on the Treasury of the United States to augment and supplement the work already being done by the departments of agriculture of the South American republics.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to continue for just a moment.

Assuming that the education is cultural which is provided for in the part of the report referred to, the question of judgment as to how much money should be expended and how far we should go into it would arise on the appropriation, I assume, because the bill does not undertake to fix those amounts at all, but simply provides that the President shall have authority to carry on these relations, subject to such appropriations as Congress may see fit to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ECONOMIC RESEARCH STATIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 647, Senate bill 1740, to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining in connection with State university schools of business administration research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is recorded as having objected to the consideration of the bill. He advises me that he did not intend to object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DANAHER. There is, Mr. President. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR WHEAT

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 248) to provide minimum national allotments for wheat was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LADIES OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC

The bill (S. 521) for the incorporation of the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the organization known as the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, with a membership limited to persons of blood relationship to veterans of the Union Army of the Civil War, 1861–65, is hereby created a body politic, in the District of Columbia, by the name of "Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic" by which name it shall be a person in law, capable of suing and being sued, and of having and exercising all incidental powers of a litigant or otherwse as if it were a natural person, with power to acquire by purchase, gift, bequest, or devise, and to hold, convey, or otherwise dispose of property, real or personal, as may be necessary or calculated to carry into effect the patriotic, educational, fraternal, and charitable purposes of the organization.

SEC. 2. LANDS OF QUAPAW INDIANS, OKLAHOMA

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS

The bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly. I am not making the objection on my own account, but on behalf of a Senator who is absent.

Mr. CONNALLY. Knowing the liberal views of the Senator from Vermont, I assumed that some situation of that kind existed. I did not assume that he would object.

I wish to say that this is a general river and harbor bill, and I very much hope that the leadership will find occasion to bring the measure up at an early date. There are several items in the bill, particularly one flood-control item relating to the city of Houston and Harris County, which is of the highest importance. Recently there has been another flood in that area, entailing very large sums in damages, and without undertaking to discuss some of the items in the bill I do desire to point out its importance, not only because of the items relating to my own State, but in respect to the general subject of river and harbor improvements all over the United States. Since the bill is objected to today, I very much hope that the leadership will find occasion, in plenty of time before adjournment, to have the measure taken up so that we may have some hope of its enactment before Congress shall adjourn.

1. In the case of an unintentional or mistaken trespass, the trespasser, or any purchaser of the timber or other forest product, shall be liable for the standing value of the timber or other products.

2. In the case of a willful trespass, the trespasser, or any willful purchaser of the timber or other forest product, shall be liable for triple such value.

SEC. 2. Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. When used in this act, unless the context indicates otherwise—

The term "alteration" includes changes of any kind and reconstruction.

The term "bridge" means a lawful bridge over navigable waters of the United States, including approaches thereto, used and operated for the purpose of carrying railroad traffic, or both railroad and highway traffic.

The term "bridge owner" means any corporation, association, partnership, or individual owning any bridge, and, when any bridge shall be in the possession or under the control of any trustee, receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, or lessee, said term shall include both the owner of the legal title and the person or entity in possession or control of such bridge.

The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of War acting directly or through the Chief of Engineers.

The term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, includes the Territories and possessions of the United States.

OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGATION

SEC. 2. No bridge shall at any time unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of any navigable waters of the United States.

NOTICE, HEARINGS, AND FINDINGS

SEC. 3. Whenever any bridge shall, in the opinion of the Secretary, at any time unreasonably obstruct such navigation, it shall be the duty of the Secretary, after notice to interested parties, to hold a hearing at which the bridge owner, those interested in water navigation thereunder or therethrough, those interested in either railroad or highway traffic thereover, and any other party or parties in interest shall have full opportunity to offer evidence and be heard as to whether any alteration of such bridge is needed, and if so, what alterations are needed, having due regard to the necessity of free and unobstructed water navigation and to the necessities of the rail or highway traffic. If, upon such hearing, the Secretary determines that any alterations of such bridge are necessary in order to render navigation through or under it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed, having due regard also for the necessities of rail or highway traffic thereover, he shall so find and shall issue and cause to be served upon interested parties an order requiring such alterations of such bridge as he finds to be reasonably necessary for the purposes of navigation.

SUBMISSION AND APPROVAL OF GENERAL PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the bridge owner to prepare and submit to the Secretary, within 90 days after service of his order, general plans and specifications to provide for the alteration of such bridge in accordance with such order, and for such additional alteration of such bridge as the bridge owner may desire to meet the necessities of railroad or highway traffic, or both. The Secretary may approve or reject such general plans and specifications, in whole or in part, and may require the submission of new or additional plans and specifications, but when the Secretary shall have approved general plans and specifications, they shall be final and binding upon all parties unless changes therein be afterward approved by the Secretary and the bridge owner.

CONTRACTS FOR PROJECT; GUARANTY OF COST

SEC. 5. After approval of such general plans and specifications by the Secretary, and within 90 days after notification of such approval, the bridge owner shall, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe, take bids for the alteration of such bridge in accordance with such general plans and specifications. All bids, including any bid for all or part of the project submitted by the bridge owner, shall be submitted to the Secretary, together with a recommendation by the bridge owner as to the most competent bid or bids, and at the same time the bridge owner shall submit to the Secretary a written guaranty that the total cost of the project, including the cost of such work as is to be performed by the bridge owner and not included in the work to be performed by contract, shall not exceed the sum stated in said guaranty. The Secretary may direct the bridge owner to reject all bids and to take new bids, or may authorize the bridge owner to proceed with the project, by contract, or partly by contract and partly by the bridge owner, or wholly by the bridge owner. Upon such authorization and fixing of the proportionate shares of the cost as provided in section 6, the bridge owner shall, within a reasonable time to be prescribed by the Secretary, proceed with the work of alteration; and the cost thereof shall be borne by the United States and by the bridge owner, as hereinafter provided.

APPORTIONMENT OF COST

SEC. 6. At the time the Secretary shall authorize the bridge owner to proceed with the project, as provided in section 5, and after an opportunity to the bridge owner to be heard thereon, the Secretary shall determine and issue an order specifying the proportionate shares of the total cost of the project to be borne by the United States and by the bridge owner. Such apportionment shall be made on the following basis: The bridge owner shall bear such part of the cost as is attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to the bridge owner as a result of the alteration, and the United States shall bear the balance of the cost. In such direct and special benefits shall be included additional length of life or period of usefulness of a bridge. In apportioning cost due allowance to the bridge owner shall be made for the present value of bridge replaced at the time of replacement.

PAYMENT OF SHARE OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 7. When the Secretary shall have approved the general plans and specifications for the alteration of such bridge and the guaranty with respect to the cost thereof, and shall have fixed the proportionate shares thereof as between the United States and the bridge owner, he shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury a certified copy of his approval of such plans and specifications and guaranty, and of his order fixing the proportionate shares of the United States and of the bridge owner, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside, out of any appropriation available for such purpose, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of the project. When the Secretary finds that such project has been completed in accordance with his order, he shall cause to be paid to the bridge owner, out of the funds so set aside, the proportionate share of the total cost of the project allocated to the United States; or he may, in his discretion, from time to time, cause payments to be made on such construction costs as the work progresses. The total payments out of Federal funds shall not exceed the proportionate share of the United States of the total cost of the project paid or incurred by the bridge owner, and, if such total cost exceeds the cost guaranteed by the bridge owner, shall not exceed the proportionate share of the United States of such guaranteed cost, except that if the cost of the work exceeds the guaranteed cost by reason of emergencies, conditions beyond the control of the owner, or unforeseen or undetermined conditions, the Secretary may, after full review of all the circumstances, provide for additional payments by the United States to help defray such excess cost to the extent he deems to be reasonable and proper, and shall certify such additional payments to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment. All payments to any bridge owner herein provided for shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury on warrants drawn by the Secretary, payable to the bridge owner.

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH ORDERS; PENALTIES; REMOVAL OF BRIDGE

SEC. 9. Any bridge owner who shall willfully fail or refuse to remove a bridge, or so much thereof as may have been found by the Secretary to be an unreasonable obstruction to navigation, or to comply with any lawful order of the Secretary, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished in any court of competent jurisdiction by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such bridge owner shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such bridge owner to additional penalties therefor. In addition to the penalties above prescribed the Secretary may, upon the failure or refusal of any bridge owner to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary in regard thereto, cause the removal of any such bridge and accessory works at the expense of the bridge owner; and suit for such expense may be brought in the name of the United States against such bridge owner and recovery had for such expense in any court of competent jurisdiction. The removal of any bridge erected or maintained in violation of the provisions of this act or the order or direction of the Secretary made in pursuance thereof, and compliance with any order of the Secretary made with respect to any bridge in accordance with the provisions of this act, may be enforced by injunction, mandamus, or other summary process upon application to the district court of any district in which such bridge may, in whole or in part, exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Secretary.

REVIEW OF FINDINGS AND ORDERS

SEC. 10. Any order made or issued under section 6 of this act may be reviewed by the circuit court of appeals for any judicial circuit in which the bridge in question is wholly or partly located, if a petition for such review is filed within 3 months after the date such order is issued. The judgment of any such court shall be final except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certification or certiorari, in the manner provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended. The review by such Court shall be limited to questions of law, and the findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. Upon such review, such Court shall have power to affirm or, if the order is not in accordance with law, to modify or to reverse the order, with or without remanding the case for a rehearing as justice may require. Proceedings under this section shall not operate as a stay of any order of the Secretary issued under provisions of this act other than section 6, or relieve any bridge owner of any liability or penalty under such provisions.

REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

SEC. 11. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations, and to make and issue such orders, as may be necessary or appropriate for carrying out the provisions of this act.

EXISTING PROVISIONS OF LAW

SEC. 12. The first sentence of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 494), and section 18 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1899 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 33, sec. 502), shall be inapplicable with respect to any bridge to which the provisions of this act are applicable; and, in any case in which any requirement under either of such sections has been made with respect to the alteration of any bridge and such alteration had not been begun prior to January 1, 1939, the provisions of this act shall be applicable with respect to such alteration, and the Secretary shall make such additional findings and orders and take such other action as may be necessary in order to provide that such alteration will be made as nearly as possible in conformity with the provisions of this act.

RELOCATION OF BRIDGES

SEC. 13. If the owner of any bridge used for railroad traffic and the Secretary shall agree that in order to remove an obstruction to navigation, or for any other purpose, a relocation of such bridge or the construction of a new bridge upon a new location would be preferable to an alteration of the existing bridge, such relocation or new construction may be carried out at such new site and upon such terms as may be acceptable to the bridge owner and the Secretary, and the cost of such relocation or new construction, including also any expense of changes in and additions to rights-of-way, stations, tracks, spurs, sidings, switches, signals, and other railroad facilities and property, and relocation of shippers required for railroad connection with the bridge at the new site, shall be apportioned as between the bridge owner and the United States in the manner which is provided for in section 6 hereof in the case of an alteration and the share of the United States paid from the appropriation authorized in section 8 hereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as requiring the United States to pay any part of the expense of building any bridge across a navigable stream which the Secretary of War shall not find to be, in fact, a relocation of an existing bridge.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIABILITY OF COMMON CARRIERS FOR INJURIES TO EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1708) to amend section 51 of chapter 2, title 45, of the Code of Laws of the United States of America, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That sections 1, 4, and 6, chapter 149 (35 Stat. 65, act of April 22, 1908), are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That every common carrier by railroad, while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories, or between any of the States and Territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the States or Territories, or between the District of Columbia or any of the States or Territories and any foreign nation or nations, shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce, or, in case of the death of such employee, to his or her personal representative, for the benefit of the surviving widow or husband and children of such employee; and, if none, then of such employee's parents; and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves, or other equipment.

"Any employee of a carrier, any part of whose duties as such employee shall be the furtherance of interstate or foreign commerce; or shall, in any way directly or closely and substantially, affect such commerce as above set forth shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered as being employed by such carrier in such commerce and shall be considered as entitled to the benefits of this act and of an act entitled 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases' (approved April 22, 1908), as the same has been or may hereafter be amended."

"SEC. 4. That in any action brought against any common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act to recover damages for injuries to, or the death of, any of its employees, such employee shall not be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where such injury or death resulted in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier; and no employee shall be held to have assumed the risks of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee."

"SEC. 6. That no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within 2 years from the day the cause of action accrued.

"Under this act an action may be brought in a district court of the United States, in the district of the residence of the defendant, or in which the defendant shall be doing business at the time of commencing such action. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this act shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States, and no case arising under this act and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States.

"Any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose, intent, or effect of which shall be to prevent employees of any common carrier from furnishing, voluntarily, information to a person in interest or his representative as to the facts incident to the injury or death of any employee, shall be void, and whoever, by threat, intimidation, order, rule, contract, regulation, or device whatsoever, shall attempt to prevent any person from furnishing such information, or whoever discharges or otherwise disciplines or attempts to discipline any employee for furnishing such information shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both fined and imprisoned for each offense.

"If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the applicability thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if this is the bill which relates to contributory negligence and assumption of risk, I should like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I served on the subcommittee which reported the bill favorably to the Committee on the Judiciary, and in the absence of the chairman of the subcommittee I shall be glad to make an explanation.

The bill proposes three changes in the Federal Employees' Compensation Act. It is of particular interest to the railroad brotherhoods. In the first place, there is a provision which will remove a great deal of the difficulty which now is encountered in determining whether or not an injured railroad employee was engaged in interstate commerce so as to come within the provisions of the act. Without going into detail, it simplifies that question very greatly.

The second main provision in the bill is that which does away with the assumption doctrine in certain cases where death or injury is caused by the negligence of a carrier and makes the comparative negligence doctrine applicable.

The third provision in the bill prohibits the promulgation or enforcement of rules which penalize railroad employees for giving information concerning accidents to injured persons or their representatives.

The representatives of the railroad brotherhoods appeared before the committee and presented a very full and clear justification for the measure. The Federal Employees' Compensation Board approves the changes, and I think it is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I did not quite catch the Senator's explanation of the second provision of the bill as to comparative negligence. Would the Senator object to stating that again?

Mr. BURKE. It repeals the assumption of risk doctrine in certain provisions, and substitutes for it the doctrine of comparative negligence. If an employee is injured, and his own negligence has contributed somewhat to the injury, and the negligence of the employer also contributed to the injury, the employee will not be barred on the ground that he assumed the risk, but the court or jury will be entitled to weigh the negligence and make an award if the negligence of the employee was slight as compared with the negligence of the employer.

Mr. MINTON. This is an amendment of the Employers Liability Act?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

The bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I introduced this bill and have labored for its passage. I certainly favor it, but I am in the ironical situation today of being required to ask that it go over because two Senators who could not be present object to the bill, and I believe good faith requires that we not take it up under the 5-minute rule.

Let me say, in asking that the bill go over, that I hope that next week the Senate will address itself to the bill. It is an important measure and has been the subject of very careful investigation. It proposes to provide for an additional judge for the sixth circuit, an additional judge for the eighth circuit, an additional district judge for California, an additional district judge for Oklahoma, an additional district judge for Florida, an additional district judge for Pennsylvania, an additional district judge for New Jersey, and an additional district judge for New York.

In asking that the bill go over I think I am promoting its ultimate passage, as obviously it could not be passed or discussed under the 5-minute rule. I feel that I should in good faith toward all those who are in favor of the bill give notice that sometime early next week I shall ask the Senate to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

MEMPHIS AND LITTLE ROCK BRIDGE COMMISSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2242) creating the Memphis and Little Rock Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a bridge bill, and there are some committee amendments and certain other amendments which are formal, but which will have to be adopted in order to make the bill accord with the reorganization law. For instance, where the words "Secretary of Agriculture" occur in the bill, they must be stricken out and "Administrator of the Federal Works Agency" substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, before the word "Bridge", to strike out "Little Rock" and insert "Arkansas", so as to make the section read:

That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Memphis and Arkansas Bridge Commission (hereinafter created and hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"), and its successors and assigns be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Memphis, Tenn., at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with the provisions of this act, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, as provided by the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask some questions about the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the bill provide for the payment of the costs of the bridges?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it is a private bridge bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I notice on page 3, line 6, the following language:

The Commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge—

And so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill provides for a Commission to be established by the act for the purpose of building a bridge.

Mr. AUSTIN. In what manner does the bill provide for financing the construction of the bridge?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is intended that it shall be financed by the city of Memphis and the States of Arkansas and Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. I notice on page 11 the words "may extend Federal aid;" that is, the United States Government "may extend Federal aid under such acts for the construction of said bridge out of any money allocated to the State of Tennessee with the consent of the State highway commission of said State, and out of money allocated to the State of Arkansas with the consent of the highway department of said State."

The question I ask is, Do those two States have money allocated to them out of the Federal Treasury available for this purpose?

Mr. McKELLAR. They have money which is allocated or is appropriated every year, so much for each State, and that may be allocated by the joint action of the States, with the approval of the Federal Director of Roads.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is that Federal-highway money?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is Federal-highway money, just the same as is provided anywhere else, but it could be used by the State for this purpose, if it saw fit, following joint action of the two States.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a matched fund, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a matched fund.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Arkansas stated not long ago that his State was not matching Federal-highway funds. Is that true?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know what the facts are in that connection, but it would not interfere. That is a matter for the bridge company to determine.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is not mere curiosity that prompts me to ask these questions.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to have the Senator's opinion on the following question: Assuming that Arkansas does not have Federal highway funds out of which there could be allocated money to pay its proportion of the building of this bridge, where would the funds be obtained?

Mr. McKELLAR. They would have to be funds furnished on the part of the State of Tennessee, the city of Memphis, or the State of Arkansas; and if they can get funds allotted from the Federal Government under the half-and-half plan, that can be done.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator answer another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Vermont has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then I shall have to ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Vermont may ask such questions as he may wish to ask. This is a very important matter, and it has gone over many times heretofore. I hope very much that the Senator will be permitted to ask me whatever questions he wishes to ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to know what the conditions at the two outlets of this bridge may be. Will this bridge connect a community on the Tennessee side of large population and a community on the Arkansas side of a like large population?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the community on the Arkansas side is very much smaller. It is known as West Memphis, and it is relatively a small community; but it is very important both to Arkansas and to Tennessee that a bridge be built at this point.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Legislature of Arkansas passed any act authorizing the construction of this bridge, and assumed any responsibility financially for it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think not. Neither has the Legislature of Tennessee. But under present law that can be done.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; but the problem which confronts us as legislators of the Federal Government is the problem of whether some day very soon after this bridge is started under the authority granted here we are going to be called upon to finance the building of the bridge.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no——

Mr. AUSTIN. On account of conditions of which the Senator has spoken.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; there is no intention of doing that at all. The States of Tennessee and Arkansas will have to use such general funds as they have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 20, to strike out sections 5, 6, and 7, down to and including line 23, on page 10, as follows:

SEC. 5. In addition to the authority heretofore vested in the Commission in section 4 of this act, the Commission and its successors and assigns are further authorized, in event said Commission shall deem it necessary or advisable, in order to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge, or any part thereof, as may be constructed, as provided herein, and approaches (including the approach highways which, in the judgment of the Commission, it is necessary or advisable to construct or cause to be constructed to provide suitable and adequate connection with existing improved highways) and the necessary land, easements, and appurtenances thereto, to issue negotiable bonds of the Commission, bearing interest at the rate or rates of not more than 6 percent per annum, the principal and interest of which bonds, and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity, shall be payable solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act, and such payments may be further secured by a mortgage of the bridge. All such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone, or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 25 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the Commission may determine. The Commission may repurchase and may reserve the right to redeem all or any of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the Commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. The Commission, when it deems it to be to the best interest of the Commission, may issue refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds before the maturity thereof: Provided, That the refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date of approval of this act, as the Commission may determine. The Commission may enter into any agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the Commission in respect to the purchase, construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge, the conservation and application of all funds, the security for payment of the bonds, the safeguarding of money on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds or corporations. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law.

Said bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the Commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of interest at the rate of more than 6 percent per annum on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values, and the face amount thereof shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale the cost of the bridge constructed, and approaches and the lands, easements, and appurtenances, used in connection therewith when added to any other funds made available to the Commission for the use of said purposes. The cost of the bridge to be constructed as provided herein, together with approaches and approach highways, shall be deemed to include interest during construction of said bridge, and for 12 months thereafter, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expense incident to the construction of the bridge and the acquisition of the necessary property, incident to the financing thereof, including cost of acquiring lands. If the proceeds of the bonds issued shall exceed the cost as finally determined, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund hereinafter provided. Prior to the preparation of definite bonds the Commission may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates, with or without coupons, of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definite bonds when such bonds that have been executed are available for delivery.

SEC. 6. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as the same shall fall due, and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any thereof redeemed or repurchased before maturity as herein provided. All tolls and other revenues from said bridge are hereby pledged to such uses and to the application thereof as hereinafter in this section required. After payment or provision for payment therefrom of all such cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating, and the reservation of an amount of money estimated to be sufficient for the same purpose during an ensuing period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund, at intervals to be determined by the Commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. The Commission shall classify in a reasonable way all traffic over the bridge so that the tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by it as to be uniform in the application thereof to all traffic falling within reasonable classes, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and shall prevent all use of such bridge for traffic except upon payment of tolls so fixed and adjusted. No toll shall be charged officials or employees of the Commission, nor shall toll be charged officials of the Government of the United States while in the discharge of duties incident to their office or employment, nor shall toll be charged members of fire departments or peace officers when engaged in the performance of their official duties, nor shall toll be charged in movement of the armed forces of the United States.

Within a reasonable time after the construction of the bridge the commission shall file with the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture a sworn itemized statement showing the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the cost of acquiring any interest in real or other property necessary therefor, and the amount of bonds, debentures, or other evidence of indebtedness issued in connection with the construction of said bridge.

SEC. 7. After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment shall have been provided and shall be held for that purpose, the Commission shall deliver deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance of the interest of the Commission in and to the bridge extending between the State of Tennessee and the State of Arkansas, that part of said bridge within Tennessee to the State of Tennessee, or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereinafter referred to as the "Tennessee interest") and that part of said bridge within Arkansas to the State of Arkansas, or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereinafter referred to as the "Arkansas interest"), under the condition that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired, by the Tennessee interest and the Arkansas interest as may be agreed upon, but if the Tennessee interest or the Arkansas interest, or any other interest hereinabove mentioned, shall not be authorized to accept or shall not accept the same under such conditions, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the Commission, and the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and approaches under economical management, until such time as the Tennessee interest and the Arkansas interest, or any other interest hereinabove mentioned, shall be authorized to accept and shall accept such conveyance under such conditions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 11, to strike out lines 12 to 18, as follows:

The bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, the postal service, and military and other purposes authorized by the Government of the United States, and said bridge and any bonds issued in connection therewith, and any income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 21, after "Memphis and", to strike out "Little Rock" and to insert "Arkansas", so as to read:

SEC. 5. For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the Memphis and Arkansas Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession, may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain and defend in all courts of law and equity; may make and have a common seal; may purchase or otherwise acquire and hold or dispose of real estate and other property; may accept and receive donations, grants, or gifts of money or property and apply the same to the purposes of this act; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 9, after the name "Jasspon," to strike out "and"; in the same line, after the name "Fowler," to insert "Frank Gailor, and Will Gerber"; in line 12, after the name "Campbell," to strike out "and" and in the same line, after the name "Walton," to insert "A. C. Oliver, J. L. Shaver, and James Crane", and on page 13, line 2, after the word "provided", to strike out "Before the issuance of bonds, as hereinabove provided, each member of the Commission shall give such bond as may be fixed by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The cost of such surety prior to and during the construction of the bridge shall be paid or reimbursed from the bond proceeds and thereafter such cost shall be deemed an operating expense", so as to read:

The Commission shall consist of E. H. Crump, Sr., E. W. Hale, Sr., Clifford Davis, Frank R. Ahlgren, W. H. Jasspon, William B. Fowler, Frank Gailor, and Will Gerber, all residents and citizens of the State of Tennessee; and J. O. E. Beck, Sr., J. C. Johnson, J. Land Williams, W. W. Campbell, C. R. Walton, A. C. Oliver, J. L. Shaver, and James Crane, all residents and citizens of the State of Arkansas. Such Commission shall be a body corporate and politic. Each member of the Commission shall qualify within 30 days after his appointment by filing in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture an oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act, and each person appointed to fill a vacancy shall file in like manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in said Commission by reason of failure to qualify as above provided, or by reason of death or resignation, shall be filled by the Secretary of Agriculture, and in filling such vacancy the Secretary of Agriculture shall at all times make the appointment so that the respective States shall at all times have the same representation on said Commission as herein provided. The Commission shall elect a chairman and vice chairman from its members and shall establish rules and regulations for the government of its own business. A majority of the members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 13, after line 14, to strike out:

SEC. 9. The Commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act. The members of the Commission shall be entitled to a per diem compensation for their service of $10 for each day actually spent in the business of the Commission but the maximum copensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $1,200 and of each other member shall not exceed $600. The members of the Commission shall also be entitled to receive traveling expense allowance of 10 cents a mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the Commission.

And on page 14, in line 7, after the word "act", to strike out "After all bonds and interest thereon shall have been paid and all other obligations of the Commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payment shall have been made as hereinbefore provided, and after the bridge shall have been conveyed to the Tennessee interest and the Arkansas interest, as herein provided, or otherwise disposed of, as provided herein", so as to read:

The Commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorneys, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as they may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the Commission may determine. All salaries and expenses shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 14, before the words "the Commission", to insert "Sec. 6. Within 6 months after the completion of the bridge", so as to read:

SEC. 6. Within 6 months after completion of the bridge, the Commission shall be dissolved and shall cease to have further existence by an order of the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, made upon his own initiative or upon application of the Commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a public hearing in the city of Memphis, Tenn., notice of time and place of which hearing and the purpose thereof shall have been published once, at least 30 days before the date hereof, in a newspaper published in the cities of Memphis, Tenn., and Little Rock, Ark. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the Commission shall be divided and distribution made between the interests of the States as may be determined by the terms and provisions of the contract or contracts that may be entered into between the parties thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer several amendments, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of Agriculture" and to insert in lieu thereof "Administrator of the Federal Works Agency."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "Secretary of Agriculture" and to insert in lieu thereof "Administrator of the Federal Works Agency."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, lines 16 and 17, it is proposed to strike out "Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads" and to insert in lieu thereof "Commissioner of the Public Roads Administration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 15, line 11, after the word "Commission", it is proposed to strike out "but shall be chargeable solely to the funds herein provided, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I object to that, without there being some explanation with reference to it. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has the floor. I suggest that the last amendment which was read is the amendment which the Senator suggested to me.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I may call to the attention of the Senator from Tennessee that the amendment which I suggested started with the word "but" and ended with the word "provided" in line 12, so that the words to be eliminated actually are "but shall be chargeable solely to the funds herein provided." I did not under any circumstances intend to eliminate the language which implies that no indebtedness created pursuant to the act should be an indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. I misunderstood the Senator, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be modified so as to exclude only the language the Senator has just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. Let us have it reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment as modified.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 15, line 11, after the word "Commission," it is proposed to strike out "but shall be chargeable solely to the funds herein provided", so as to make the sentence read:

No obligation created or liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be a personal obligation or liability of any member or members of the Commission, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is all right.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill creating the Memphis and Arkansas Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said Commission; and authorizing said Commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn., and for other purposes."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be directed to renumber the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEVELOPMENT OF FARM UNITS ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 857, being Senate bill 2410. I may say that bill was objected to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] when it was reached on the calendar. I have explained it to him since and he has withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2410) relating to the development of farm units on public lands under Federal reclamation projects with funds furnished by the Farm Security Administration, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to further cooperation between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Farm Security Administration in the development of farm units on public lands under Federal reclamation projects, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in pursuance of cooperative agreements between the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, (1) to consider the money or any part of the money made available to settlers or prospective settlers by the Farm Security Administration, as all or a portion of the capital required of such settlers under subsection C of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 702); and (2) where such farm units have been or may be improved by means of funds made available by the Farm Security Administration, to require an entryman of any such unit to enter into a mortgage contract with the Farm Security Administration to repay the value of such improvements thereon before an entry is allowed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator make a brief explanation for the RECORD so that persons interested in the measure may understand its terms.

Mr. WHEELER. This is a bill which I introduced at the request of the Reclamation Service. It is intended to provide that the Department of the Interior may come to an understanding with the Department of Agriculture with reference to persons settling on some of the lands in reclamation projects in the West. At the present time it is intended to open up portions of the land on the reclamation projects to settlement. It is desired to take some farmers off the dry-land sections and move them to a reclamation project.

At the present time some of these farmers, even if they desire to move onto these lands, do not have the required sum of money, and they are being assisted by the Farm Security Administration. The measure in question will permit the Farm Security Authority to loan such farmers money for equipment, so they may be able to go onto reclamation projects, and then the Farm Security Board will take mortgages for the loans.

I hope the bill will pass. I think it is very meritorious. It has been approved both by the Reclamation Service and by the Farm Security Administration, and I am sure it will not cost the Government any money whatsoever.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this afternoon, when Calendar No. 877, Senate Joint Resolution 130, was reached, objection was made, and it went over. It is a measure pertaining to claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma. It simply authorizes an investigation to be made. It does not even provide for a judgment. It simply provides for an investigation and report to Congress. Objection was made at the time the measure was reached on the calendar by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], but I understand now he has withdrawn his objection. If that be true, and there be no other objection, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) referring the claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and report to Congress was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the claim of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma that an inadequate consideration was paid said tribes by the United States for the 2,033,583 acres of land in Oklahoma acquired from such tribes under the act of June 6, 1900, ratifying the so-called Jerome Agreement of October 6, 1892.

SEC. 2. That said court is hereby authorized and directed regardless of laches, lapse of time, or statutes of limitation, to make findings of fact and to report to the Congress of the United States (1) the reasonable value of said land when said agreement was signed on October 6, 1892; (2) the reasonable value of said land on June 6, 1900, when the act was passed ratifying said agreement and disposing of such land; (3) whether or not the consideration paid for said land so acquired was adequate, substantially fair, just, and reasonable under the circumstances and in view of the fiduciary relationship existing between the parties; (4) the amount of the resulting damages or loss, if any, sustained by said tribes. Said court shall make its findings with respect to all claims presented hereunder, including any and all other claims which may be presented to the court by said tribes or any of them not specifically hereinabove set forth, and shall report said findings to the Congress, and shall determine the value of any other lands which any of the said tribes held by treaty, agreement, Executive order, or by the right of use and occupancy at the time they were ceded to or taken from said Indians by the United States.

SEC. 3. That any and all claims against the United States under this joint resolution shall be forever barred unless the said tribes shall within 3 years from the date of the approval of this joint resolution file a petition or petitions in said court setting forth said claims. The claim or claims of the tribes afore-mentioned may be presented separately or jointly by petition or petitions, subject, however, to amendment in the discretion of the court at any time prior to final hearing in the matter. The petition or petitions shall be verified by the respective attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with said tribes, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law. Official letters, papers, documents, reports, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence; and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribes to such treaties, agreements, papers, reports, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said tribes. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit or suits any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy. A copy of the petition or petitions shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and represent the interests of the United States in such case.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2110) to provide for purchase of fish (including shellfish) and products thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL STOLEN PROPERTY ACT

The bill (H. R. 1996) to amend the National Stolen Property Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this bill came from the Judiciary Committee with a unanimous report. The National Stolen Property Act is sought to be amended by this measure, which originated in the House and has the support of the Department of Justice, so as to extend its provisions to embezzled property as well as to counterfeit securities. The Senate committee amended the bill to include the materials with which counterfeiting is carried on. I am sure the bill is thoroughly meritorious, and should be passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that a short time ago we passed an act under the terms of which larceny, when the transportation was from one jurisdiction to another, was made a Federal offense. I was opposed to the bill, and am glad to know that the President vetoed it. This bill does not go so far as to make larceny, or other offenses which are purely intrastate, interstate in character, subjecting the offenders to Federal jurisdiction.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The pending bill is not of the character of the measure to which the Senator is referring. The bill deals with the transportation of such property in interstate commerce, a character of offense which cannot be adequately handled except in this manner.

Mr. KING. With that understanding, I shall not object. However, I look with much apprehension upon the constant encroachment by the Federal Government and its assertion of jurisdiction over matters which, under our form of government, belong especially, peculiarly, and solely to the States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me give the Senator an instance of what is needed under the present situation. The stock certificates of the New York Central Railroad were counterfeited in the city of Chicago, and were sold throughout the West, indeed, as a matter of fact, throughout the country. This bill would make the transportation of counterfeit securities of an interstate corporation a Federal offense. It is a wholly harmonious provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "securities", to strike out "of the value of $5,000 or more"; and at the beginning of line 5, to insert "or whoever with unlawful or fraudulent intent shall transport, or cause to be transported, in interstate or foreign commerce any bed piece, bed plate, roll, plate, die, seal, stone, type, or other tool implement or thing used or fitted to be used in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security, or any part thereof", so as to make the section read:

That section 3 of the National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 415), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money, of the value of $5,000 or more theretofore stolen, feloniously converted, or taken feloniously by fraud or with intent to steal or purloin, knowing the same to have been so stolen, feloniously converted, or taken, or whoever with unlawful or fraudulent intent shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities knowing the same to have been falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited, or whoever with unlawful or fraudulent intent shall transport, or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, any bed piece, bed plate, roll, plate, die, seal, stone, type, or other tool, implement, or thing used or fitted to be used in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security, or any part thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any falsely made, forged, altered, counterfeited, or spurious representation of (1) an 'obligation or other security of the United States' as defined in section 147 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 261) or (2) an obligation, bond, certificate, security, treasury note, bill, promise to pay, or bank note, issued by any 'foreign government' as defined in the act of June 15, 1917, title VIII, section 4 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 288), or by a bank or corporation of any foreign country."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 10, after the word "securities," to strike out "of the value of $5,000 or more;" in line 13, after the word "securities," to strike out "of the value of $500 or more"; and in line 16, after the word "counterfeited," to insert: "or whoever shall receive in interstate or foreign commerce, or conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of, any such bed piece, bed plate, roll, plate, die, seal, stone, type, or other tool, implement, or thing used or intended to be used in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security, or any part thereof, moving as, or which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing that the same is fitted to be used, or has been used, in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security, or any part thereof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That section 4 of the National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 416), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any goods, wares, or merchandise, securities, or money of the value of $5,000 or more, or whoever shall pledge or accept as security for a loan any goods, wares, or merchandise, or securities, of the value of $500 or more, moving as, or which are a part of, or which constitute interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, unlawfully converted, or taken, or whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities, or whoever shall pledge or accept as security for a loan any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities, moving as, or which are a part of, or which constitute interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been so falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited, or whoever shall receive in interstate or foreign commerce, or conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of, any such bed piece, bed plate, roll, plate, die, seal, stone, type, or other tool, implement, or thing used or intended to be used in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security, or any part thereof, moving as, or which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing that the same is fitted to be used, or has been used, in falsely making, forging, altering, or counterfeiting any security, or any part thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any falsely made, forged, altered, counterfeited, or spurious representation of (1) an 'obligation or other security of the United States' as defined in section 147 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 261) or (2) an obligation, bond, certificate, security, Treasury note, bill, promise to pay, or bank note issued by any 'foreign government' as defined in the act of June 15, 1917, title VIII, section 4 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 288), or by a bank or corporation of any foreign country."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 22, after the word "greatest", to strike out: "For the purposes of this act, the value of any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities shall be considered to be the apparent or purported face, par, or market value, whichever is the greatest, of the securities so falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That section 5 of the National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 417), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. In the event that a defendant is charged in the same indictment with two or more violations of this act, then the aggregate value of all goods, wares, and merchandise, securities, and money referred to in such indictment shall constitute the value thereof for the purposes of sections 3 and 4 hereof, and the value of any securities referred to shall be considered to be the face, par, or market value, whichever is the greatest."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2259) to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels, to regulate equipment of certain motorboats on the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4983) to amend sections 712, 802, and 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, relative to the requisitioning of vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RADIO-MONITORING STATIONS—MASSACHUSETTS

The bill (S. 2611) authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of a building in the State of Massachusetts for use as a radio-monitoring station, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the proposed station to be erected by the Government? I should like to have an explanation of the bill. Otherwise, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 2611, Calendar No. 732, authorizing the purchase of a site and the erection of a certain building in the State of Massachusetts by the Federal Communications Commission. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal Communications Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized to purchase for the United States a suitable site in the State of Massachusetts, provided a suitable site now owned by the Government is not available for the purpose, and cause to be erected thereon, according to plans and specifications to be approved by it, a suitable building or buildings, for use as a radio-monitoring station, or to modify or reconstruct existing buildings or facilities on such site for such purpose, and to provide the necessary associated antenna systems, roadways, power, water, and sanitary facilities, including the construction and installation of goniometric apparatus and including necessary outfits, apparatus, and equipment at a total cost of said site, buildings, and equipment of not to exceed $30,000.

INSURANCE OF COTTON CROP

The bill (S. 2635) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to make a speech on this bill; and, of course, he would object to its present consideration. As I understand, it is agreed all around that the bill may be made the unfinished business, to be taken up the first thing tomorrow. I move that Senate bill 2635 be made the unfinished business, to be taken up the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2635) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, and the Clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

CODIFICATION AND REVISION OF PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2246) to amend section 194 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L. 1088), which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "obtain", to insert "or attempt so to obtain", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 194 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 317), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 194. Whoever shall steal, take, or abstract, or by fraud or deception obtain or attempt so to obtain, from or out of any mail, post office, or station thereof, or other authorized depository for mail matter, or from a letter or mail carrier, any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or shall abstract or remove from any such letter, package, bag, or mail, any article or thing contained therein, or shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy any such letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein; or whoever shall steal, take, or abstract, or by fraud or deception obtain any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, which has been left for collection upon or adjacent to a collection box or other authorized depository of mail matter; or whoever shall buy, receive, or conceal, or aid in buying, receiving, or concealing, or shall unlawfully have in his possession, any letter, postal card, package, bag, or mail, or any article or thing contained therein, which has been so stolen, taken, embezzled, or abstracted, as herein described, knowing the same to have been stolen, taken, embezzled, or abstracted; or whoever shall take any letter, postal card, or package out of any post office or station thereof, or out of any authorized depository for mail matter, or from any letter or mail carrier, or which has been in any post office or station thereof, or other authorized depository, or in the custody of any letter or mail carrier, before it has been delivered to the person to whom it was directed, with a design to obstruct the correspondence, or to pry into the business or secrets of another, or shall open, secrete, embezzle, or destroy the same, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL SAVINGS ACT

The bill (H. R. 5064) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing establishment of the Postal Savings System, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under the present law, in order to enable persons to accumulate sums of less than $1 it is provided that any person may purchase a specially prepared 10-cent postal-savings stamp to be attached to a card having spaces for 10 such stamps. When the card is filled it may be used in opening a postal-savings account or in adding to such an account that has previously been opened. To open such an account entails a certain amount of clerical work, much greater than that involved in selling a stamp; thus it appears that the use of savings stamps of denominations of 10 cents, 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1 will enable the administration of the present law at a less cost to the Government, while at the same time retaining the same or a better service to the public.

The bill has been recommended by the Post Office Department. I introduced it at the request of the Department, and I hope it may pass.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That concludes the calendar.

MURAL DECORATIONS, SENATE RECEPTION ROOM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate bill 2577, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2577) authorizing an appropriation for completing the mural decorations in the Senate reception room was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Architect of the Capitol for the purpose of completing the mural decorations in the reception room in the Senate wing of the United States Capitol.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I rise to call attention to the fact that the Hatch amendment is not yet the law of the land. Why? When a great moral issue is involved, why should there be any hesitancy? Let America realize that something is holding back action on this bill in the House. What is it? Is it a fear that crooked politics will lose an ally if the bill is passed?

In the Senate recently I said that I have information, definite and certain, that the Democratic politicos are starting out in their campaign for 1940 utilizing the A. A. A. to advance their political ambitions. I said on that occasion, "I measure my words in making that statement"; and I said further, "Perhaps that is why the Hatch bill is having so much trouble in the House." Let me give you the language of someone who knows:

From men in the extension departments, county agents, and men connected with A. A. A., I have information that the New Deal high command is already running in high gear, putting on political picnics at the public's expense, disrupting even State and county organizations in that they demand that these be headed up by the "boys" who will get the votes for 1940 and loading the organization with men who know no more about the A. A. A. program than the average office boy. However, these men can put on picnics and gatherings which they utilize to build the machine for 1940.

Let me give another quotation——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to tell us from what or from whom he is quoting?

Mr. WILEY. Let me say to the Senator from Indiana that when I am through making my speech I shall be very happy to answer the question.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator now know whom he is quoting?

Mr. WILEY. I know whom I am quoting; and I know that if I should give the name of the individual his head would come off.

Mr. MINTON. It is a secret?

Mr. WILEY. Certainly it is a secret, in this sense.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator does not want to tell us who it is?

Mr. WILEY. I do not want to tell the name of the individual at this time; no.

Mr. MINTON. Would the Senator tell me "on the quiet"?

Mr. WILEY. No; not at this time.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. Listen, Senator. I have the floor. I am now talking about a moral issue. I am saying to you, You put your house in order and there will be nothing said in return; but we do not want you to do to the A. A. A. what was done to the W. P. A.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. Let me finish my talk, and then I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is not intimating that we on this side of the aisle are immoral and unclean, is he?

Mr. WILEY. I would not attribute that status personally to the distinguished Senator.

Mr. MINTON. In days gone by I remember hearing something about birds of a feather flocking together.

Mr. WILEY. That might be either a statement or an admission. I will construe it as the former.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to say now that I will give the Senator all the time he wants to reply; but he is not going to camouflage the issue. I am now saying to the people of the Nation that the Hatch bill has not passed; and I am saying to you that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is a Democrat and I am a Republican, but I am standing back of him. All I am asking the Senator from Indiana and all the rest of you Democrats to do is to use your influence to see that the Hatch bill passes, so that there will be no more immoral conditions among the employees and administrators of government. If that is not common sense, nothing is.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I am offering to help the Senator clean up, and he will not tell me whom we are to clean up.

Mr. WILEY. I can tell you with my argument. You are not as blind as all that. You have eyes with which to see, and you have ears with which to hear. You know where the difficulty is. All you need now do is to put the pressure on to pass the Hatch bill tomorrow when it comes up in the House.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I am listening to the Senator from Wisconsin as best I can——

Mr. WILEY. I am glad you are listening.

Mr. MINTON. But he will not tell me who his informant is, so that I can find out where to start to help him clean up the mess about which he is talking.

Mr. WILEY. That is not a fair statement, Mr. President. Let me tell you again what this gentleman said.

Mr. MINTON. I remember what he said.

Mr. WILEY. He said:

> From men in the extension departments, county agents, and men connected with A. A. A., I have information that the New Deal high command is already running in high gear, putting on political picnics at the public's expense, disrupting even State and county organizations in that they demand that these be headed up by the "boys" who will get the votes for 1940.

Now, let me give you another quotation, speaking about these political picnics.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILEY. Certainly. I always yield to that good-looking gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the individual from whom the Senator is quoting, who for the time being is nameless, hold a Government position?

Mr. WILEY. Let me say to the Senator, when he says "individual," that he had better make the word plural, and when I tell him that the information comes from one who knows, that is as far as I shall go at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. "One who knows" is not plural. "One" is singular.

Mr. WILEY. Yes; one who knows in this place, and one who knows in that place, and one who knows in the other place.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are the different ones who make up the plurality of which the Senator speaks officeholders?

Mr. WILEY. Let me answer in this way: They are in the employ of government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are they in the employ of the United States Government?

Mr. WILEY. I think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator know?

Mr. WILEY. I know that I want to clean house. That is what I want.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may talk about cleaning house. If he wants to help, he might help us by giving the names of the individuals. Are they employees of the Government of the United States?

Mr. WILEY. Let me answer the Senator in this way: If you want to know what is going on, go down into A. A. A. and get the information that is on file there, which I cannot get.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator answer "yes" or "no"? He can answer "yes" or "no." Are these individuals employees of the Government of the United States?

Mr. WILEY. As far as that is concerned, I refuse to answer, because, as I indicated to the Senator from Indiana, it is likely that heads would go off if names were given. But I am certain that the distinguished Senator from Kentucky will agree that the real issue is whether this administration will countenance a political sabotage of Triple A.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator is not refusing to answer on the ground that it will incriminate him. If they are Government employees working under this administration, not only in the A. A. A. but anywhere else, and know of these conditions, I wonder what they have done to make this information available to those who are responsible not only for their appointment but for the conduct of their Departments, rather than making it secretly available to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Are the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Indiana interested in cleaning up the mess, or in getting the heads of the people who dare report?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not interested in getting anybody's head, even if it is a goat's; but I am interested——

Mr. WILEY. You would not think it was a ghost in Kentucky W. P. A. activities.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was not talking about ghosts.

Mr. WILEY. I was.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not seem to know the difference between a ghost and a goat.

Mr. WILEY. I do not want to get your goat.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not any. I am interested to know whether the information the Senator is now giving the Senate, which he says has been given to him in secret, is being furnished to him by somebody in the employ of the Government of the United States whose name he is unwilling to give. I have no interest in getting his goat. I do not know whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. I do not know what motive may have actuated him or her, if it is a man or a woman who has given the Senator the information which he now seems to be imparting to us; but the interest, the good faith of any man or woman who gives the Senator from Wisconsin this information which he says is secret is involved, if he has not given that information to somebody who is in a position to act.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the rules of the Senate require Senators to address the Chair, and not to address each other directly in the second person.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken, and is sustained.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Alabama that there is no business before the Senate. The Chair recognized the Senator from Wisconsin at the close of the call of the calendar.

The Chair desires further to emphasize the point of order made by the Senator from Missouri. The rules of the Senate regarding debate must be observed if we are to have any order in debate. The Chair hopes the Senator from Wisconsin and all others who address the Senate will observe those rules.

Mr. WILEY. Let me give another quotation.

Speaking about utilizing these political picnics—they have just had one out in my State—this person says:

> These gentlemen are very astute and quite efficient at window dressing to cover up their real work.

He says further:

> No one can plead ignorance of this situation, because sincere workers in A. A. A. have written in about this situation, and the files are filled with letters from these agents and workers protesting against politics being forced on them.

Partially answering the distinguished Senators, let me say that they have access to those files. Let them go there. Let them get the letters that have been written and are there telling about this pernicious activity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILEY. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the Senator get this information by himself going to the Department of Agriculture and going through its files, or did somebody down there furnish it to him?

Mr. WILEY. I have not written. I had a talk with the head of the A. A. A., and he said he knew nothing about it. I told him to look into his files and he would find out about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did the information which the Senator now has come to him as the result of that call?

Mr. WILEY. From the head of A. A. A.?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. No; I did not receive it from him.

Mr. BARKLEY. How did the Senator get it? He did not go down and fish it out himself, I assume.

Mr. WILEY. I say again, you are begging the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am not.

Mr. WILEY. If this condition exists, we want to remedy the condition. We do not want to get the heads of those who are giving the information.

Mr. BARKLEY. Nobody is trying to get anybody's head; but if there is somebody in a Department who is secretly furnishing to the Senator individually information with respect to that Department, I say the conduct of that person would be less reprehensible if he furnished the information to the head of his own Department, or to somebody responsible for action.

Mr. WILEY. We can argue that question later on if it is desirable. I am not so much concerned with the reprehensible action of one who would supply information as with the reprehensible actions that make the revelation necessary.

Let me repeat what I stated a few days ago: The rank and file of the A. A. A. are sincere in their work and are earnestly trying to aid the much-harassed farmer. The high command, however, apparently will not permit these sincere workers to devote their time solely to the solution of the farmer's problem, but this command now demands that they shall devote time and effort to the furtherance of the New Deal campaign for 1940. Already the machine has gotten so well oiled and so well under way that it has seen the imperative need of stopping the Hatch bill.

This is not a partisan matter, and I am asking you Senators not to let anything divert you from adding your appeal for the passage of the Hatch bill in the House tomorrow. To me this internal situation is more important than the external situation. You know the art of the artful politician, which simply consists in diverting the people's attention from the issue. The issue is, Will the campaign of 1940 be a fair fight, or will it be one-sided? Will one side be permitted to utilize the money of the country, the employees of the country, the bureaucracy of the country? I said it was not a partisan matter. I mean that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I repeat that I am a Republican, and I am putting up the best fight I know how to support the measure of a Democrat, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WILEY. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that so far as I am concerned I am very strongly in favor of the Hatch bill. I have always been very strongly in favor of it; but, in view of the partisan nature of the Senator's remarks, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he ever read the speech made by Assistant Postmaster General Philp at Springfield, Mo., in 1931, at a postmasters' convention during the Hoover administration, in which he openly warned every Republican postmaster in the State that if he did not get out on the firing line and deliver he would be fired.

Mr. WILEY. I have not read the speech. I assume that what the distinguished Senator says may be true. I also assume that that custom has, unfortunately, been more or less prevalent, but that certainly would not justify a further abuse. I think that even since 1931 in some respects the morale of this country has marched upward. We no longer believe that anyone in the employ of Government—and this is where the Hatch bill reaches a high plane—we no longer believe that anyone who takes the people's money, who gets sustenance and maintenance and life out of the Treasury of the United States, has a right, as long as he is in an administrative office, to go out and sell that time which belongs to the administration of government for partisan affairs. I am not discussing whether Republicans have made mistakes—and they have made many of them—or Democrats have made mistakes. That is not the issue. I say, let us not make a mistake in 1940; let us keep both houses clean. "A plague o' both your houses," we might say when we talk like this; but let us keep both houses clean.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin when he says "A plague o' both your houses."

Mr. WILEY. I hope the Senator does not agree only with that statement but that he agrees with other things I have said.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. WILEY. Why should there be any hesitancy? Have we not learned from the political debauchery in the past that no good can come therefrom, and now, as this evidence seems to indicate, an attempt is to be made to regiment the farmers, utilizing the paid forces of government. Certainly, any right-thinking man will arise and say, "This shall not be done." One person said to me in his communication:

> I am giving you this information—trusting in you—so that you can deal a blow to one of the most vicious and shameful schemes that has been planned in our political life.

Let me continue with what he said—

> As I see it, the criticism is not of the program but of the fact that it is proposed now and is being used purely as a front for one of the most corrupt political machines ever in existence at public expense. Let political picnics on the public pay roll come to an end. Let those who plan for the farmers cease planning for political ends.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator know of any picnics that are being held at the expense of the public pay roll? If he does, then on his duty and his honor as a Senator he ought to say so, and he ought to do some cleaning up.

Mr. WILEY. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Indiana that personally I have been attending to what the public might sometimes sorrowfully regard as a picnic in the Senate for the last 8 months.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has it been a picnic to be here?

Mr. WILEY. In reply to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, whether or not this is a picnic, sometimes it has been regrettably like a picnic, and sometimes it has been a farce. Sometimes we have gone on spending millions and billions without consideration, and sometimes we have quibbled over a few thousand dollars. Sometimes we spent the resources of our country like drunken sailors, and again we have been like Scotchmen, holding on to the pennies in great emergencies. So take it for what it is worth.

Let me read what one national weekly said:

> Complaints have been heard from farmers in various sections of the country about the subtle efforts of the administration to encourage them to support lobby organizations which receive Government cooperation. In a sense the entire New Deal agricultural policy of subsidies, soil-conservation payments, and crop-control benefits tends to regiment the farmer, makes him dependent wholly upon the Federal Government for his existence, and thereby a part of the political system which would perpetuate the administration's power.
> It has been charged by farm groups opposed to the New Deal's blundering agricultural program that administration leaders have gone to the extreme of "buying out" certain active opponents by handing them fat administrative jobs.
> So with the 1940 Presidential campaign drawing near, it is not astounding to hear that administration leaders and sycophants are doing their utmost to muster farm support for the election.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. In the interest of completing my thought, I will not yield at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I want to say to the large percentage of the men connected with A. A. A. that I have faith in your ability and your integrity, in your sincerity of purpose, and your honesty. Therefore, I am asking each one of you who knows of this vicious political activity, when these politicos come to your picnics or to your conferences and insinuate politics into A. A. A., that you write me personally in Washington; and if you will put at the head of your letters "Personal," I will treat them as personal, and your names will not be mentioned. On the other hand, if you give me permission to use your names I shall be happy to give you credit. I assure you that if you will follow this suggestion you will be rendering a most distinguished service to all of the citizens of this country.

We do not want this country to go to the dogs. We want to keep it clean as God Almighty intended it should be—and I am sure you will not let talk about the war situation abroad divert you from the path of honor at home. You know and I know that the money you are paid is the people's money, it comes from all the people—it does not come from the treasury of any political party—and when you are a public servant you are a trustee of the public.

I know you will be faithful to your trust and not let any politician interfere with your obligation to your country. So write me letters telling about any political efforts that are made, and you can be sure the information given will be kept and treated entirely confidential in that your name will not be mentioned.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. To whom is the Senator directing this appeal he has just been making?

Mr. WILEY. If the Senator has any information, it goes to him, too.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is going to send it out, I take it, and he must have someone to whom he is going to send it, because he is soliciting people to write to him, is he not?

Mr. WILEY. Yes; I have addressed it to the employees of the Triple A, in Washington and out of Washington, the people of the country. I have delivered on the floor of the Senate this request to them to aid in keeping this country clean politically.

Mr. MINTON. Now the Senator is going to propagandize all these people in Triple A with his splendid speech. Is that correct?

Mr. WILEY. No; not unless the Senator is willing to go out and help.

Mr. MINTON. I have not anything to do with the Senator's frank. He can do as he pleases with his frank. But I venture to say that before a week is past this great speech the Senator has just delivered will be flooding the mails of this country, addressed from Republican headquarters, and going out to the people to whom he has been addressing it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I again say that the very alertness of the distinguished Senator on the other side in attempting to divert attention from what I am discussing is so apparent that I am sure that the people and the press will understand.

Let me say that none of my remarks which I have delivered in the Senate have gone out, except one short talk relating to farm products.

I now return to the issue. Will you join with me in going to the Members of the House and asking that they pass the Hatch bill? That is the issue, not the Senator from Wisconsin, or the Senator from Kentucky, or the Senator from Illinois, or the Senator from Indiana. The question is, Are we going to make it impossible for employees of the Government, those employees mentioned in the Hatch bill, to become political servants and agents for any party? If we are going to make it impossible, we will do it by passing the Hatch bill. I rose to speak on that vital issue alone, and nothing else, and to call the attention of the public to the fact that already there are those who would turn from the partially spent forces of W. P. A. to utilize the political potentialities of the Triple A.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word with respect to the first part of the Senator's speech, in which he besought Members of the Senate to form a lobby, I suppose he means, and go over to the House and attempt to persuade the House to pass the Hatch bill tomorrow.

The Senate has done its duty with respect to the Hatch bill. I voted for the bill; I helped to frame it, in a way, and I am fully in sympathy with it; and I hope the House will pass the bill, either tomorrow or on some other day of this session. But I doubt the propriety of urging Members of the Senate to rush over to the House with a sort of lobby and insist that the House pass the bill, on the assumption that the House will have no appreciation of its own responsibility unless the Senate goes over and urges that they pass the bill. I have no doubt that the House appreciates its responsibility no less than does the Senate, and I sincerely hope and believe that the House will act upon the measure before they adjourn.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, referring to No. 2275, on page 3 of the Executive Calendar. The Senators from Florida have asked me to request unanimous consent to have recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the nomination of Paul G. J. Mayer to be postmaster at New Port Richey, Fla.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what postmaster is that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Paul G. J. Mayer, New Port Richey, Fla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REJECTION

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate July 18, 1939

POSTMASTER

Clarence F. Ludwig to be postmaster at Minersville in the State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 18, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit of Life, help us never to forget that which we owe Thee, our country, and our beautiful world. We thank Thee for a providence manifesting mercy in such rich abundance toward all those who put their trust in Thee. Breathe upon our land the spirit of duty, temperance, and patriotic devotion. Grant that the stress of today but establish us more firmly in those great fundamental verities upon which our Republic must ever stand for its glory and perpetuity. Hasten the hour when the world shall sing: "The morning light is breaking, the darkness disappears." May men everywhere forsake the tyranny of hate and unrighteous ambitions. Send out Thy light, O Lord, until the clouds shall be scattered and wicked men no longer shall infest with fear the peace of the world which is more precious than all the gold in the hills of earth. In the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 29. Concurrent resolution to print and bind the proceedings of Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in the rotunda, upon acceptance of the statue of Will Rogers, presented by the State of Oklahoma.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 280. An act to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as "compulsory block booking" and "blind selling" in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce.

S. 1032. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States," and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2163. An act to authorize an appropriation to meet such expenses as the President, in his discretion, may deem necessary to enable the United States to cooperate with the Republic of Panama in completing the construction of a national highway between Chorrera and Rio Hato, Republic of Panama, for defense purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 281) entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. NEELY, Mr. BULOW, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recommit to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. 6880) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey an easement in certain lands in the city of New York, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN]?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CULLEN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection? I am sending it back to the committee for no further action.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was granted unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some extraneous material. I have been advised by the Joint Committee on Printing that the material is slightly in excess of that which that committee has set as the limit, the amount being three pages. I therefore renew my unanimous-consent request to extend my own remarks and to include this matter, notwithstanding the estimate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman what the cost of the article will be?

Mr BOEHNE. The Superintendent of the Planning Division in his letter states it will take approximately three pages and the cost will be $135.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman to proceed for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include four short tables compiled from official sources.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. THOMAS F. FORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered on July 15, 1939, by Mr. Fred Beckman of the National Grange, on the omnibus transportation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to propound a parliamentary inquiry for my information and not in criticism of the gentleman from California who just said he intended to extend his address. I presume that will be at this point in the RECORD. I do not understand now whether that is permitted and, if so, what the effect of the rule made the other day will be.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. It will go in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter postmarked Denver, Colo., addressed "To the United States Congress." The Post Office Department delivered the letter to my office and I am taking the bow on that. It is signed "An Honest American" but he forgot to attach his name to the letter. He says that he hopes that some of us will have the courage to read it, but he knows we will not.

In this letter the gentleman holds the mirror up to the Congress, which Bobby Burns wished to God everybody could have done. The only way the Members can read this letter and see themselves as others see them is to print it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent to print it in the Appendix because I think it is entitled to a separate heading, which I shall give it. I am sorry the gentleman did not sign his name, because I felt in a mood to send him a very appropriate answer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado knows there are very few requests he may make that I would not grant, but I believe it is going a long way to ask to insert in the RECORD letters to which the writer would not sign his name. I believe the gentleman had better not do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will reserve his objection, I may say I believe that is a special reason why this letter ought to be printed in the RECORD. This person sends a scurrilous letter down here to Congress and says we do not have the courage to read it, and then he does not have the courage to sign his own name to it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not believe scurrilous letters ought to be printed in the RECORD, even though the writers sign their names to them; and I object, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks very briefly in the RECORD and include therein a very short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short radio address by one of the members of the Wisconsin Legislature on the relationship of labor and the farmer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from Affairs magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter addressed to me by Hon. W. Arthur Simpson, director of old-age assistance in Vermont, and a brief editorial comment thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an open letter from the Portland Chamber of Commerce with reference to shipping, and also an editorial from the Portland Oregonian on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Chicago News of June 22.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

GAVAGAN ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have addressed the following letter to all my Republican colleagues:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1939.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: If you have not already signed your name to petition No. 10, at the Speaker's desk, to discharge the committee from further consideration of the Gavagan antilynching bill, identical to the one introduced by me, I urge you to sign immediately.

There is a silver lining to every cloud. If we are to be kept in session any longer, because President Roosevelt is mad at the decisive action of the House in favor of retaining an arms embargo, I suggest we take steps at once to provide Speaker BANKHEAD and Majority Leader RAYBURN with such an important piece of legislation as the Federal antilynching bill for consideration in the House pending the action of the Senate on the Bloom neutrality bill.

The Senate may be in session on the President's neutrality proposals until Christmas. By bringing up and adopting the antilynching bill we would provide the Senate with necessary legislation to continue its deliberations without interruption until the next regular session of Congress, beginning in January.

Please cooperate and do your part by signing up in order to expedite consideration of this legislation.

Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial, about 6 inches long, which points out the difference between Governor Murphy and Governor Dickinson in the handling of strikes.

Mr. HOOK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think you would if you read it.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) to provide minimum national allotments for cotton, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Lines 7 and 8, strike out "eleven million five hundred thousand" and insert "ten million."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what does this Senate amendment do to the House bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The House bill provided a minimum allotment of 11,500,000 bales of cotton. The Senate amendment strikes out the 11,500,000 and inserts 10,000,000 bales. However, there really is not that much change in the House bill, because in the meantime we have passed a provision which continues the special provision for small growers and also a minimum allotment for counties. This makes it nearly the same net as the House measure originally passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the Committee on Agriculture unanimously favor the change?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Committee on Agriculture unanimously approved the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman consulted the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I had the matter up with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and one or two other members of the committee, and they had no objection to my making this request.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Texas what effect this will have on increasing the production of cotton and on the price of cotton, as well as the price of other farm commodities? I see in the paper I hold here, "Wheat and corn prices fall to season's low," and the paper shows the quotation for wheat at 64 cents a bushel, corn at 44 cents, oats at 29 cents, soybeans at 71 cents, rye at 43 cents, and lard at 5½ cents. What is going to happen to cotton?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I may say to the gentleman that this bill does not have any effect on the other commodities he mentioned, but applies only to cotton. The bill enables the farmers by their vote as heretofore to establish an adjustment program in reference to cotton, which certainly would not injure the price of cotton, but would tend to help the price of cotton.

Mr. RICH. I wish to say that I appreciate the position in which the gentleman finds himself. The gentleman has a hard row to hoe. The gentleman is one of the finest men we have in the House.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I hope the gentleman will help me hoe it.

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman will be able to get legislation passed that will help the farmer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask the gentleman to cooperate with me in doing that.

Mr. RICH. If a lot of the departments would let the gentleman alone, he would "go to town" and help the farmer.

Mr. JONES of Texas. We want to improve the position of the country instead of "going to town."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 131]

Barton	Evans	McGranery	Rockefeller

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 350 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short article which appeared in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle of June 17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter received from the California committee in support of the Wagner Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT OF 1939

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether or not that portion of the conference agreement which originally proposed to make a mandatory appropriation has been changed so that now, instead of directing the Congress to appropriate, it merely authorizes an appropriation not exceeding a certain amount.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; I will say to my friend from South Dakota that the language has been changed and this is purely an authorization with no attempt at an appropriation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And it leaves it open for the Congress to determine what that appropriation shall be, not exceeding $6,000,000 a year.

Mr. NICHOLS. Exactly.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"APPLICATION OF TITLE

"SECTION 1. The provisions of this title shall apply to the taxable year 1939 and succeeding taxable years, except that in the case of a taxable year beginning in 1938 and ending in 1939 the income taxable under this title shall be that fraction of the income for the entire fiscal year equal to the number of days remaining in the fiscal year after January 1, 1939, divided by three hundred and sixty-five: Provided, however, That if the taxpayer's records properly reflect the income for that part of the fiscal year falling in the calendar year 1939, then the portion of the fiscal year's income taxable hereunder shall be the portion received or accrued during the calendar year 1939.

"IMPOSITION OF TAX

"SEC. 2. (a) Tax on individuals: There is hereby levied for each taxable year upon the taxable income of every individual domiciled in the District of Columbia on the last day of the taxable year a tax at the following rates:

"Two per centum on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"Two and one-half per centum on the next $5,000 of taxable income.

"Three per centum on the taxable income in excess of $20,000.

"(b) Tax on corporations: There is hereby levied for each taxable year upon the taxable income from District of Columbia sources of every corporation, whether domestic or foreign (except those organizations expressly exempt under paragraph (d) of this section), a tax at the rate of 5 per centum thereof.

"(c) Definition of 'taxable income': As used in this section, the term 'taxable income' means the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 9 of this title.

"(d) Exemptions from tax: There shall be exempt from taxation under this title the following organizations: Corporations, including any community chest, fund, foundation, cemetery, association, teachers' retirement fund association, church, or club, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, educational, or social purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation; and labor organizations, trade associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, citizen's associations or organizations, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual; banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and companies, incorporated or otherwise, which guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, all of which pay taxes upon gross premiums or earnings under existing laws of the District of Columbia; voluntary employees' beneficiary associations providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such association or their dependents, if (1) no part of their net earnings inures (other than such payments) to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and (2) 85 per centum or more of the income consists of amounts collected from members for the sole purpose of making such payments and meeting expenses; and corporations organized under Act of Congress, if such corporations are instrumentalities of the United States.

"NET INCOME

"SEC. 3. Definition: The term 'net income' means the gross income of a taxpayer less the deductions allowed by this title.

"GROSS INCOME AND EXCLUSIONS THEREFROM

"SEC. 4. (a) Of individuals: The words 'gross income', as used in this title, include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal services of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, including salaries, wages, and compensation paid by the United States to its officers and employees to the extent the same is not immune from taxation under the Constitution, or income derived from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership, or use of, or interest in, such property; also from rent, royalties, interest, dividends, securities, or transactions of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits, and income derived from any source whatever.

"(b) Of corporations: In the case of any corporation, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the District of Columbia. The proper apportionment and allocation of income with respect to sources of income within and without the District may be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners.

"(c) Exclusions from gross income: The following items shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

"(1) Life insurance: Amounts received under a life-insurance contract paid by reason of the death of the insured, whether in a single sum or otherwise (but if such amounts are held by the insurer under an agreement to pay interest thereon, the interest payments shall be included in gross income).

"(2) Annuities, and so forth: Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts and other than amounts received as annuities) under a life-insurance or endowment contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income. Amounts received as an annuity under an annuity or endowment contract shall be included in gross income; except that there shall be excluded from gross income the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 3 per centum of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity (whether or not paid during such year), until the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under this title in respect to such annuity equals the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity. In the case of a transfer for a valuable consideration, by assignment or otherwise, of a life-insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, or any interest therein, only the actual value of such consideration and the amount of the premiums and other sums subsequently paid by the transferee shall be exempt from taxation under paragraph (1) or this paragraph.

"(9) Income of foreign governments.

"DEDUCTIONS FROM GROSS INCOME

"SEC. 5. (a) Items of deduction: In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

"(1) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.

"(2) Interest: All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness.

"(3) Taxes: Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year, except—

"(A) income taxes;

"(B) estate, inheritance, legacy, succession, and gift taxes;

"(C) taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; but this paragraph shall not exclude the allowance as a deduction of so much of such taxes as is properly allocable to maintenance or interest charges; and

"(D) taxes paid to any State or Territory on property, business, or occupation the income from which is not taxable under this title.

"(4) Losses in trade or business: Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in trade or business, the income from which is subject to taxation under this title.

"(5) Losses in transactions for profit: Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in any transaction entered into for profit would be subject to taxation under this title, though not connected with the trade or business.

"(6) Intercompany dividends: In the case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends from a corporation which is subject to taxation under this title.

"(7) Bad debts: Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year or, in the discretion of the assessor, a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts; and when satisfied that a debt is recoverable only in part, the assessor may allow such debt, in an amount not in excess of the part charged off within the taxable year, as a deduction.

"(8) Insurance premiums: All fire-, tornado-, and casualty-insurance premiums paid during the taxable year in connection with property held for investment or business.

"(9) Depreciation: A reasonable allowance for exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence; and including in the case of natural resources allowances for depletion as permitted by reasonable rules and regulations which the Commissioners are hereby authorized to promulgate.

"(10) Charitable contributions: Contributions or gifts actually paid within the taxable year to or for the use of any corporation, or trust, or community fund, or foundation, maintaining activities in the District of Columbia and organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, military, or educational purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual: Provided, That such deductions shall be allowed only in an amount which in all of the above cases combined does not exceed 15 per centum of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this subparagraph.

"(11) Wagering losses: Losses from wagering transactions shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such transactions.

"(b) Allocation of deductions: In the case of a taxpayer, other than an individual, the deductions allowed in this section shall be allowed only for and to the extent that they are connected with income arising from sources within the District and taxable under this title to a nonresident taxpayer; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to sources of income within and without the District shall be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners. The so-called charitable contribution deduction allowed by subparagraph (10) of paragraph (a) of this section shall be allowed whether or not connected with income from sources within the District.

"(c) Corporations and nonresident individuals to file return of total income: A corporation shall receive the benefits of the deductions allowed to it under this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the assessor a true and accurate return of its total income received from all sources, whether within or without the District.

"GAINS OR LOSSES FROM SALE OF ASSETS

"SEC. 6. (a) Gain or loss in capital assets not recognized: No gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a capital asset shall be recognized in the computation of net income under this title. For the purposes of this title, 'capital assets' means property held by the taxpayer for more than two years (whether or not connected with his trade or business) but does not include stock in trade of the taxpayer or other property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of a taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year, or property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of his trade or business.

"(b) Gain or loss in assets other than capital: Gains or losses from the sale or exchange of property other than a capital asset shall be treated in the same manner as other income or deductible losses, and the basis for computing such gain or loss shall be the cost of such property or, if acquired by some means other than purchase, the fair market value thereof at the date of acquisition.

"EXCHANGES

"SEC. 7. Where property is exchanged for other property, the property received in exchange for the purpose of determining the gain or loss shall be treated as the equivalent of cash to the amount of its fair market value; but when in connection with the reorganization, merger, or consolidation of a corporation a taxpayer receives, in place of stock or securities owned by him, new stock or securities of the reorganized, merged, or consolidated corporation, no gain or loss shall be deemed to occur from the exchange until the new stock or securities are sold or realized upon and the gain or loss is definitely ascertained, until which time the new stock or securities received shall be treated as taking the place of the stock and securities exchanged; provided such reorganization, merger, or consolidation is a 'reorganization' within the meaning of the term 'reorganization' as defined in section 112 (g) of the Federal Revenue Act of 1936.

"DEDUCTIONS NOT ALLOWED

"SEC. 8. (a) General rule: In computing net income no deductions shall be allowed in any case in respect to—

"(1) personal, living, or family expenses;

"(2) any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate;

"(3) any amount expended in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made; and

"(4) premiums paid on any life-insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer when the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under such policy.

"(b) Holders of life or terminable interest: Amounts paid under the laws of any State, Territory, District of Columbia, possession of the United States, or foreign country as income to the holder of a life or terminable interest acquired by gift, bequest, or inheritance shall not be reduced or diminished by any deduction for shrinkage (by whatever name called) in the value of such interest due to the lapse of time, nor by any deduction allowed by this Act (except the deductions provided for in subsections (l) and (m) of section 23 of the Federal Revenue Act of 1926 as amended) for the purpose of computing the net income of an estate or trust but not allowed under the laws of such State, Territory, District of Columbia, possession of the United States, or foreign country for the purpose of computing the income to which such holder is entitled.

"PERSONAL EXEMPTIONS AND CREDIT FOR DEPENDENTS

"SEC. 9. (a) Credits: There shall be allowed to individuals the following credits against net income:

"(1) Personal exemption: In the case of a single person or married person not living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $1,000; in the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $2,500; a husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption, the amount of such personal exemption shall be $2,500. If such husband and wife make separate returns the personal exemption may be taken by either or divided between them.

"(2) Credit for dependents: $400 for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer if such dependent person is under eighteen years of age or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

"(b) Change of status: If the status of the taxpayer, insofar as it affects personal exemption or credit for dependents, changes during the taxable year, the personal exemption and credit shall be apportioned under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, in accordance with the number of months before and after such change. For the purpose of such apportionment a fractional portion of a month shall be disregarded unless it amounts to more than half a month in which case it shall be considered as a month.

"(c) In return for fractional part of year: In the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year, the personal exemption and credit for dependents shall be reduced respectively to amounts which bear the same ratio to the full credits provided as the number of months in the period for which the return is made bears to twelve months.

"ACCOUNTING PERIODS

"SEC. 10. The net income shall be computed upon the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period (fiscal year or calendar year, as the case may be) in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of such taxpayer; but if no such method of accounting has been so employed, or if the method employed does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made in accordance with such method as in the opinion of the assessor does clearly reflect the income. If the taxpayer's annual accounting period is other than a fiscal year as defined in section 43 or if the taxpayer has no annual accounting period or does not keep books, the net income shall be computed on the basis of the calendar year. If the taxpayer makes a Federal income-tax return, his income shall be computed, for the purposes of this title, on the basis of the same calendar or fiscal year as in such Federal income-tax return.

"PERIOD IN WHICH ITEMS OF GROSS INCOME INCLUDED

"SEC. 11. The amount of all items of gross income shall be included in the gross income for the taxable year in which received by the taxpayer unless, under methods of accounting permitted under section 10, any such amounts are to be properly accounted for as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be included, in computing net income for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death, amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly includible in respect to such period or a prior period.

"PERIOD FOR WHICH DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS TAKEN

"SEC. 12. The deductions and credits provided for in this title shall be taken for the taxable year in which 'paid or accrued' or 'paid or incurred,' dependent upon the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed unless, in order to clearly reflect the income, the deductions or credits should be taken as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be allowed as deductions and credits for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death, amounts accrued up to the date of his death if not otherwise properly allowable in respect to such period or a prior period.

"INSTALLMENT BASIS

"SEC. 13. (a) Dealers in personal property: Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, a person who regularly sells or otherwise disposes of personal property on the installment plan may return as income therefrom in any taxable year that proportion of the installment payments actually received in that year which the gross profit realized or to be realized when payment is completed bears to the total contract price.

"(b) Sales of realty and casual sales of personalty: In the case of (1) a casual sale or other casual disposition of personal property (other than property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year) for a price exceeding $1,000, or (2) of a sale or other disposition of real property, if in either case the initial payments do not exceed 30 per centum of the selling price, the income may, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, be returned on the basis and in the manner above prescribed in this section. As used in this section the term 'initial payments' means the payments received in cash or property other than evidences of indebtedness of the purchaser during the taxable period in which the sale or other disposition is made.

"(c) Change from accrual to installment basis: If a taxpayer entitled to the benefits of subsection (a) elects for any taxable year to report his net income on the installment basis, then in computing his income for the year of change or any subsequent year, amounts actually received during any such year on account of sales or other disposition of property made in any prior year shall not be excluded.

"(d) Gain or loss upon disposition of installment obligations: If an installment obligation is satisfied at other than its face value or distributed, transmitted, sold, or otherwise disposed of, gain or loss shall result to the extent of the difference between the basis of the obligation and (1) in the case of satisfaction at other than face value or a sale or exchange—the amount realized, or (2) in case of a distribution, transmission, or disposition otherwise than by sale or exchange—the fair market value of the obligation at the time of such distribution, transmission, or disposition. Any gain or loss so resulting shall be considered as resulting from the sale or exchange of the property in respect to which the installment obligation was received. The basis of the obligation shall be the excess of the face value of the obligation over an amount equal to the income which would be returnable were the obligation satisfied in full. This paragraph shall not apply to the transmission at death of installment obligations if there is filed with the assessor, at such time as he may by regulation prescribe, a bond in such amount and with such sureties as he may deem necessary, conditioned upon the return as income, by the person receiving any payment in such obligations, of the same proportion of such payment as would be returnable as income by the decedent if he had lived and had received such payment.

INVENTORIES

"SEC. 14. Whenever in the opinion of the assessor the use of inventories is necessary in order clearly to determine the income of any taxpayer, inventories shall be taken by such taxpayer upon such basis as the assessor may prescribe as conforming as nearly as may be to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and as most clearly reflecting the income.

INDIVIDUAL RETURNS

"SEC. 15. (a) Requirement: The following individuals shall each make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioners may by regulations prescribe:

"(1) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband or wife;

"(2) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife; and

"(3) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of his net income.

"(b) Husband and wife: If a husband and wife living together have an aggregate net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, or an aggregate gross income for such year of $5,000 or over—

"(1) Each shall make a return, or

"(2) The income of each shall be included in a single joint return, in which case the tax shall be computed on the aggregate income.

"(c) Persons under disability: If the taxpayer is unable to make his own return, the return shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

"(d) Fiduciaries: For returns to be made by fiduciaries, see section 23.

"CORPORATION RETURNS

"SEC. 16. Every corporation not expressly exempt from the tax imposed by this title shall make a return and pay a filing fee of $25 which shall be credited against the tax. Such returns shall state specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title, and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioners may by regulations prescribe. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer, and by the treasurer, assistant treasurer, or chief accounting officer. In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

"TAXPAYER TO MAKE RETURN WHETHER RETURN FORM IS SENT OR NOT

"SEC. 17. Blank forms of returns for income shall be supplied by the assessor. It shall be the duty of the assessor to obtain an income-tax return from every taxpayer who is liable under the law to file such return; but this duty shall in no manner diminish the obligation of the taxpayer to file a return without being called upon to do so.

"TIME AND PLACE FOR FILING RETURNS

"SEC. 18. All returns of income for the preceding taxable year shall be made to the assessor on or before the 15th day of March in each year, except that such returns, if made on the basis of a fiscal year, shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of such fiscal year, unless such fiscal year has expired in the calendar year 1939 prior to the approval of this act, in which event returns shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the approval of this act.

"EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING RETURNS

"SEC. 19. The assessor may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing income returns whenever in his judgment good cause exists and shall keep a record of every such extension. Except in case of a taxpayer who is abroad, no such extension shall be granted for more than six months, and in no case for more than one year. In the event time for filing a return is deferred, the taxpayer is hereby required to pay, as a part of the tax, an amount equal to 6 per centum per annum on the tax ultimately assessed from the time the return was due until it is actually filed in the office of the assessor.

"ALLOCATION OF INCOME AND DEDUCTIONS

"SEC. 20. In any of two or more organizations, trades, or businesses (whether or not incorporated, whether or not organized in the District of Columbia, and whether or not affiliated) owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interests, the assessor is authorized to distribute, apportion, or allocate gross income or deductions between or among such organizations, trades, or businesses, if he determines that such distribution, apportionment, or allocation is necessary in order to prevent evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect the income of any of such organizations, trades, or businesses. The provisions of this section shall apply, but shall not be limited in application to any case of a common carrier by railroad subject to the Interstate Commerce Act and jointly owned or controlled directly or indirectly by two or more common carriers by railroad subject to said Act.

"PUBLICITY OF RETURNS

"SEC. 21. (a) Secrecy of returns: Except to any official of the District, having a right thereto in his official capacity, it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the District to divulge or make known in any manner the amount of income or any particulars set forth or disclosed in any report or return under this title.

"(b) When copies may be furnished: Neither the original nor a copy of the return desired for use in litigations in court shall be furnished where the District of Columbia is not interested in the result whether or not the request is contained in an order of the court: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the furnishing to a taxpayer of a copy of his return upon the payment of a fee of $1.

"(c) Reciprocal exchange of information with States: Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, the assessor may permit the proper officer of any State imposing an income tax or his authorized representative to inspect income-tax returns, filed with the assessor or may furnish to such officer or representative a copy of any income-tax return provided such State grants substantially similar privileges to the assessor or his representative or to the proper officer of the District charged with the administration of this title.

"(d) Publication of statistics: Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular reports and the items thereof, or of the publication of delinquent lists showing the names of taxpayers who have failed to pay their taxes at the time and in the manner provided by law, together with any relevant information which in the opinion of the assessor may assist in the collection of such delinquent taxes.

"(e) Penalties for violation of this section: Any offense against the provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"RETURNS TO BE PRESERVED

"SEC. 22. Reports and returns received by the assessor under the provisions of this title shall be preserved for six years and thereafter until the accessor orders them to be destroyed.

"FIDUCIARY RETURNS

"SEC. 23. (a) Requirement of return: Every fiduciary (except a receiver appointed by authority of law in possession of part only of the property of an individual) shall make under oath a return for any of the following individuals, estates, or trusts for which he acts, stating specifically the items of gross income thereof and the deductions and credits allowed under this title and such other information for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title as the Commissioners may by regulations prescribe:

"(1) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over, if single, or if married and not living with husband and wife;

"(2) Every individual having a net income for the taxable year of $2,500 or over, if married and living with husband or wife;

"(3) Every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of his net income;

"(4) Every estate or trust the net income of which for the taxable year is $1,000 or over;

"(5) Every estate or trust the gross income of which for the taxable year is $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of the net income.

"(b) Joint fiduciaries: Under such regulations as the Commissioners may prescribe, a return by one of two or more joint fiduciaries and filed in the office of the assessor shall be sufficient compliance with the above requirement. Such fiduciary shall make oath (1) that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of the individual, estate, or trust for which the return is made, to enable him to make the return, and (2) that the return is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct.

"(c) Law applicable to fiduciaries: Any fiduciary required to make a return under this title shall be subject to all the provisions of law which apply to individuals.

"ESTATES AND TRUSTS

"SEC. 24. (a) Application of tax: The taxes imposed by this title upon individuals shall apply to the income of estates or of any kind of property held in trust, including—

"(1) income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained person or persons with contingent interests, and income accumulated or held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust;

"(2) income which is to be distributed currently by the fiduciary to the beneficiaries, and income collected by a guardian of an infant which is to be held or distributed as the court may direct;

"(3) income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate; and

"(4) income which, in the discretion of the fiduciary, may be either distributed to the beneficiaries or accumulated.

"(b) Computation of tax: The tax shall be computed upon the net income of the estate or trust, and shall be paid by the fiduciary, except as provided in paragraph (e) of this section (relating to revocable trusts) and paragraph (f) of this section (relating to income for benefit of the grantor).

"(c) Net income: The net income of the estate or trust shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as in the case of an individual, except that—

"(1) there shall be allowed as an additional deduction in computing the net income of the estate or trust the amount of the income of the estate or trust for its taxable year which is to be distributed currently by the fiduciary to the beneficiaries, and the amount of the income collected by a guardian of an infant which is to be held or distributed as the court may direct, but the amount so allowed as a deduction shall be included in computing the net income of the beneficiaries whether distributed to them or not. Any amount allowed as a deduction under this paragraph shall not be allowed as a deduction under subsection (2) of this section in the same or any succeeding taxable year;

"(2) in the case of income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate, and in the case of income which, in the discretion of the fiduciary, may be either distributed to the beneficiary or accumulated, there shall be allowed as an additional deduction in computing the net income of the estate or trust the amount of the income of the estate or trust for its taxable year, which is properly paid or credited during such year to any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, but the amount so allowed as a deduction shall be included in computing the net income of the legatee, heir, or beneficiary;

(3) there shall be allowed as a deduction (in lieu of the deductions for charitable contributions authorized by section 5 (a) (10)) any part of the gross income, without limitation, which pursuant to the terms of the will or deed creating a trust, is during the taxable year paid or permanently set aside for the purposes and in the manner provided in section 5 (a) (10) or is to be used exclusively for the purposes enumerated in section 5 (a) (10).

"(d) Different taxable year: If the taxable year of a beneficiary is different from that of the estate or trust, the amount which he is required, under subparagraph (1) of paragraph (c) of this section, to include in computing his net income, shall be based upon the income of the estate or trust for any taxable year of the estate or trust ending within or with his taxable year.

"(e) Revocable trusts: Where at any time the power to revest in the grantor title to any part of the corpus of the trust is vested—

"(1) in the grantor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the corpus or the income therefrom; or

"(2) in any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the corpus or the income therefrom, then the income of such part of the trust shall be included in computing the net income of the grantor.

"(f) Income for benefit of grantor: Where any part of the income of a trust—

"(1) is, or in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income may be, held or accumulated for future distribution to the grantor; or

"(2) may, in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income, be distributed to the grantor; or

"(3) is, or in the discretion of the grantor or of any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such part of the income may be applied to the payment of premiums upon policies of insurance on the life of the grantor (except policies of insurance irrevocably payable for the purposes and in the manner specified in section 5 (a) (10), relating to the so-called 'charitable contribution' deduction);

then such part of the income of the trust shall be included in computing the net income of the grantor.

"(g) Definition of 'in discretion of grantor': As used in this section, the term 'in the discretion of the grantor' means 'in the discretion of the grantor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of the part of the income in question.'

"(h) Income from intangible personal property held by trust: Income from intangible personal property held by any trust company or by any national bank situated in the District (with or without an individual trustee, resident or nonresident) in trust to pay the income for the time being to, or to accumulate or apply such income for the benefit of any nonresident of the District, shall not be taxable hereunder if—

"(1) such beneficial owner or cestui que trust was at the time of the creation of the trust a nonresident of the District; and

"(2) the testator, settlor, or grantor was also at the time of the creation of the trust a nonresident of the District.

"PARTNERSHIPS

"SEC. 25. (a) Partners only taxable: Individuals carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and no income tax shall be assessable hereunder upon the net income of any partnership. All such income shall be assessable to the individual partners; it shall be reported by such partners as individuals upon their respective individual income returns; and it shall be taxed to them as individuals along with their other income at the rate and in the manner herein provided for the taxation of income received by individuals. There shall be included in computing the net income of each partner his distributive share, whether distributed or not, of the net income of the partnership for the taxable year; or if his net income for such taxable year is computed upon the basis of a period different from that upon the basis of which the net income of the partnership is computed, then his distributive share of the net income of the partnership for any accounting period of the partnership ending within the taxable year upon the basis of which the partner's net income is computed.

"(b) Partnership return: Every partnership shall make a return for each taxable year stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and shall include in the return the names and the addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to share in the net income if distributed, and the amount of the distributive share of each individual. The return shall be sworn to by any one of the partners.

"PAYMENT OF TAX

"SEC. 26. (a) Time of payment: The total amount of tax imposed by this title shall be paid on the 15th day of March following the close of the calendar year, or, if the return should be made on the basis of a fiscal year, then on the 15th day of the third month following the close of the fiscal year, except a fiscal year which expired in the calendar year 1939 prior to the approval of this Act, in which event the tax shall be paid on the 15th day of the third month following the approval of this Act.

"(b) Extension of time for payments: At the request of the taxpayer the assessor may extend the time for payment by the taxpayer of the amount determined as the tax, for a period not to exceed six months from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax or an installment thereof. In such case the amount in respect to which the extension is granted shall be paid on or before the date of the expiration of the period of the extension.

"(c) Voluntary advance payment: A tax imposed by this title, or any installment thereof, may be paid, at the election of the taxpayer, prior to the date prescribed for its payment.

"(d) Fractional part of cent: In the payment of any tax under this title a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

"(e) Payment to collector and receipts: The tax provided under this title shall be collected by the collector and the revenues derived therefrom shall be turned over to the Treasury of the United States for the credit to the District in the same manner as other revenues are turned over to the United States Treasury for the credit to the District. The collector shall, upon written request, give to the person making payment of any income tax a full written or printed receipt therefor.

"TAX A PERSONAL DEBT

"SEC. 27. Every tax imposed by this title, and all increases, interest, and penalties thereof, shall become, from the time it is due and payable, a personal debt, from the person or persons liable to pay the same to the District, and shall be entitled to the same priority as other District taxes; and the taxes levied hereunder and the interest and penalties thereon shall be collected by the collector of taxes in the manner provided by law for the collection of taxes due the District on personal property in force at the time of such collection.

"INFORMATION FROM THE BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

"SEC. 28. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed by this title.

"ASSESSOR TO ADMINISTER

"SEC. 29. (a) Duties of assessor: The assessor is hereby required to administer the provisions of this title. The assessor shall prescribe forms identical with those utilized by the Federal Government, except to the extent required by differences between this title and its application and the Federal Act and its application. He shall apply as far as practicable the administrative and judicial interpretations of the Federal income-tax law so that computations of income for purposes of this title shall be, as nearly as practicable, identical with the calculations required for Federal income-tax purposes. As soon as practicable after the return is filed the assessor shall examine it and shall determine the correct amount of the tax.

"(b) Statements and special returns: Every taxpayer liable to any tax imposed by this title shall keep such records, render under oath such statements, make such returns, and comply with such rules and regulations as the Commissioners from time to time may prescribe. Whenever the assessor judges it necessary he may require any taxpayer, by notice served upon him, to make a return, render under oath such statements, or keep such records as he deems sufficient to show whether or not such taxpayer is liable to tax under this title and the extent of such liability.

"(c) Examination of books and witnesses: The assessor, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making an estimate of the taxable income of any taxpayer, is authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda of any person bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return and may summon any person to appear and produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the assessor shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any members of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then, and in that event, the assessor may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court. Any person in custody or control of any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in such returns, who shall refuse to permit the examination by the assessor or any person designated by him of any such books, papers, records, or memoranda, or who shall obstruct or hinder the assessor or any person designated by him in the examination of any books, papers, records, or memoranda, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $300. All prosecutions under this section shall be brought in the police court of the District of Columbia on information by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia in the name of the District of Columbia.

"(d) Return by assessor: If any person fails to make and file a return at the time prescribed by law or by regulations made under authority of law, or makes, willfully or otherwise, a false or fraudulent return, the assessor shall make the return from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise. Any return so made and subscribed by the assessor shall be prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes.

"ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF DEFICIENCIES

"SEC. 30. Definition of 'deficiency': As used in this title in respect of a tax imposed by this title 'deficiency' means—

"(1) the amount by which the tax imposed by this title exceeds the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return; but the amount so shown on the return shall first be increased by the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency, and decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax; or

"(2) if no amount is shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return, or if no return is made by the taxpayer, then the amount by which the tax exceeds the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency; but such amounts previously assessed, or collected without assessment, shall first be decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax.

"DETERMINATION AND ASSESSMENT OF DEFICIENCY

"SEC. 31. If a deficiency in tax is determined by the assessor, the taxpayer shall be notified thereof and given a period of not less than thirty days, after such notice is sent by registered mail, in which to file a protest and show cause or reason why the deficiency should not be paid. Opportunity for hearing shall be granted by the assessor, and a final decision thereon shall be made as quickly as practicable. Any deficiency in tax then determined to be due shall be assessed and paid, together with any addition to the tax applicable thereto, within ten days after notice and demand by the collector. The taxpayer may appeal from such assessment to the Board of Tax Appeals for the District of Columbia in the same manner and to the same extent as set forth in sections 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of title VI of an Act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes, approved May 16, 1938.

"JEOPARDY ASSESSMENT

"SEC. 32. (a) Authority for making: If the assessor believes that the collection of any tax imposed by this title will be jeopardized by delay, he shall, whether or not the time otherwise prescribed by law for making return and paying such tax has expired, immediately assess such tax (together with all interest and penalties, the assessment of which is provided for by law). Such tax, penalties, and interest shall thereupon become immediately due and payable, and immediate notice and demand shall be made by the collector for the payment thereof. Upon failure or refusal to pay such tax, penalty, and interest, collection thereof by distraint shall be lawful.

"(b) Bond to stay collection: The collection of the whole or any part of the amount of such assessment may be stayed by filing with the collector a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount as to which the stay is desired, and with such sureties as the collector deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the amount, the collection of which is stayed, at the time at which, but for this section, such amount would be due.

"PERIOD OF LIMITATION UPON ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION

"SEC. 33. (a) General rule: Except as provided in paragraph (b) of this section—

"(1) The amount of income taxes imposed by this title shall be assessed within two years after the return is filed, and no proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such taxes shall be begun after the expiration of such period.

"(2) In the case of income received during the lifetime of a decedent, or by his estate during the period of administration, or by a corporation, the tax shall be assessed, and any proceeding in court without assessment for the collection of such tax shall be begun, within twelve months after written request therefor (filed after the return is made) by the executor, administrator, or other fiduciary representing the estate of such decedent, or by the corporation, but not after the expiration of two years after the return is filed. This subparagraph shall not apply in the case of a corporation unless—

"(A) such written request notifies the assessor that the corporation contemplates dissolution at or before the expiration of such twelve-month period; and

"(B) the dissolution is in good faith begun before the expiration of such twelve-month period; and

"(C) the dissolution is completed.

"(3) If the taxpayer omits from gross income an amount properly includible therein which is in excess of 25 per centum of the amount of gross income stated in the return, the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time within five years after the return was filed.

"(4) For the purposes of subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3), a return filed before the last day prescribed by law for the filing thereof shall be considered as filed on such last day.

"(b) False return: In the case of a false or fraudulent return with intent to evade tax or of a failure to file a return, the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time.

"(c) Waiver: Where before the expiration of the time prescribed in paragraph (a) for the assessment of the tax, both the assessor and the taxpayer have consented in writing to its assessment after such time, the tax may be assessed at any time prior to the expiration of the period agreed upon. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

"(d) Collection after assessment: Where the assessment of any income tax imposed by this title has been made within the period of limitation properly applicable thereto, such tax may be collected by distraint or by a proceeding in court, but only if begun (A) within three years after the assessment of the tax or (B) prior to the expiration of any period for collection agreed upon in writing by the assessor and the taxpayer before the expiration of such three-year period. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

"REFUNDS

"SEC. 34. Except as otherwise provided in section 31 of this title, where there has been an overpayment of any tax imposed by this title, the amount of such overpayment shall be refunded to the taxpayer. No such refund shall be allowed after two years from the time the tax is paid unless before the expiration of such period a claim therefor is filed by the taxpayer. The amount of the refund shall not exceed the portion of the tax paid during the two years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, or, if no claim was filed, then during the two years immediately preceding the allowance of the refund. Every claim for refund must be in writing, under oath; must state the specific grounds upon which the claim is founded, and must be filed with the assessor. If the assessor disallows any part of a claim for refund, he shall send to the taxpayer by registered mail a notice of the part of the claim so disallowed. Within ninety days after the mailing of such notice, the taxpayer may file an appeal with the Board of Tax Appeals for the District of Columbia, in the same manner and to the same extent as set forth in sections 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 of title IX of an Act to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, and for other purposes, approved May 16, 1938. The remedy provided to the taxpayer under this section shall not be deemed to take away from the taxpayer any remedy which he might have under any other provision of law; but no suit by the taxpayer for the recovery of any part of such tax shall be instituted in any court if the taxpayer has elected to file an appeal in accordance with this section.

"CLOSING AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 35. The tax on the transfer of any such property shall be paid by such person to the collector of taxes within nine months after the date of the death of the decedent: Provided, however, That with respect to real estate passing by will or inheritance such report shall be made within fifteen months after the death of the decedent, and the tax on the transfer thereof shall be paid within eighteen months after the date of the death of the decedent.

"'SEC. 7. In the case of any grant, deed, devise, descent, or bequest of a life interest or term of years, the donee for life or years shall pay a tax only on the value of his interest, determined in a manner as the Commissioners by regulation may prescribe, and the donee of the future interest shall pay a tax only on his interest as based upon the value thereof at the time of the death of the decedent creating such interest. The value of any future interest shall be determined by deducting from the market value of such property at the time of the death of such decedent the value of the precedent life interest or term of years. Where the future interest is vested the donee thereof shall pay the tax within the time in which the tax upon the precedent life interest or term of years is required to be paid under the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of this article, as the case may be. Where the future interest is contingent the personal representative of such decedent or the persons interested in such contingent future estate shall have the option of (1) paying, within the time herein provided for the payment of taxes due upon vested future interests, a tax equal to the mean between the highest possible tax and the lowest possible tax which could be imposed under any contingency or condition whereby such contingent future interest might be wholly or in part created, defeated, extended, or abridged; or (2) paying the tax upon such transfer at the time when such future interest shall become vested at rates and with exemptions in force at the time of the death of the decedent: Provided, That the personal representative or trustee of the estate of the decedent or the persons interested in the future contingent interest shall deposit with the assessor a bond in the penal sum of an amount equal to twice the tax payable under option (1) hereof. Such bonds shall be payable to the District and shall be conditioned for the payment of such tax when and as the same shall become due and payable. The tax upon the transfer of future interests or remainders shall be a lien upon the property or interest transferred from the date of the death of the decedent creating the interests and shall remain in force and effect until ten years after the date when such remainder or future interest shall become vested in the donee thereof. If the tax upon the transfer of a contingent future interest is paid before the same shall become vested, such tax shall be paid by the personal representative out of the corpus of the estate of the decedent, otherwise by the person or persons entitled to receive the same.

"'ARTICLE II—ESTATE TAXES

"'SEC. 1. In addition to the taxes imposed by article I, there is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the estate of every decedent who, after this title becomes effective, shall die a resident of the District, a tax equal to 80 per centum of the Federal estate tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301, title III, of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted.

"'SEC. 2. There shall be credited against and applied in reduction of the tax imposed by section 1 of this article the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession tax lawfully imposed by any State or Territory of the United States, in respect of any property included in the gross estate for Federal estate-tax purposes as prescribed in title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted: Provided, however, That only such taxes as are actually paid and credit therefor claimed and allowed against the Federal estate tax may be applied as a credit against and in reduction of the tax imposed by section 1.

"'SEC. 3. In no event shall the tax imposed by section 1 of this article exceed the difference between the maximum credit which might be allowed against the Federal estate tax imposed by title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted, and the aggregate amount of the taxes described in section 2 of this article (but not including the tax imposed by section 1) allowable as a credit against the Federal estate tax.

"'SEC. 4. The purpose of section 1 of this article is to secure for the District the benefit of the credit allowed under the provisions of section 301 (c) of title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, or as hereafter amended or reenacted, to the extent that the District may be entitled by the provisions of said Revenue Act, by imposing additional taxes, and the same shall be liberally construed to effect such purpose: Provided, That the amount of the tax imposed by section 1 of this article shall not be decreased by any failure to secure the allowance of credit against the Federal estate tax.

"'SEC. 5. A tax is hereby imposed upon the transfer of real property or tangible personal property in the District of every person who at the time of death was a resident of the United States but not a resident of the District, and upon the transfer of all property, both real and personal, within the District of every person who at the time of death was not a resident of the United States, the amount of which shall be a sum equal to such proportion of the amount by which the credit allowable under the applicable Federal revenue Act for estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes actually paid to the several States exceeds the amount actually so paid for such taxes, exclusive of estate taxes based upon the difference between such credit and other estate taxes and inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes, as the value of the property in the District bears to the value of the entire estate, subject to estate tax under the applicable Federal revenue Act.

"'SEC. 6. Every executor or administrator of the estate of a decedent dying a resident of the District or of a nonresident decedent owning real estate or tangible personal property situated in the District, or of an alien decedent owning any real estate, tangible or intangible personal property situated in the District, or, if there is no executor or administrator appointed, qualified, and acting, then any person in actual or constructive possession of any property forming a part of an estate subject to estate tax under this title shall, within sixteen months after the death of the decedent file with the assessor a copy of the return required by section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1926, verified by the affidavit of the person filing said return with the assessor, and shall, within thirty days after the date of any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, confirming, increasing, or diminishing the tax shown to be due, file a copy of such communication with the assessor. With the copy of the Federal estate-tax return there shall be filed an affidavit as to the several amounts paid or expected to be paid as taxes within the purview of section 2 of this article: Provided, however, That in any case where the time for the filing of such return as required by section 304 of the Revenue Act of 1926 is extended without penalty by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, then the copy thereof verified as aforesaid may be filed with the assessor within thirty days after the expiration of said extended period.

"'SEC. 7. The assessor shall, upon receipt of the return and accompanying affidavit, assess such amount as he may determine, from the basis of the return, to be due the District. Upon receipt of a copy of any communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, herein required to be filed, the assessor shall make such additional assessment or shall make such abatement of the assessment as may appear proper.

"'SEC. 8. The estate taxes imposed by this article shall be paid to the collector of taxes within seventeen months after the death of the decedent: Provided, however, That in any case where the time for the payment of taxes imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301, title III, of the Revenue Act of 1926, is extended by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, then the tax imposed by this article shall be paid within sixty days after the expiration of such extended period, together with interest as provided in section 4 of article IV of this title: Provided further, That any additional assessment found to be due under section 7 of this article shall be paid to the collector of taxes within thirty days after the determination of such additional assessment by the assessor.

"'ARTICLE III—GENERAL

"'SEC. 1. The bond of the personal representative of the decedent shall be liable for all taxes and penalties assessed under this title, except inheritance taxes and penalties imposed in relation to the transfer of property not under the control of such personal representative: Provided, That in no case shall the bond of the personal representative be liable for a greater sum than is actually received by him.

"'SEC. 2. The register of wills of the District shall report to the assessor on forms provided for the purpose every qualifiation in the District upon the estate of a decedent. Such report shall be filed with the assessor at least once every month, and shall contain the name of the decedent, the date of his death, the name and address of the personal representative, and the value of the estate, as shown by the petition for administration or probate.

"'SEC. 3. The Commissioners shall have supervision of the enforcement of this title and shall have the power to make such rules and regulations, consistent with its provisions, as may be necessary for its enforcement and efficient administration and to provide for the granting of extension of time within which to perform the duties imposed by this title. The assessor shall determine all taxes assessable under this title and immediately upon the determination of same, shall forward a statement of the taxes determined to the person or persons chargeable with the payment thereof and shall give advice thereof to the collector of taxes. The assessor is hereby authorized and empowered to summon any person before him to give testimony on oath or affirmation or to produce all books, records, papers, documents, or other legal evidence as to any matter relating to this title, and the assessor is authorized to administer oaths and to take testimony for the purposes of the administration of this title. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then and in that event the assessor may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to said summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

"'SEC. 4. If the taxes imposed by this title are not paid when due, 1 per centum interest for each month or portion of a month from the date when the same were due until paid shall be added to the amount of said taxes and collected as a part of the same, and said taxes shall be collected by the collector of taxes in the manner provided by the law for the collection of taxes due the District on personal property in force at the time of such collection: Provided, however, That where the time for payment of the tax imposed by this title is extended by the assessor or where the payment of the tax is lawfully suspended under the regulations for the administration of this title, interest shall be paid at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the date on which the tax would otherwise be payable.

"'SEC. 5. If any person shall fail to perform any duty imposed upon him by the provisions of this title or the regulations made hereunder the Commissioners may proceed by petition for mandamus to compel performance and upon the granting of such writ the court shall adjudge all costs of such proceeding against the delinquent.

"'SEC. 6. Any person required by this title to file a return who fails to file such return within the time prescribed by this title, or within such additional time as may be granted under regulations promulgated by the Commissioners, shall become liable in his own person and estate to the District in an amount equal to 10 per centum of the tax found to be due. In case any person required by this title to file a return knowingly files a false or fraudulent return, he shall become liable in his own person and estate to the said District in an amount equal to 50 per centum of the tax found to be due. Such amounts shall be collected in the same manner as is herein provided for the collection of the taxes levied under this title.

"'SEC. 7. Any person required by this title to pay a tax or required by law or regulation made under authority thereof to make a return or keep any records or supply any information for the purposes of computation, assessment, or collection of any tax imposed by this title, who willfully fails to pay such tax, make any such return, or supply any such information at the time or times required by law or regulation shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 8. When the assessor is satisfied that the tax liability imposed by this title has been fully discharged or provided for, he may, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioners, issue his certificate, releasing any or all property from the lien herein imposed.

"'SEC. 9. No person holding, within the District, tangible or intangible assets of any resident or nonresident decedent, of the value of $300 or more, shall deliver or transfer the same or any part thereof to any person other than an executor, administrator, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, unless notice of the date and place of such intended transfer be served upon the assessor of the District of Columbia at least ten days prior to such delivery or transfer, nor shall any person holding, within the District of Columbia, any assets of a resident or nonresident decedent, of the value of $300 or more, deliver or transfer the same or any part thereof to any person other than an executor, administrator, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by said District Court without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any tax which may be assessed on account of the transfer of such assets under the provisions of articles I and II without an order from the assessor of the District of Columbia authorizing such transfer. It shall be lawful for the assessor of the District, personally, or by his representatives, to examine said assets at any time before such delivery or transfer. Failure to serve such notice or to allow such examination or to retain as herein required a sufficient portion or amount to pay the taxes imposed by this title shall render such person liable to the payment of such taxes. The assessor of the District may issue a certificate authorizing the transfer of any such assets whenever it appears to the satisfaction of said assessor that no tax is due thereon: Provided, however, That any corporation, foreign or domestic to the District having outstanding stock or other securities registered in the sole name of a decedent whose estate or any part thereof is taxable under this title, may transfer the same, without notice to the assessor and without liability for any tax imposed thereon under this title, upon the order of an administrator, executor, or collector of the estate of such decedent appointed by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or by a trustee appointed under a will filed with the register of wills of the District, or appointed by said court, or his successor approved by said court: Provided further, That the lessor of a safe-deposit box standing in the joint names of a decedent and a survivor or survivors may deliver the entire contents of such safe-deposit box to the survivor or survivors, after examination of such contents by the assessor or his representative, without any liability on the part of the said lessor for the payment of such tax.

"'SEC. 10. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title or relative to any person whose estate is subject to the provisions of this title.

"'SEC. 11. If any return required by this title is not filed with the assessor when due, the assessor shall have the right to determine and assess the tax or taxes from such information as he may possess or obtain.

"'SEC. 12. The assessor is authorized to enter into an agreement with any person liable for a tax on a transfer under article I of this title, in which remainders or expectant estates are of such nature or so disposed and circumstanced that the value of the interest is not ascertainable under the provisions of this title, and to compound and settle such tax upon such terms as the assessor may deem equitable and expedient.

"'SEC. 13. In the interpretation of this title unless the context indicates a different meaning the term "tax" means the tax or taxes mentioned in this title.

"'(a) The term "District" means the District of Columbia.

"'(b) The term "Commissioners" means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

"'(c) The term "assessor" means the assessor of the District of Columbia or his duly authorized representative or representatives.

"'(d) The term "collector of taxes" means the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, or his duly authorized representative or representatives.

"'(e) The term "Metropolitan Police Department" means the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia.

"'(f) The term "include" when used in a definition contained in this title, shall not be deemed to exclude other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined.

"'(g) The term "resident" means domiciled and the term "residence" means domicile.

"'SEC. 14. The provisions of this title shall become effective at 12:01 antemeridian, the day immediately following its approval.'

"TITLE VI—ADVANCEMENT OF MONEY BY TREASURY

the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia.

"TITLE VII—EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAX PROVISIONS

"The laws authorizing the imposition by the District of Columbia of intangible personal property taxes and business privilege taxes are hereby extended from and after June 30, 1939, for the following purposes in connection with the taxes accrued or due under such laws prior to July 1, 1939—

"(1) For the imposition of assessments and penalties, civil and criminal, for the violation of or failure to comply with such laws and the regulations issued thereunder;

"(2) For requiring the making, filing, and submission of returns and reports required by such laws;

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Title I of the House bill provided for an income tax with the following principal features: (a) 1938 to be the first taxable year, with returns to be filed on October 15, following the end of the taxable year, and payment of the tax in two installments, namely, on October 15 following the end of the taxable year and on the following April 15; (b) the tax to be imposed on all residents of the District of Columbia, regardless of source of income, and on nonresident individuals and corporations on income from sources within the District, with provisions for tax paid in other jurisdictions to avoid double taxation; (c) the rate of taxation on individuals to be 2 percent on the first $1,000 of taxable income, 3 percent on the next $2,000, 4 percent on the next $2,000, 5 percent on the next $2,000, 6 percent on the next $2,000, and 7 percent on all taxable income in excess of $9,000, and the rate on corporations to be 5 percent of their taxable income; and (d) individuals to be allowed an exemption of $2,000 on earned income and $500 on unearned income, regardless of the marital status of the taxpayer. The Senate amendment contained no provision for an income tax. The conference agreement provides for an income tax with the following principal features: (a) 1939 is the first taxable year, with returns to be filed and the entire tax to be paid on March 15 following the close of the taxable year; (b) the tax is imposed on persons domiciled in the District on the last day of the taxable year, regardless of the source of income, and upon corporations on income from sources within the District, no tax is imposed on individuals domiciled without the District on income from sources within the District, and no provision is made for credit allowance to persons domiciled in the District for tax paid to other jurisdictions on income from sources therein; (c) the rate of taxation on individuals is 1 percent on the first $5,000 of taxable income, 1½ percent on the next $5,000, 2 percent on the next $5,000, 2½ percent on the next $5,000, and 3 percent on all taxable income in excess of $20,000, and the rate on corporations is 5 percent of their taxable income; (d) there is allowed the same personal exemptions and credit for dependents as is provided in the Federal income-tax law.

The House bill provided that after June 30, 1939, the contribution by the United States toward expenses of the District shall in no event be more than $5,000,000 for any one fiscal year. The Senate amendment provided for a formula based upon the land area in the District owned by the United States, the application of which under present conditions would result in the payment by the United States to the District of approximately $8,000,000, being an amount equal to approximately 20 percent of the general expenses of the District. The conference agreement provides that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for each fiscal year thereafter, there is authorized to be appropriated for the payment by the United States toward defraying the expenses of the District the sum of $6,000,000.

Title III of the House bill provided for a parking-lot tax imposed on the operators of all parking lots in the District amounting to 2 percent of the gross receipts derived therefrom. No comparable provision is found in the Senate amendment or in the conference report. Such tax would produce only a small amount of revenue, but result in an increased burden to users of parking lots.

Title IV of the House bill provided for the amendment and repeal of certain revenue acts relating to the District, for the most part administrative. The Senate amendment in title VI provided for the amendment and repeal of the same acts, except in the following respects: The House bill provided for the repeal of the law imposing an intangible personal property tax. The Senate amendment had no comparable provision. The House bill provided for collection of taxes by the District in jurisdictions without the District. The Senate amendment had no comparable provision. The Senate amendment provided that no tangible personal property tax shall be imposed on personal property stored in transit in the District. The House bill had no comparable provision. The conference agreement provides for the repeal of the law imposing a tax on intangible personal property, and specifically provides that the tax on real estate and tangible personal property for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be 1.75 percent of the assessed value of such property. The conference agreement in title VII provides, however, that the provisions with respect to assessments, collections, penalties, and violations contained in the intangible personal property tax law and the business privilege tax law shall continue to be in effect in connection with taxes accrued and due thereunder prior to July 1, 1939. In other matters relating to the repeal and amendment of prior acts the conference agreement conforms to the Senate amendment.

Title V of the House bill provided for the amendment of title V of the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, and provided for a new tax, namely, a gift tax. The Senate amendment provided for the amendment to the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1937, as amended, but did not provide for the gift tax. The conference agreement adopts such provisions of the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment provided that there shall be credited to the District that proportion of the fines and fees collected by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia and by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia as the amount paid by the District toward the salaries and expenses of such court bears to the total amount of such salaries and expenses. The conference agreement adopts such provision.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE ACT—1939

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I shall make only a brief explanation in view of the fact that an appropriation bill has already passed both Houses, and I presume has been signed by the President, appropriating for this fiscal year $6,000,000 as the Federal contribution to the support of the District of Columbia.

Your conferees on the part of the House felt that it was futile to longer argue about the authorization of that appropriation for this fiscal year. Therefore, we agreed, all except myself, to the $6,000,000 authorization. Frankly I think that the House should agree to the $6,000,000 authorization. It is no longer an attempt to appropriate but is purely an authorization. It provides that the authorization shall be $6,000,000 for this fiscal year, and each fiscal year, but I assure the House that the House will have an opportunity at the next session of Congress to reassert its view as to what the Federal contribution shall be, so that despite the fact that it is a continuing authorization I trust the House will have no fear that that will become the permanent situation until they have had an opportunity to again express themselves.

The other instruction by the House to its managers that was that no joint committee should be set up for the study of the taxation problem in the District of Columbia. The House managers were successful, and the Senate receded from that amendment. With those two exceptions the bill stands exactly as it was, and I think should be passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

KINGS CANYON WILDERNESS NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 223, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 223

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 3794, a bill to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order the Gearhart bill, H. R. 3794, creating the Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park in California. It is not a unanimous report from the committee, but a great majority of the members after many hearings agreed to report the bill. The bill has been amended in many ways by the committee, and though there still is some opposition, after the Rules Committee had studied the bill and listened carefully to the proponents, the rule was granted. It provides for 2 hours of general debate, at the conclusion of which the bill shall be taken up under the 5-minute rule. If there are any objections to any of the provisions, the Members will not be denied the privilege of offering amendments to cure any possible defects they believe to be in the bill. I am of opinion that it is legislation in the right direction. The bill when passed will create a national park out of a wilderness in California. The park will then contain approximately 454,000 acres of the mountain section of California. It will take in about 5,763 acres of the redwood mountain Sequoia, which is privately owned, but which contains some of the finest trees in that section of California.

As the older Members know, I have always been desirous of preserving these wonderful trees and forests for those who come after us. I remember what some of the lumbermen have done in Wisconsin and what they are doing in Washington, Oregon, and even in California, and I advocate and shall continue to advocate that the Government preserve all those wonderful trees which can still be saved to posterity.

The cost will be nominal. I understand that these 5,763 acres, privately owned, can be purchased at a very low price at this time. The legislation should not be delayed. It has been recommended and approved by the Forestry Bureau of both the Interior Department and the Department of Agriculture. I feel there should be, and in fact that there could be, no opposition on the part of anyone who is familiar with the situation. I fully appreciate that the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT], who has been very much interested in this matter, has had a bill pending in the House which differs from the Gearhart bill, but I hope that in the interest of the country the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT] who has worked hard to secure the legislation, will join hands with the other gentlemen from California and nearby States, and, in fact, with all of us, and help pass the bill, so that we can preserve and safeguard these 5,763 acres for a national park.

That is all I wish to say at this time. I reserve the remainder of my time. I have not asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] whether he wants any time, although I presume he does. I apologize for not asking him before I took the floor. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I have not had any applications for time to discuss this rule. Therefore, in the interest of expedition, I will reserve the balance of my time.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

KINGS CANYON WILDERNESS NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3794, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 22 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, which has held exhaustive hearings on this bill, I appreciate the opportunity of presenting the bill, with your committee's recommendations.

The purpose of the bill is to create a new national park on the headwaters of the Kings River in the Sierra Nevada Range of California, to be known as the Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park. The proposed park area is just north of Sequoia National Park. It comprises an area of 454,000 acres, of which nearly 99 percent, or all but 5,763 acres, is already owned by the Federal Government. The major portion of these public lands is in the Sequoia and Sierra National Forests, administered by the United States Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture. Both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior recommend the establishment of this area as a national park and the bill has been introduced by the gentleman from California, Representative GEARHART, in whose district the major portion of the proposed park is situated.

The findings of your committee indicate that the Kings River wilderness is one of the most outstandingly scenic regions in the United States. All but a small portion of the area lies over 5,000 feet above sea level and many of its mountain peaks rise above 14,000 feet in elevation. It is deeply cut by a labyrinth of canyons, thousands of feet in depth, and with sheer, granite walls.

The famous American naturalist, John Muir, first brought the region to public attention in an article he published in Century magazine in 1891, in which he said:

> I fancy the time is not distant when this wonderful region will be opened to the world. * * * Some of the sequoia groves were last year included in the national reservations of Sequoia and General Grant Parks. But all of this wonderful Kings River region, together with the Kaweah and Tule sequoias, should be comprehended in one grand national park. This region contains no mines of consequence, it is too high and too rocky for agriculture, and even the lumber industry need suffer no unreasonable restriction. Let our lawgivers then make haste before it is too late to set apart this surpassingly glorious region for the recreation and well-being of humanity.

Chief Forester Graves, in speaking before the Committee on the Public Lands during the Sixty-sixth Congress, said:

> There is no question in my mind that the major scenic features of this area should be included in the national park and should be consecrated to development for the recreation and enjoyment of the people. All other possible uses there should be wholly subordinated to that end, and in the long run largely excluded.

Chief Forester Greeley, in speaking to the committee during the Sixty-eighth Congress, said:

> When you consider all that is involved in this tract, the fact that the entire country is above 5,000 feet in elevation, with the exception possibly of a few canyon bottoms, that it contains three of the outstanding canyons of the West—Tehipite, on the one fork of the Kings River, the south fork of the Kings River, and the Kern River Canyon—combined with the wonderful region of lakes and alpine forests; the combination has fixed this area in my mind for a good many years as one of the places which should be established and administered as a national park. If there is any area in the West that has outstanding national significance and exceptional beauty that justifies an additional national park, in my judgment it is this area and the entire area.

Chief Forester Silcox, in speaking before the committee during the hearing just held, said:

> I think this country is large enough to include special areas of high scenic value in parks. I think this is one of those areas. * * *
> Where an area like this area is outstanding scenically and large enough to constitute a complete administration unit, and the use is primarily recreational—I mean where timber is purely incidental—and there is practically no grazing, I personally, you see, would rather prefer to see the Park Service manage it. I would rather spend time, from the Forest Service standpoint, on timber areas, with recreation, grazing, and all other uses incidental to the timber use.

Numerous other individuals and representatives of organizations have publicly affirmed their belief that the Kings Canyon Wilderness is one of the superb regions of the North American Continent; a region whose scenic and inspirational qualities are so outstanding that it should be set apart as a national park, to be preserved unimpaired for all time, by act of Congress, for the benefit and enjoyment of the people.

With this point of view, your committee has agreed.

Such action would have been taken by Congress long ago had it not been that previous bills carried the park boundaries too far down the Kings River, thereby including possible water-storage sites in which the farmers dependent on irrigation were interested. Those sites have been carefully excluded in drawing the boundaries for the present bill. Moreover, recent studies have indicated that all of the water of Kings River can be impounded for irrigation most economically many miles down the river from the proposed park area, and that the best and most economical sites for hydroelectric power development are on the north fork of the river, which is also outside of the proposed park. These factors have influenced your committee in its consideration of the bill.

The State of California is now building a State highway into the canyon of the south fork of Kings River. This is a magnificent highway which will open the wilderness to countless thousands of visitors. The highway is being built solely for recreational purposes. It will be completed this year. When Kings Canyon is opened to the public, accommodations for visitors must be provided. That is the type of work for which the National Park Service has been established by Congress. The public use for which the area will soon be opened is the type of land use for which Congress customarily establishes national parks. The State highway has forced the issue and Congress should now decide what the permanent status of the area shall be.

Since the committee has recommended that the bill be passed with certain amendments, I shall explain each section of the bill and the committee's reasons for the amendments suggested.

The bill, as introduced, was to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park and to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park.

Because it has not been considered desirable to name national parks after individuals, since they are the property of all the people, the committee has recommended striking the name John Muir from the bill throughout and changing the name to Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park. Kings Canyon is descriptive of the area and is by common usage the accepted name of the area. Since one of the purposes of establishing this park is to preserve Kings Canyon as an unspoiled primeval wilderness, designating it as a Wilderness National Park will help to establish a fitting standard for administration.

Section 1 of the bill is, for the most part, a description of the area to be established as the national park. The few minor amendments within the land-description portions of the section are refinements in description only and do not modify the boundaries as originally set forth in the bill.

The amendment on page 8, lines 20 to 22, inclusive, is a restatement of the clause protecting valid existing rights, which clause is customarily inserted in park bills. The suggested amendments provides explicit terminology more acceptable to a majority of the committee.

The provision at the end of section 1 of the bill as originally introduced provided for the continuation of existing grazing permits within the proposed park area during the remainder of the lives of the present permittees. Twelve permittees now hold permits from the Forest Service for the average annual grazing of 985 cattle and horses and 300 sheep. This provision would result in the eventual elimination of all domestic livestock grazing within the park, but without causing undue hardship to the present permittees. The suggested amendment of this provision, a portion of which is on page 8 at the end of line 22 and the remainder of which is on page 9, lines 2 and 3, provides a restatement of the provision in terminology more acceptable to a majority of the committee and would accomplish the original intent of this provision of the bill.

Section 2 provides for the abolition of General Grant National Park, which is a small park of 2,548 acres, and its transfer, with certain contiguous lands, to the proposed Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park, to be known as the General Grant Grove section. The committee recommends, page 9, lines 8 and 9, elimination from the proposed park of 1 square mile of the land contiguous to General Grant National Park because that square mile of land is believed to be of more value for national-forest purposes than for the national park.

The General Grant Grove section of the proposed park is a separate unit situated about 13 miles west of the main portion of the proposed park. Between the present General Grant National Park and Sequoia National Park, there is the famous Redwood mountain, upon which is found the finest large grove of big trees, or Sequoias, remaining in private ownership. This forest comprises about 10,000 acres, of which about 4,300 acres are privately owned. The owners do not wish to cut down these giant Sequoias but they will be forced to by economic circumstances unless the area can be acquired by the public. The commercial value of these trees is not significant because they do not make good lumber. On the other hand, the Redwood Mountain Grove is one of great inspirational and recreational value. Section 2 of the bill provides that this area may be added to the General Grant Grove section of the Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park by proclamation of the President.

With the addition of Redwood Mountain to the General Grant Grove section, this separate unit of the proposed park would comprise almost 14,000 acres of superlative Sequoia groves along, and through portions of which, the entrance highways into the Kings Canyon Wilderness would pass. The administrative facilities now available in General Grant National Park would serve as administrative headquarters for the new park.

Because the addition of Redwood Mountain would cut across national forest lands, the bill provides that stock and vehicles shall be permitted to pass across this area of the proposed park, to and from national forest lands, subject to general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The committee recommends a clarifying amendment to this section of the bill, page 10, line 22, to provide that no charge shall be made for stock and vehicles crossing to and from national forest lands on either side of this portion of the proposed park.

Section 3 of the bill as originally introduced provided that no roads should be built in the proposed park, except within a limited portion of the canyon of the South Fork of Kings River. Section 4 of the bill as originally introduced provided that all structures for public accommodation within the park, except upon lands formerly within the General Grant National Park, should be erected with Federal funds. The committee has stricken all of sections 3 and 4 from the bill in order that there may be no arbitrary restrictions upon road building or the location or nature of housing facilities within the proposed park.

Section 5 of the bill as originally introduced provided that the Tehipite Valley and Cedar Grove reclamation withdrawals, on the western boundary of the proposed park, should be administered for recreational purposes by the National Park Service. The purpose of this provision was to prohibit the conflict of competing administrative agencies in the two main canyons of the Kings River, so that recreational developments in the reclamation withdrawals might be supplemental to those in the proposed park.

Section 5 also provided that the President might add these withdrawn areas to the proposed park if plans for reservoir construction in them were abandoned and the fact of abandonment was certified, after public hearing, by the Secretary of the Interior upon the advice of the Commissioner of Reclamation.

Your committee questioned the advisability of authorizing the inclusion of these two reclamation withdrawals within the park before it is known whether or not they are to be utilized to produce hydroelectric power and to increase irrigation resources for the benefit of the Kings River water users.

The committee, therefore, recommended striking from the bill, after the words "the lands withdrawn," on page 12, line 11, all of the remainder of the section, and substituting in lieu thereof the following amendment:

> But nothing herein shall prevent the construction upon said lands of such works as may be recommended by the Chief of Army Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation for the control of floods or for the use or conservation of water for irrigation or hydroelectric power in the areas adjacent or contiguous to said lands.

The effect of this amendment is to open the entire Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park to dams, conduits, tunnels, powerhouses, transmission lines, and fluctuating reservoirs.

I personally do not approve of this amendment.

The amendment is inconsistent with the main purpose of the bill, which is to preserve the Kings Canyon Wilderness in unspoiled condition.

The amendment, moreover, conflicts with the advice of both the Commissioner of the United States Bureau of Reclamation and the Chief of Army Engineers.

Commissioner John C. Page, of the Bureau of Reclamation, addressed a letter to the chairman of the committee, in which he said:

> The Bureau of Reclamation has studied a water conservation project on the Kings River, to serve the adjacent lands on the valley floor below Kings Canyon. The study has covered irrigation storage and hydroelectric development, and our engineers have been in close contact with the Army engineers studying flood control for the Kings River.
> The study by the Bureau of Reclamation indicates the need of a major storage dam and reservoir at Pine Flat, in the foothills, for irrigation, flood-control, and hydroelectric power, with an additional power dam or dams which might most advantageously be located on the North Fork of the Kings River. The Cedar Grove and Tehipite Dome sites, though less feasible than the North Fork locations, are possible alternatives for additional power development.
> Establishment of the proposed national park will not in any way interfere with plans of the Bureau of Reclamation for full use and control of the waters of the Kings River for irrigation, or for hydroelectric development, since all reservoir sites found feasible and necessary are located outside the park boundaries.

Maj. Gen. J. L. Schley, Chief of Army Engineers, addressed a letter to the chairman of the committee, in which he said:

> Under authority of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, the Chief of Engineers is making a survey of the Sacramento and San Joaquin River Basins, which includes the Kings River where a serious flood problem exists * * *. From the information available to the Department, it appears that any works which may be recommended for construction as the result of this investigation will be outside of the proposed John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, so that the report of this Department could have no bearing upon H. R. 3794.

Finally this amendment does not accomplish another important purpose of section 5 of the original bill, which was to coordinate recreational use of the reclamation withdrawals with the administration and use of the proposed park. The reclamation withdrawals are larger than would be required for reservoirs and include the most important camp sites available for the proposed park. It is naturally desirable that the National Park Service administer these camp sites and other recreational developments in these withdrawals if there is to be consistent development for public benefit, but this amendment excludes that possibility.

Section 6 of the bill as originally introduced provides that any motor-vehicle license issued for Sequoia National Park shall be applicable to the new park also, and vice versa.

Since the committee struck from the bill all of sections 3 and 4, pertaining to the preservation of the wilderness character of the proposed park, a supplemental amendment, in form more acceptable to the committee, has been added to the original section 6 which would grant the Secretary of the Interior more specific authority in the management and protection of the proposed park.

I commend this bill to establish the Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park for your earnest consideration. I urge that the Congress take favorable action to establish this outstanding area as a national park to be forever preserved and enjoyed.

I shall be glad to supply additional information, to the best of my ability, if you desire it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposing this measure on the ground that it is not necessary to give the area under consideration, as set forth in the bill, the status of a national park. The area is a wilderness area, under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service. It is being adequately and well administered, and its present status makes possible the development of the natural resources of the area at the time they are needed for future consumption.

The area under consideration includes the headwaters of the Kings River. It includes the south and middle forks of the Kings River, and is the area which supplies water to approximately 1,300,000 acres of farm land in the San Joaquin Valley. The water is used and developed by some 20 water users' associations. The major association, or the master association, is known as the Kings River Water Users Association. The farmers of the locality which constitute these various water and ditch companies over a period of years have used the water resources of the area proposed to be covered in this national-park bill and have developed a high class of agriculture in the San Joaquin Valley wholly dependent upon this supply of water.

The water companies, the Kings River Water Users Association, hold this water by use and by appropriation to the amount that is annually being placed upon the land. The unregulated annual flow of the river is sufficient for a portion of the year to irrigate the 1,000,000 acres that are now under development.

This bill has been before the people of California in various forms for a number of years. For some 20 years an effort has been made on the part of the National Park Service to place this area in a national park. The Legislature of California this year passed resolutions opposing this bill by a large vote.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Not at this time.

Mr. GEARHART. Simply for the purpose of correction.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. The legislature passed a memorial before this bill was ever introduced. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is correct. This bill was introduced after the legislature passed the resolution, but efforts were made since this bill was introduced to have the legislature reverse its action, and members of the legislature have written to me, and I have the letters here, saying that they refused to reconsider their action, and that they were still opposed to this bill.

The State Chamber of Commerce of California is opposed to the measure. The Farm Bureau organizations of California have opposed the measure. The cattle raisers' associations have opposed the measure. Various other agricultural organizations have opposed it, due to the fact that the future life of the farm area depends upon the development of additional water or providing storage for irrigation, and for hydroelectric purposes. There are 16,000 pumping wells in the area that is irrigated from the Kings River watershed proposed to be included in this park. As outlined on the map on the left of the board, the area in red is the proposed national park. The lands in color, some 30 miles west of the proposed park area, are the lands that are irrigated, 1,300,000 or more acres. There are 35,000 farm units in this area. There are 75,000 farmers and 75,000 additional inhabitants in the cities and small towns in the locality.

The proposed bill sets out an area some 6 or 8 miles west of the Kings River area, which includes large Sequoia trees. This is a separate unit, not in the Kings River Canyon, and is adjacent to General Grant National Park.

Mr. SIROVICH. How many acres?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. About six or seven thousand acres are included in the large-tree area. It has no connection, however, with the Kings Canyon territory.

Along in the early part of the year the Secretary of the Interior made a trip to California and spoke in behalf of this proposed bill.

When the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the Public Lands Committee of the House he made this statement:

Secretary ICKES. The members of this committee, before whom all proposed legislation affecting the national parks must be reviewed, are aware of the fact that the bill to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park in California does not deal with a new project. The subject has been before the Congress from time to time since Senator Miller, of California, introduced the first bill to establish a national park embracing the scenic Kings River Basin in 1881.

All such bills have failed because they were piecemeal attempts to solve a comprehensive problem. The people who are dependent upon the resources of the Kings River Basin have not been willing to permit the basin to be dismembered and to have one resource developed at the expense of another. With good justification they have insisted upon a comprehensive conservation and development program embracing the best use of all the resources of the basin.

As a result of careful study—and this problem has now been studied for more than 50 years—Representative GEARHART has presented a program composed of three related bills.

The first bill provides for the construction of lateral canals for the Central Valley project in order to extend the benefits of irrigation to additional sections of interior California. This bill deals with the lower portion of the Kings River Basin.

The second bill authorizes the Bureau of Reclamation to construct the Pine Flat irrigation and flood-control reservoir, together with power dams on the Kings River which are found feasible in connection with the Pine Flat project. This bill deals with the foothills portion of the basin.

The third of Mr. GEARHART'S bills is for the establishment of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, a proposal of both local and national importance. This bill deals with the upper portion of the Kings River Basin.

The Pine Flat irrigation project and the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park proposal are closely linked, because they both relate to the use of the same general land area; to the use of public lands under the control of Congress and the President. It is extremely important that these projects be properly coordinated. Part of the lands jointly affected by the irrigation project and the national park proposal are essential for economic development. Part of them are primarily important for recreation, which in areas of high scenic value calls for preservation and protection.

If the Federal Government should establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, without at the same time mapping out a policy for irrigation and power development for this region, there would be danger that the national park might have boundaries conflicting with a sound economic policy.

If, on the other hand, the Government should go ahead with irrigation and power dam construction before establishing a national park, there would be danger that this commercial development would damage an area primarily important as a scenic and recreation asset.

By mapping out both of these important projects together, it is possible to harmonize them without injury to either. If either of these projects were put forward without regard to the other, there would be uneasiness and apprehension among the friends of the other measure, and where there is apprehension there is generally needless antagonism, to the detriment of the public.

It has been easier to make a joint approach to these questions of economic and recreational use because both the Bureau of Reclamation and the National Park Service are in the Department of the Interior. Many months ago I asked the heads of these two bureaus to thresh out every issue on which there might be a conflict of interest, and to adjust them so that all legitimate rights might be recognized in their plans—the right of the people of the San Joaquin Valley to the use of the waters of the Kings River, and the right of the people of California as well as of the Nation to the recreational value of the Kings Canyon wilderness.

The Secretary also made this statement:

I am happy to state that these bureaus have been assisted in this effort by the attitude of the people of the San Joaquin Valley, by those who are most closely connected with irrigation, such as the Kings River Water Association, as well as by many chambers of commerce and business interests that are also concerned with providing for the visiting public. In addition, both State and National conservation organizations have come to the support of this comprehensive program, which is the culmination of many years of separate efforts, now united.

At the time that the three bills were introduced it was presumed that a solution of the problem had been found, but after the bills were before the committees, the representatives of the Kings River Water Users Association appeared in Washington and determined that the bills were entirely inadequate, that they did not solve their problem, that the boundaries to the proposed park were not satisfactory, and that the bills did not protect the interests of the vast area of agricultural lands.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Not at this time.

The gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] appeared before the Public Lands Committee for 3 days supporting this park bill. On March 29 he made this statement upon his own request before the committee:

Gentlemen and Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out during the course of my discussion on this bill time and time again, I consider the interests of the irrigationists to be far more important than any other interests we might have under consideration. The two bills that I have introduced, one for the creation of this park, and the other for the creation of the Pine Flat project, were bills which I thought, as did the people who induced me to introduce them, created a pattern for the water control of this drainage area. A few moments ago I was advised by the chairman and chief engineer of the Kings River Water Association, an organization which includes in its membership a large proportion, perhaps as many as 90 percent, of the users of water in that drainage area, that neither bill is satisfactory to that organization. In view of this startling information and in view of the fact it is the irrigationists alone whom I desire to serve, I think those gentlemen should be heard by this committee at this point. And I sincerely trust that you will act on anything that they have or will suggest to you, if they are permitted to testify. I think that the suggestion which was made by Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT or Mr. ELLIOTT should be followed, that a subcommittee be appointed to go to California and find out what the situation is. That report will be the one which I will abide in, too.

The representatives of the Kings River Water Users Association followed in testifying before the committee and requested that no action be taken on this measure until reports that were in course of preparation by the War Department and by the Reclamation Bureau were made public. Up to the present time such reports have not been made public, and it has not been possible for the Kings River Water Users Association, the representatives of 1,300,000 acres of cultivated land, to have available the information they desire.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Did the committee go out to California to view this area?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Upon the request being made the chairman of the committee stated that it would be impossible for a subcommittee to go to California to go into this question.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. DEROUEN. Was it not a question of precedent that after hearings are held no committee is sent to reinvestigate?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I hope this will not be taken out of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DEROUEN. I will see that it is not taken out of the gentleman's time; I will give him some time. It has not been done during the 14 years I have been in Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that the question was submitted to the committee to determine whether or not a subcommittee should go to California to investigate this? And is it not a further fact that the committee voted it down?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is very true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then the chairman of the committee was not to blame for that?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. Is is not a fact that the chairman of the Kings River Water Association, the chief engineer of the Kings River Water Association, the president of the California South San Joaquin Valley Flood Control Association, and the chief engineer of that organization, were in Washington a week ago and that every one of them announced publicly that the irrigationists that they have represented had no interest in this park area one way or the other and were not offering any opposition to its creation at all?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I know no such statement. To the contrary, the representatives of the Kings River Water Association, Mr. Kaupke and others, called at my office and advised me that they were still opposing this park bill and would until such time as the boundaries could be properly determined or until there was available to them the reports of the War Department and the Reclamation Bureau. They had not changed their position, and stated I could quote them as so stating in a telegram they sent me after they returned to California from the hearing, and that they still maintained the same position: That they desired to have a flood control or War Department project considered, and that this park bill and the pine flat reclamation bills were detrimental to their interests, and that they could not proceed under them as they would jeopardize the future welfare of the agricultural land area.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. May I advise the gentleman that both of these men have just issued statements to the press, which I will present and read into the RECORD, stating that they have no interest in this park one way or the other, that it has no bearing whatsoever upon the irrigation problems, in which they have their primary interest.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. May I call the gentleman's attention also to the fact that these same gentlemen have advised me with reference to that statement of the press that it was given without their authority and there is no foundation in fact for such statement.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is there any Federal power project tied up with this proposal?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The future of the development of the agricultural acreage largely depends upon the development of cheap power. There are 16,000 pumping wells out there. The farmers of that locality pay from a million to two million dollars a year in power bills. The proposed park area includes 80 percent of the potential power that can be developed, according to the statement of the expert connected with the Federal Power Commission who appeared before the Public Lands Committee. With the creation of the park it will preclude development of such power for the use of farmers. When I say "power," I do not mean power in the ordinary sense of the word, but power for the farming interests. That is one of the reasons the farmers have been opposing this measure. They do not want any action taken until the War Department and the Reclamation Department act in the matter. When Mr. GEARHART came before the committee he agreed that this matter should be delayed until full information might be had.

Mr. Chairman, out of fairness to the people of this locality and out of fairness to a group of farmers and people who have developed a great agricultural area out there, who have developed water resources through their own efforts and with their own money, no action should be taken on this bill until a full study can be made of the problem. The Legislature of California has requested that a park bill be not enacted into law. The members of the Legislature of California were importuned to change their action after hearings were held on this bill before the House committee. They refused to rescind their action. At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer a motion to recommit the measure.

Mr. DEROUEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DEROUEN. Is it not a fact that the California Legislature did not mention any bill at all and that that resolution was passed before Mr. GEARHART introduced this bill?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It passed a resolution requesting that no action be taken creating a park which would take away from the farmers their resources.

Mr. DEROUEN. That has never been brought before our committee.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That resolution was filed with the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Public Lands held hearings on this bill for 15 or 16 days, and those hearings covered about 425 closely typewritten pages. We went into the matter very carefully and, with your permission, I want to give as brief a picture as I can of the history of this matter. As the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] stated, it was sought to set this area aside as far back as 1881, that effort having been made by Senator Miller, of California. This was opposed by various groups as well as having been sponsored by other groups. This land today is Government-owned land. Its supervision is within the control of the Forest Service. It is now sought to set it aside as a park area in order to preserve it in its natural state of wilderness.

Mr. Chairman, as one who has lived for 30 or more years in the western country and close to various wooded areas, where we have fine standing timber, that we have seen destroyed within a short period of time by fire. We get better fire protection through the National Park Service than we do through the Forest Service, and this is no reflection upon the Forest Service, because that is very good, also. More people visit in the park areas and when a fire breaks out there is greater opportunity for the people who are around to stamp out the fire before it gains such momentum that no human being can put it out. That is one of the reasons why it is sought to set this area aside and put it under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service. This will permit people to go in there and enjoy unprecedented sights. This area almost approaches, but not quite, the great Yellowstone National Park in my own State. I would not concede, of course, that any park reaches that point of beauty and perfection.

I am engaged in the farming business as well as other sorts of business and I have always had in mind the protection of people who own farms and I have always had in mind the protection of water users. You will recall that the distinguished gentleman from California pointed out on this map that there were something like 35,000 farmers involved in this matter. I want to refer to an amendment that I had something to do with placing in this bill, which protects every farmer and every water user in connection with his use of the water which he is entitled to use. This amendment provides:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or abridge any right acquired by any citizen of the United States in the above-described area.

When any person has acquired any rights, whether they are inchoate or complete, that right is protected under the provisions of this bill and nobody can take it away from them.

I also want to call attention to the fact that there is no one in the United States, no class of people in the United States, other than the farmers, who has greater friends in the Department of the Interior than Secretary Ickes and Commissioner Page. I call attention to the language Page used in his letter of June 13, addressed to the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee. In that letter he made the following statement:

> The establishment of the proposed national park will not in any way interfere with plans of the Bureau of Reclamation for full use and control of the water of the Kings River for irrigation or for hydroelectrical development, since all reservoir sites found feasible and necessary are located outside of the park boundaries.

The establishment of this park has nothing to do with the development of outside area. Confirmation of that statement is found on page 330 of the hearings. Major General Schley, who has investigated this matter, used the following language in a letter to the chairman of the committee:

> From the information available to the Department, it appears that any works which may be recommended for construction as the result of his investigation will be outside of the proposed John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, so that the report of this Department could have no bearing upon H. R. 3794.

And that is the bill that is before this House.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. For a brief question.

Mr. COCHRAN. I take it, then, in view of what the gentleman has said, that he is opposed to the language on page 13 of the bill, inserted by the committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is not my amendment. I may say to the gentleman that if he moves to strike it out, I will support his amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. When the time arrives I intend to move to strike out that language on page 13 beginning in line 8 and ending on line 14.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman will find a lot of support for that motion.

As late as July 18 General Schley confirmed by conversation over the telephone with the chairman of our committee the very language he used in the letter I have just read.

I also wish to call your attention to pages 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the hearings, which show the number of organizations throughout the State of California and other places that are supporting this bill. You will never find unanimity of opinion of local people with reference to these matters. You will find them in Montana objecting to this and Wyoming objecting to that. The people of the United States of America have some interest in this matter as well as the people of California. As long as the bill protects the people of California in the manner in which it does in this case, it seems to me the bill should have the support of the Members of the House.

I also call your attention to the economic features of this area. Being a livestock man, I inquired whether or not the setting aside of this area for park purposes would interfere with the permittees' use of these lands for grazing sheep and cattle. You will find on page 9 that there are only 985 cattle grazing in that tremendous area, and 300 sheep. The permittees have the right to graze that number of cattle and that number of sheep, and we have protected them in the bill. On page 8 you will find this language:

> That no grazing permits heretofore issued and in effect on January 15, 1939, affecting the area described in this section, for whose renewal an application is made before the date of expiration, shall be affected by this act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I call your attention to the fact that every person who has the right to graze livestock, either cattle or sheep, is protected.

I also call your attention to the fact that from the standpoint of mining the hearings disclose this, and it is not challenged:

> The area is not important for mining. It has been prospected for decades without result.

From an economic standpoint, this area has no value whatever. It has value only for the sightseers of the country who go into these vast wilderness territories for the purpose of fishing and other sports.

You will find on pages 11, 12, 13, and 14 of the hearings that people throughout the United States in large organizations are back of this bill, and that there is widespread interest in the preservation of this primitive area for national-park purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will this measure interfere with the irrigation projects out there?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not the slightest, because the bill protects them if they have any interest in the waters that rise in that park. The very bill we have drawn protects them, in the amendment I just called to the attention of the House. There is not a single right of any individual, whether it is inchoate or whether it is complete, that will be interfered with by this bill.

Mr. GEYER of California. Where does the opposition come from?

Mr. O'CONNOR. From many sources. It is just like opposition to any other bill. You cannot put a bill through here but that there is opposition to it from some source.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Does the gentleman contend that the irrigationists could go up into the area proposed to be placed in this park and construct hydroelectric plants and reservoirs, when this land will have the status of a national park?

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no intention as far as the Army engineers are concerned, or on the part of Commissioner Page, to go into the park. Every contemplated dam that will be built is going to be built in the area outside of this park.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman is speaking of the War Department and of the Bureau of Reclamation. The gentleman is not taking into consideration future plans or what may prove to be necessary in the future.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will answer that question by calling attention to the letter written by Commissioner Page dated June 13, 1933, at the bottom of which he says that every dam contemplated will be without the area of this park. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, before the 2 hours of debate are completed you will hear many reasons advanced as to why this area should be made into a national park. I wonder if the Members of the House have stopped to consider who has taken care of this area up to the present time. The National Forest Service has preserved and cared for this great area ever since its inception, you might say; 35 years, to be exact. Up until that time it was cared for by Nature.

There are many things to be taken into consideration in connection with this bill. The gentleman from Montana has just finished speaking about grazing. At no time has there been anything else but an attempt to make this area into a national park without giving consideration to those who have had the use of the land and would continue to have the use of it. We are disregarding the people in the San Joaquin Valley. Eighty-eight percent of the people who go into the mountainous area in California are from the State of California, and most of those people are from the San Joaquin Valley. We are going to say to those persons who do not have the dollar bill to go into a national park, "You can no longer go into this area free of charge and hunt and fish and stay there and rest as long as you want to with your family."

Just as soon as this area is made into a national park, you are going to say to the American people of the United States, including the people of California, "We want a dollar, please, to go into this area." They are enjoying the use of that area at the present time, but we are proposing here to take the privilege of hunting away from the people; we are taking the privilege of fishing away from them to a certain extent. How many of you have gone into one of the national parks and wanted to fish, and have them tell you that this portion is set aside for Colonel So-and-So, or "Mr. Somebody from Washington is coming out here, and we don't want anybody to fish on this stream?"

All kinds of provisions are put into effect with respect to the national parks that we should be getting away from instead of talking about creating any more national parks, and if it had not been for the pressure of the Department of the Interior, I repeat the remarks I made here a few weeks ago, this bill would be dead at the present time. The Department of the Interior, with its group of workers in the State of California and on Capitol Hill, has continued to put out propaganda, and in my State they have literally rung doorbells to get resolutions sent here to the Congressmen and the Senators in behalf of this measure. Why? Not because the people of California want this area made into a national park. When the vote was taken in the assembly and in the senate in Sacramento in January, on the question that no more area be made into a national park, what was the vote? Fifty-five assemblymen voted against taking any more area into a national park and 22 voted for it, and out of the 40 senators 2 voted for placing further area into national parks.

If the people of California had wanted this, as has been represented to you people on Capitol Hill and to the Public Lands Committee, would not the State assembly and the State senate have joined hands and a majority of them voted that way? Of the 120 members only 24 voted to place this area in a national park.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield for a short question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, is the daddy of this park baby?

Mr. ELLIOTT. He is.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the power amendments put in by the committee are incorporated in the bill, do you not think we ought to change the title of this bill and name it "the Harold L. Ickes power project"? [Laughter.]

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. The statement was made awhile ago that there are 35,000 farmers living in this area. If you make this into a national park, will they continue to reside in that area?

Mr. ELLIOTT. They will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. There are not 35,000 people living in the park area.

Mr. ELLIOTT. There are not 35,000 people living in the Kings Canyon area, but adjacent to it on the agricultural lands south and westward of this area.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. There is not anyone living in the park area that you know of at the present time?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Just a few hunters and fishermen.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. It is entirely a wilderness, is it not?

Mr. TERRY. As it is now most of this land is in the national forest except 5,000 acres.

Mr. ELLIOTT. All except the proposed area that will be purchased later on.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. Are there any farmers or any persons engaged in making a livelihood in the park area now?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Only from a grazing standpoint.

Mr. PATRICK. There are no farms there?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. PATRICK. How would their status be affected by this legislation?

Mr. ELLIOTT. By the water and the power. The water could be held in abeyance and let out in the summer months and power could be generated and the electric energy used for pumping purposes in the San Joaquin Valley.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I was interested in what the gentleman said about the land that is to be acquired later. Has the gentleman any estimate of what that is going to cost the Government?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No; I have not. I may say that Senator MURRAY introduced a bill in the Senate this year calling for $460 per acre, but I understand that bill has been withdrawn at the present time.

Mr. DONDERO. How many acres does that involve?

Mr. ELLIOTT. A little over 5,000 acres.

Mr. DONDERO. That would amount to about $2,000,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes; and I may say further that this bill is the entering wedge and you people will be called upon later to provide funds of the Federal Government for the purchase of privately owned property.

As for the proposed redwood area, the plea has been put out to save the big trees, and gentlemen have had pamphlets mailed to them by the dozen. They are not in the Kings Canyon area. They are 30 miles distant, and these are in private ownership and will have to be purchased. This bill is the entering wedge to an agreement later in the next session, and then Mr. Ickes will go before the Committee on Appropriations again and turn on his heat and have the boys dig up the money to buy that area.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. There is no authorization in this bill for any appropriation.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I did not say that there was any authorization in it. I said that this is an entering wedge to include this area in this bill, and that next session there will be an effort made to purchase this area.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Does not the gentleman agree that the area proposed, this redwood area, should be at some time purchased and owned by the Government?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Why should it be brought into this bill when it is 30 miles distant? There is no occasion for it. It has no connection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I did not ask the gentleman that.

Mr. ELLIOTT. And I did not answer that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I want to know if the gentleman does not feel that that redwood area should be owned by the Government?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I think the redwood area should be owned by the Government, but I feel it is wrong to bring this area into this bill at this time as an entering wedge, and that is all it is put in there for, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Is it not a fact that all of the departments and those who have investigated this redwood area feel that it is of such importance that it should be preserved and perpetuated for future generations, and therefore owned by the Government?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I might answer the gentleman by saying that I personally have no objection if they could purchase this area within a reasonable amount at some other time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. But it has got to be purchased at some other time. This bill does not purchase it.

Mr. ELLIOTT. This bill opens up the gateway for the purchase, and it is a build-up for placing this in the bill, and it is said that if we do not have this bill and this area in here at this Congress these trees are to be destroyed. Why was this bill drafted and acreage on Redwood Mountain, owned by the University of California, excluded, and areas owned by the big lumber people excluded? The Sierra Club sent hundreds of thousands of folders all over the United States; they own 160 acres right in the heart of this 460,000-acre proposed Kings Canyon Park bill. Is it possible the Government by building trails and roads enhances their property? And when I asked Mr. Ickes about that, he said maybe we will get them to give it to us. I am tired of this "or something" business. I want to know what the facts are before they are enacted into law. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Was it not the understanding of the Kings River Water Association, representing some 75,000 farmers and 300,000 acres of land, that the reclamation project was to be provided to give them flood and power facilities and additional water for their lands and that the two projects were to be combined and that they were to be enacted into law with the support of the Interior Department?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is correct.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. In other words, this bill is a bill in connection with the $57,000,000 reclamation project, which is a bill pending before Congress at the present time?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is correct.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is it not a fact that the area around this park is a potential grazing area for the stockmen in that locality?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Not any further; I want to finish. On December 22, 1938, before the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] departed to his district in California, he made a speech in which he stated, "Kings Park is key to Pine Flat." Now, there is a trade down the line on this area. There is no use whipping around the bush. The trade is to the people in California: "If you people will give me Kings Canyon as a park, that you have objected to all these years, I will assist you in getting you Pine Flat Dam." I would not object if we were today giving the people Pine Flat Dam and water protection and cheap power, but we are not doing that. We are passing out a park bill, and they have scuttled the Pine Flat Dam bill over in the committee. The hearings were stopped on the Pine Flat Dam bill. No effort is being made to take care of what the people want. I think the people of California should be considered in their desires. I agree with what the gentleman from Montana said. The Federal Government owns this area. Yes. But I say to you Members of this House, if there is something in your State that you wanted, would you not think this House should consider you first, as the Representative of that area, representing your district?

The people in my district are overwhelmingly opposed to this measure. I submitted more than 100 resolutions against the creation of this national park. Among those resolutions I submitted 23 resolutions from Mr. GEARHART'S district. Among them was the Farm Bureau, the largest organization of farmers in the State of California.

I want to read another article to show you that this is a trade proposition. When Mr. Ickes was in California on the 14th day of February he made this statement:

> Before my term of office expires I hope to return here to help dedicate the national park and to stand by the side of your able and efficient Representative, B. W. GEARHART, watching precious water making a garden out of what is now a potentially rich desert.
> If that happens, each bill will have what it most needs—national support for a local project. Pine Flat, and local support for a national project, the park proposal, and a combination of these two must be victorious.

In other words, it is imperative that they go along together.

Another statement that Mr. GEARHART made before departing in December:

> GEARHART says the flood project depends on park—

So there was a trade or a promise to the people that if they would withdraw their objection they would be given later consideration as to what they wanted with regard to water and cheap power.

Now, a statement has been made in the press and over the radio that this is not a hunting area. I introduced in the RECORD a letter from a gentleman who has hunted there during the past 6 years, showing that this is one of the great hunting areas of the State of California. I might mention the number of licenses that were sold in the State of California last year. Hunting licenses, 234,842; fishing licenses, 313,819; deer tags issued, 128,436.

A statement was made in the hearings that 159 deer is the average kill in this area. The average deer killed in this area is 241, checked by the forest rangers of Sequoia National Forest and Sierra National Forest. Additional deer killed in area taken to east side but no authentic figures available. Total number checked in Sierra and Sequoia National Parks, 3,140.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. If you will read a little further on it says only 149 of that 3,000 were taken from this particular area. Is that not true?

Mr. ELLIOTT. You were not listening. I said the average deer killed in this proposed Kings Canyon area was 241 instead of 159 that has been told you, and I quoted the source of my information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Now, I will comment on the grazing. At one time 20,000 head of sheep grazed in this area. But this thing has had a build-up. They have lessened the grazing rights in the last few years, getting ready to discharge this bombshell of taking over this area into a national park, showing that there are only around 1,200 head of cattle and sheep in this area. But at one time that area grazed 20,000 head of sheep. During a drought year that area today could be used. If we had 2 or 3 drought years that area would be much needed for cattle and sheep of San Joaquin Valley.

In the hearings held before the Public Lands Committee no proponent of the bill who testified had ever been in this area. The closest Mr. Silcox ever got to it was in an airplane. Mr. GEARHART, the author of the bill, went as far as the road went, and he said he was a little fleshy and he did not want to walk, so he stopped there. He never got into this area. Very few people who appeared before the committee knew what was in this area.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How far did Mr. Ickes get?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. If the Park Service takes it over and carries out its program of no road building, will anybody ever get to see this area?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I could not answer that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How far did Mr. Ickes, the daddy of this park baby, get into the area?

Mr. ELLIOTT. He never stated how far he got.

I want to mention another feature. The statement has been made that there will be no loss to the counties if Redwood Mountain is purchased. Tulare County will lose $850.29 yearly.

The statement has been made that the private owners of Redwood Mountain were delinquent in taxes. I have a telegram from the county tax collector to the effect that only $40 of taxes on this property are delinquent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on the question of taxes?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Is it not a fact that only $1,202 is paid in taxes on this land yearly and that at the present time one-quarter of that amount goes to the county? So one-quarter, or approximately $400, is all that is involved in taxes in this area.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is correct on Kings Canyon, but Redwood Mountain is included in this bill. When Redwood Mountain is taken over under purchase by the Federal Government taxes will cease coming to the county to the extent of $850.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I think the gentleman is in error on that.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am sure of my facts. Redwood Mountain is not owned by the Federal Government. I saw the tax receipt. Eight hundred and fifty dollars is the amount from Redwood Mountain, but Kings River Canyon is not Redwood Mountain.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. May I read a letter that comes from very good authority on the subject? It says that the National Park Service, with headquarters in San Francisco, advises us that the total taxes paid last year for 4,000 acres of privately owned timberlands on Redwood Mountain which would be affected by the establishment of the park is $1,202.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is Redwood Canyon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is Redwood Canyon.

Mr. ELLIOTT. My statement is taken from the tax collector of Tulare County to the effect that Redwood Mountain taxes payable to Tulare County are $850.29 yearly. In the event this privately owned land is taken over by the Government this money will be lost to Tulare County.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Do I understand that the gentleman is opposed to the Redwood Mountain area?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am against this bill under which the farmers are being robbed.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But the Redwood Mountain area has not anything to do with that.

Mr. ELLIOTT. What is it doing in the bill?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Is the gentleman opposed to the purchase of the Redwood Mountain area?

Mr. ELLIOTT. What is it doing in the bill?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I just want to know if the gentleman is for it or against it.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am against the bill. That is in the bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman is against the purchase of Redwood Mountain?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am against the entire bill, because agriculturists and power users are not protected.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is it not a fact that in the last session of the Seventy-fifth Congress the chairman of the Public Lands Committee introduced practically an identical bill creating the Kings River National Park, and at that time the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, rendered an adverse report to the committee and set up numerous reasons why the bill should not be enacted into law?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is right.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Has the gentleman any knowledge as to why the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Forest Service, might have changed their views since the Gearhart bill was introduced?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will answer the gentleman from California by saying that pressure was brought to bear, and we all know it, on the Forest Service and on the Agricultural Department; that they joined hands and helped get this bill out of committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

When Mr. Beebe testified for the Federal Power Commission before the Public Lands Committee, he brought out very important information of interest to the committee. I asked Mr. Beebe to come back the next day to testify. I called him on the telephone, and this was his answer: "If I came back before the Public Lands Committee to testify, it might mean my job."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask why it is so imperative that we pull this bill out and pass it without knowing the untainted truth and facts? And we have not known them. Let me state something else right here to bring out what has really happened on this bill.

The Sierra Club, Mills Towers, San Francisco, Calif., published and distributed 100,000 bulletins, containing a page urging that citizens and organizations write letters and pass resolutions sending them to Senators and Congressmen. The American Civic and Planning Association has had representatives canvassing Congressmen out on the hill for the last 3 months.

Dr. Palmer has spent most of 2 months contacting Congressmen urging them to support H. R. 3794. Irving Brant, a newspaperman on the pay roll of Ickes, has continuously circulated around the Hill and the departments urging support. Arno B. Cammerer, Director of National Parks; A. E. Demaray, Assistant Director of National Parks; Col. John R. White, Assistant Director of National Parks; Ben Thomson, Assistant Director of National Parks; and Mr. Beiter, all have spent months circulating among Members of Congress urging support, and this activity was a governmental expense. Frank Kitteridge, Regional Director of the National Park Service, and B. F. Manby, Assistant Regional Director of the National Park Service, have circulated California and literally rung doorbells in that State for the past year, again at Government expense, stimulating resolutions, publicity, and support for this proposal.

Mrs. Brown and W. G. Schultz were all on the pay roll out there in the interest of this park bill and the taxpayers are paying the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. If the gentleman will yield me time, I will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I have no time to yield.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, this bill should be sent back to the committee. It is only the beginning of an effort to take more area for parks and put it under the Federal Government. The proposed Kings Canyon Park bill is only an entering wedge for a far greater system of national parks and monuments in California, a State which already has four national parks and eight monuments, covering a total acreage of 4,000,000 acres. This is proven to be the fact by a Government bulletin showing the recreational use of the land in the various parks, prepared by the National Park Service and published by the National Resources Board in 1938. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make the statement that the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT] intimated that the committee was in collusion with certain individuals who had been in Washington. I have been in Washington all the time and I am a member of this committee. May I say to the Members of the House that none of these individuals to my recollection or memory ever called on me or said one word to me about this bill. So far as I am concerned—and I think this applies to the rest of the members of the committee—we have made up our own minds with reference to the bill on the evidence adduced at the hearings and from what our general information has been.

Mr. ELLIOTT. They have called on others, have they not?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I do not know. They did not call on me.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I did not say you. I said on Capitol Hill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I wish the gentleman would state to the Members of the House the amount of the park that is in his district, the amount that is in Mr. ELLIOTT's district, and also what part of this park, if any, is in Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT's district, so the Members of the House will have this information.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman's question, may I say that not a single acre of the proposed park is in the district represented by the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT]. The balance of the acreage is divided between my district and the district represented by the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT], as follows:

In the Kings Canyon area there are 439,985 acres. Of these 357,425 acres are in the district represented by myself—the Ninth District—and 82,560 acres are in the Tenth Congressional District represented by Mr. ELLIOTT. In other words, about four-fifths of the area is in my district. The road which leads into this area is entirely in my district. The part in the district represented by Mr. ELLIOTT is inaccessible by road.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to say in substance the same thing that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] said. I am a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, and no Member of Congress, no official in Washington, nor anyone else has ever spoken to me about supporting this bill. I sat and listened to the evidence for 15 or 16 days and I made up my mind that I was for the bill, and I am.

Mr. GEARHART. I am very happy to hear the gentleman from Montana say that. I am grateful to him for his support.

Mr. Chairman, considerable heat has been engendered during the course of this debate. If I may, I would like to lead the membership back to a calm, dispassionate consideration of the provisions of this bill, as well as the objectives which it would attain.

On the eastern side of the San Joaquin Valley lies that great mountain range known as the Sierra Nevadas. On the very crest of that mountain range, in the neighborhood where are found the highest peaks in all of continental United States, lies one of the greatest scenic areas in all the world. Back in the eighties, when the late, lamented, and ever to be beloved John Muir first recommended to the Congress the creation of certain national parks in California, he recommended that the Yosemite on the Merced River, the area where the General Grant trees now grow, and the area further south where other great trees grow, the Sequoia region, be made into national parks. He also recommended at that time that another area, the area that is embraced in the bill I am now calling your attention to, be made into a national park. In accordance with the recommendation of that great naturalist, Congress in 1890 created the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks. It did not create the Kings River Canyon area a national park at that time for a very, very definite reason. The reason was that the Kings River area, the most beautiful of all the areas, was inaccessible to mankind. You could not get in there in 1890 except on foot. That inaccessibility has remained unchanged until the present year, 1939.

This year, for the first time, this wondrous region, this scenic wonderland, is to be opened to human entry. So something has to be done about it. Next year, because of the lure of scenic beauty, great crowds will be attracted there, and those crowds will have to be cared for, their comfort provided for. In other words, mountain management must be provided for the tourists, sightseers.

It is for this reason that I have introduced this bill to create a national park of this, the greatest scenic area in all the world. The air has been beclouded with charges that irrigationists who live on the lower San Joaquin Valley plains are going to be deprived of some inalienable rights by reason of the creation of this park.

Just last week the chairman and the chief engineer of the largest irrigation association in the Kings River drainage area, the president and the chief engineer of the South San Joaquin Valley Flood Control Association, were in Washington, and all four of those gentlemen announced to me that they had no interest in whether this park was created or not, for the reason that its creation would not affect at all the irrigation interests which are their first concern.

The gentleman from California has denied that statement, so I quote here the following article from the Visalia (Calif.) Morning Delta, which is headlined, "Kings Park Plan Protest Dropped by Water Users; 'Not Interested in Park Bill Now,' Says Charles L. Kaupke, Chief Engineer."

FRESNO, June 26.—A delegation of Kings River Water Users Association officials which today started for Washington to confer with Representative B. W. GEARHART on Kings River irrigation, reclamation, and power developments, asserted the trip will not include opposition to the Kings Canyon National Park proposal.

The water users previously vigorously opposed the park and Pine Flat project bills introduced by GEARHART.

PARK ACTION DUE

"We are not interested in the park bill now," said Charles L. Kaupke, Kings River watermaster and a member of the delegation, "That is now out of the way. We are interested only in the Pine Flat project." The park bill has been approved by a House committee and now awaits action.

Other members of the delegation are W. P. Boone, president, and R. E. Shore, a director of the water users' group, and R. F. Schmeiser, a director of the South San Joaquin Valley Flood Control Association.

FACT-FINDING BODY

"We will be a fact-finding body," Boone said. "We have no preconceived ideas, and we will operate as we deem best after we have conferred with GEARHART and others, who are interested in the project."

Both the water users and the flood-control group have urged delay in action on the Pine Flat development until the reports of Reclamation Bureau and Army engineers on river studies are completed.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. What is the date of this newspaper statement the gentleman is reading?

Mr. GEARHART. I am very glad to inform the gentleman. It is dated June 28, 1939.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is that since the gentlemen referred to left Washington or prior to the time they were in Washington?

Mr. GEARHART. Before, if I recall correctly.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. HORTON. Can the gentleman advise the Committee what is the natural flow of Kings River?

Mr. GEARHART. The natural flow of Kings River will be just the same after the creation of this park as it is now and has ever been heretofore.

Mr. HORTON. That is not answering my question. I want to know in acre-feet the average flow per year of the river. Then I would like to have the gentleman tell me how much of that natural flow will be taken care of in the reservoirs that are being provided for. Then I wish the gentleman would tell me what you are going to do in flood years when, I understand, there is sometimes 10 times more water in the river than there is in normal years.

Mr. GEARHART. All of the projects looking toward flood control and irrigation improvement that are now being considered by any organization or by any body of engineers provide for construction entirely outside of the boundaries of the proposed park, so the park, if it is created, will not affect at all the flowage of water down to the area below.

I do not want to leave the subject of the peculiar beauty of this area without quoting the words of that greatest and most beloved figure, "Old John of the Mountains," John Muir. In an article that he wrote for Century magazine in 1891, he said:

In the vast Sierra wilderness far to the southward of the famous Yosemite Valley there is a yet grander valley of the same kind. It is situated on the south fork of Kings River, above the most extensive groves and forests of the giant sequoia, and beneath the shadows of the highest mountains in the range, where the canyons are deepest and the snow-laden peaks are crowded most closely together. It is called the Big Kings River Canyon, or Kings River Yosemite. It is about 10 miles long, half a mile wide, and the stupendous rocks of purplish gray granite that form the walls are from 2,500 to 5,000 feet in height, while the depth of the valley below the general surface of the mountain mass from which it has been carved is considerably more than a mile. Thus it appears that this new Yosemite is longer and deeper, and lies embedded in grander mountains, than the well-known Yosemite of the Merced. Their general characters, however, are wonderfully alike, and they bear the same relationship to the fountains of the ancient glaciers above them.

There is just one other quotation that I want to read, from one whose words I know will be of high influence with the membership of this body. I refer to a comment of the former Speaker of this House, the Honorable Frederick H. Gillett. He once said:

I went through the Sequoia National Park and the Kings and Kern Valleys with a pack train, and I spent there 2 of the most interesting and healthful weeks of my life. I do not suppose it is possible to compare the different beauties of nature according to their relative excellence, but if there is any finer scenery in the world than this I should like to see it.

Mr. Chairman, this bill does not provide for the purchase of a single acre of land. This is a peculiar bill in that it will not cost the Government one cent more if you pass it than if you do not pass it. Of this vast area of some 450,000 acres there are about 4,500 acres that are in private ownership, but the private ownership of land in a national park or in a national forest is not an unusual thing. You may create this park and this land may remain in private ownership forever; and it probably will remain in private ownership forever unless a condition arises which makes the Government desire in accordance with public policy to purchase it. So I wish to point out that the mere passage of this bill will not impose upon the Government or even suggest to the Government the necessity of buying any land at all.

This vast acreage is in the National Forest Reserve, all with the exception of a few privately owned acres. It may be, in fact I believe it is certain, that this land now in private ownership will be purchased by the Government in the very near future whether this bill passes or not, for the reason that it is unthinkable that the Government stand idly by and permit the destruction of those grand monarchs of the forest, the oldest, the largest living things on the face of this earth. Whether this bill is passed and this area becomes a national park or whether the bill is defeated and this land remains in the national forests, either the Forest Service or the Park Service will proceed to buy this privately owned land; but this bill does not have anything to do with that. That end will have to be achieved under other and totally different legislation.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I note on page 4 of the report the following language:

The bill provides that the President may, by proclamation, add to the General Grant Grove section the Redwood Mountain tract of sequoias, an area of 10,000 acres, of which 4,297 acres are privately owned.

It would seem to appear from that that we are going to raid the taxpayers' Treasury for a couple of hundred thousand dollars to purchase these 5,000 acres of land.

Mr. GEARHART. That is not true at all. The bill provides for nothing like that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Then I would like to have an explanation of why that is in the report.

Mr. GEARHART. The privately owned land which will be by proclamation included in the park can remain privately owned land after it is included in the park. We have privately owned land in parks and we have privately owned land in forests, and we have had that situation from the time of the beginning of the two systems or methods of mountain management.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. On page 13 of the bill appears this language:

> But nothing herein shall prevent the construction upon said land of such works as may be recommended by the Chief of Army Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation for the control of floods, or for the use or conservation of water for irrigation or hydroelectric power in the areas adjacent or contiguous to said lands.

Would those works be built in the park or outside of the park?

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman has read a committee amendment which I am not in favor of and which I hope will be stricken from the bill, for this reason and this reason alone: The Army engineers and the engineers of the Bureau of Reclamation, after making a thoroughgoing study of this area, have stated that they had no intention of recommending the construction of any works of any kind within the park boundaries, because the dam, reservoir, and power-generating sites are not economically or financially feasible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 more minutes.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. IZAC. Would the gentleman care to tell the committee what the valuation by the private owners is of this private land at the present time?

Mr. GEARHART. This bill has nothing to do with the purchase of land and, therefore, that has not been the subject of inquiry. If the park is established, it can remain private land and will remain private land until the Government, acting under other authority and under other legislation, decides to make these purchases.

Mr. IZAC. But, if the gentleman please, many Members here are undecided how to vote on this bill and that question enters into it very materially, I will tell the gentleman. How much do the private owners expect to make if the Government buys the land, 5,000 acres of which the gentleman declares is in the redwood mountain region?

Mr. GEARHART. The statement has been made that all the land can be purchased for $150,000. Various estimates have been bandied about, but that is not a consideration. If this bill does not pass and this land remains in the Forest Service, those same private acres will be purchased by the National Forest Reservation Commission of the United States for the Forest Service. That is the point which I have been endeavoring to emphasize. The Government will save no money in either event. The cost will be the same whichever governmental agency administers the area.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I do not like to yield further, because I have not had time to really talk about this bill.

In the few minutes I have remaining I want to say that this land constitutes the most beautiful scenic area in all the world. It is being opened to the public now by reason of the completion of a road which the State of California has built at a cost of about $10,000,000 and which has required in construction some 16 years. The land therefore should be, and will have to be, managed. It is now in the Forest Service and the Forest Service has asked to be relieved of this responsibility. The Forest Service does not want this land any more. They sent their Chief to testify before this committee and to tell us over and over again that they regarded this property of national-park caliber and a national-park responsibility per se. They do not want to assume the responsibility of its care. Why should the Congress force this responsibility upon them? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON].

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to start out by being a peacemaker to a little extent. Unfortunately, there has been a little hard feeling cropping out from time to time in these hearings, but I think every man here and every man on the committee grants the other fellow the right of his own "thinks," and it works both ways. When we get out of here I do not believe there is going to be any feeling whatsoever in this matter, although it has been a hotly contested hearing from start to finish.

Frankly, I was just a little bit disappointed in the gentleman from California, the author of this bill, because this is the first time I have ever seen a man from California who could not make a mountain out of a mole hill. It is just one of the characteristics of that grand, fine State. I do not think he has really done justice to this piece of country we are talking about. If I had the power of superlatives I would certainly use them to describe this wonderful, beautiful, colossal, stupendous country which we are now considering. It is everything that has been said about it and a lot more, and I think I ought to have the thanks of the man introducing this bill for plugging for him up to this extent; but—and do not forget the "but," because we are going to come back to that before we get through. You know, originally, God made that country just about the way she is, and all through the ages she has come on down, one of the grandest, finest, most beautiful countries in all the world. The redwoods, the sequoias, of which the gentleman speaks, stand ready to attest that fact. They are at least 2,000 years old, the oldest living thing on the face of the earth, and stand as proof that this country has been protected all through that time. It ought to be a rather grand thing to sit or stand, whatever the posture is that those old redwoods assume, throughout all time and look upon this wonderful, beautiful country, because it is just that. Man, perhaps, first came into that country 200 years ago and they have not spoiled it, and then along about 31 years ago along comes the Forest Reserve; and the Forest Reserve, through its administration, has been responsible for maintaining the beauties of that wonderful country right up until the present day. So if, as the gentleman says, and he does say it, and it is true, this country is beautiful and wonderful and one of the greatest pieces of country that lies outdoors, everybody else in the world except the National Park Service is responsible for the country as it is today; and, after all, this is a grand old forestry department we have, and they have done a grand job.

Now, there are one or two little things I want to clear up. What is this road coming in here that the gentleman speaks about?

The statement has been made that this park bill must pass this year. That statement was not made on the floor, but it is in the record—that this bill must pass this year, because the crowd is coming up. I had occasion to call up the Forestry Department this morning and I said, "This land is still your land, it does not belong to the park, and what are you going to do about the crowd?" The reply was, "We are making all of the arrangements necessary to take care of any crowd at the present time. We will take care of sanitation and the camp grounds, they will be provided." So that this great big hurry up, in order to take care of this crowd, dissolves itself into thin air, because the forest reserve will take care of the crowd when they come.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. Yes.

Mr. GEARHART. As a matter of fact, Mr. F. A. Silcox, Chief Forester, testified before the hearings, and asked that the bill be passed creating the park, that the Forest Service be relieved of this responsibility, did he not?

Mr. HORTON. Oh, I wish my friend from California would not press that subject. That was lip service that was given. I wanted to evade any controversy of that kind. Since the gentleman insists, let me say that I do not know of anyone connected with this proposed park matter outside of the Interior Department, that is not scared to death. You are getting lip service, but if you want to know what they feel about it, go down there and talk to them, and you will find where the pressure is coming from. I know where it is coming from but I do not want to say where at this time.

Mr. GEARHART. This pressure has been going on for a long time.

Mr. HORTON. I do not know. I have been here only about 6 months.

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman knows that Secretary Houston and Secretary Hyde and Secretary H. C. Wallace as well as Secretary H. A. Wallace, have all recommended this be taken from the Forest Service and put into the Park Service.

Mr. HORTON. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. GEARHART. And that all of their predecessors and those interested in it, Mr. Graves and Mr. Stewart have also recommended it time and again down through the years, through Republican administrations as well as Democratic administrations.

Mr. HORTON. I thank the gentleman for the information, and if the gentleman will let me alone, I will proceed; but the fact still remains that the pressure is there, and the only reason that this is being pressed at this time is because the Interior Department wants it, and do not you think anything else. There is another thing, and that is about this so-called Redwood Mountain. That does not belong in the bill. That is 30 miles away from this proposed park. Do you have to carve out 450,000 acres in order to get a little park here where the Redwood Mountain runs between the Grant Park and the Sequoia? That is all shot full of holes. Those things absolutely do not hold water. I had hoped to go into this question more extensively than I have had an opportunity at this time, but I want to tell you that all of my life I have been in a State where the Yellowstone Park exists, and irrespective of anything that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] might say about the Yellowstone Park, it lies more in Wyoming, and all you have to do is to look at the map to see. All my mature life I have lived next to a forest reserve, and I want to point out the difference between a park and a forest reserve. So far as a park is concerned, there is a matter of tradition that you must not include commercial water in a park, it must not be developed commercially; and the point I make is that if you at this time make this area into a park and include these waters of great commercial values, they will be developed, because they are paramount. And since such development in a park is contrary to all park tradition, you imperil the entire park system for the reason that what you can do in one you can do in all. On the other hand, a forest reserve has a multiple-purpose set-up. The land is just as beautiful, just as wonderful, except that you make use of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes more to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I was going to tell you about these parks and forest reserves. I live near them and I know considerable about them which might be helpful, and I use the forest reserves in many ways, and their cooperation with adjoining ranchers is most helpful.

Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. HORTON. All right, shoot.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman realize that the most beautiful part of the Yellowstone National Park has been carved out of the great State of Montana?

Mr. HORTON. I think the gentleman can well be proud of the Yellowstone in Montana, because it is so much superior to anything outside of the park in Montana that there is no comparison; but in Wyoming there are many more beautiful things than you find in the park. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. After all, is this not the fact, that the only pressure you have had for this park is from the Secretary of the Interior, and the farmers and agricultural people in that vicinity are opposed to it. Is that not right?

Mr. HORTON. Absolutely.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I yield.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Is it not a matter of fact that the Forest Service, as this area is being administered at the present time, although 350,000 acres of Sequoia National Forest is adjacent to it, have grazing rights; and as it is at the present time the Forest Service protects that area of great trees, whereas in the Kings Canyon area there are no large trees?

Mr. HORTON. That is right. You cannot even take your pet dog with you into a national park. You cannot take a cold bath and yell if you want to in a national park. You cannot pick a flower. You cannot hunt. You must keep off the grass. There are mental hazards wherever you go. The exact opposite is true in a forest reserve. Hunt, pick flowers, fish, if you get a cold bath in the morning and you want to yell there is nobody to stop you. They cooperate with you in every respect.

Now, answering the gentleman from Montana, the users of the forest reserves make up the finest fire-fighting organization that there is. Without that help and that cooperation of the users you would not be able to save your forests in the national park, which depends upon that cooperation all the time to prevent fires in their area. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he starts?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield for a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman add my name to his own and perhaps several other members of the committee as amongst those who were not approached by anyone from the outside?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I will be glad to. I think the issues here have been very much confused. I do not believe there has been any question of corruption or anything of that sort involved in this matter. It is not a question between the Interior Department and the farmers, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] said. If the gentleman will look at the hearings, he will find page after page of farm organizations, of chambers of commerce, of practically every organization in California, pleading with the committee to make a park out of this area. If you will turn to page 11 of the hearings, you will find hundreds and thousands of farmers, farmers' organizations, chambers of commerce, water users' organizations pleading with us to pass this bill. So it is not a question of the Department of the Interior. It is a question between two great departments.

In my State we are proud of our parks. I think the National Park Service is one of the finest services that has ever been organized under the Federal Government. We are also proud of our Forest Service. There is no tinge of corruption and no question of efficiency has ever been raised against either one of these services. But here is a question as to which of these bureaus of the Government should take charge of this particular area, and we are happy in this instance to have a unanimous report on that.

I want to make this clear to this Committee, that both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior, possibly for the first time on a question like this, have agreed that this particular area should be controlled and operated by the National Park Service. I want to call your attention to the hearings on this question. Chief Forester Silcox appeared before our committee and he stated that at one time there was some misunderstanding, but it was wholly due to misapprehension and misstatement of facts. He said that from the Sixty-sixth Congress down to the present Congress they have been before our committee asking our committee to pass a bill putting the control of this area under the National Park Service. That is the Forest Service. That is the Forest Service making these statements. The Forest Service itself, in other words, says to the Members of Congress, "We think that the National Park Service can better take care of this area than we can."

Now, are we going to listen to this expert testimony, to those people who have gone on the ground and made a careful study of this entire problem, or are we for some reason presented on this floor, going to do away with that expert testimony? In my opinion, there is not any question about what we should do with reference to this bill. There has not been a Secretary of Agriculture during the last decade who has not agreed that this is national-park area. There has not been a Chief Forester during the past decade who has not agreed that this area should be operated by the National Park Service. Shall we take any notice of them, or shall we be guided by our prejudices?

One other thought which I want to bring before this Committee. It has been mentioned a number of times, and I hope the Committee understands this clearly. This has nothing to do with money. I grant you that California will be in here trying to get some money to purchase this great, fine stand of trees that it has down there, but that will not make any difference whether this bill is passed or not.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Is it not a fact that you made the statement there would be no money spent? When this is made into a national park they will be building fine roads and trails like they are in every other area, and the Federal Government will pay.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No more money will be spent under this bill than is spent in any other national park.

Mr. ELLIOTT. But they will spend money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do that in the forest reserves now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Some money will have to be spent, of course, for it takes money to operate a park; but there will be just as many trails built, just as many roads built under the Forest Service as there will be under the National Park Service. Now, I want to clear up this point with reference to these trees.

I think every Member who has seen these trees, or who would take the trouble to go out and see them would feel that they should be owned by the public, that the United States should own them. Whether or not we pass this bill there will be a movement on foot to get and keep the title to this great fine grove of trees in the Federal Government.

Here is an area which every man who visits it says should be a national park, an area that is now owned by the Federal Government, an area 40 miles long by 18 miles wide, within which are only 5,000 privately owned acres. The National Park Service and the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture asks you to dedicate this area for the use and benefit of your posterity; that is what they are asking you to do. It should be dedicated, it should be consecrated to the future use of America; and the only way this can be done is through the passage of a bill such as the one now before you.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think that in the past 6 or 8 years we have set aside enough ground for national-park areas that we ought to have a breathing spell; that we ought to try to conserve some of our resources and do things in other fields than trying to make everything a playground?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I think the greatest service that could possibly be rendered by this Congress, so far as preserving national resources is concerned, is to set such areas aside for national use. The gentleman implies the matter of money in his question, but I may say to him that money is not involved in this case.

Mr. RICH. Inside of 5 years they will be back here asking for $5,000,000, and the gentleman knows it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, a lot of matters have been brought in here that really have no connection whatever with this bill, matters that are more or less assumptions. This committee made an investigation, held hearings, and read all the evidence before it brought this bill out.

We are told that it will take money. There is no money involved here. This bill does not carry an appropriation, nor does it seek to authorize the appropriation of any money. It does do this: It states that about 4,000 acres of redwood in this area of California should be preserved. In any event this would have to come back to Congress, it would have to come back to the Appropriations Committee before any money could be spent on it. The question of money, therefore, is far removed and should not affect this bill at all.

This entire area is owned by the Government. We are simply taking an area that has no further resources and placing it into a park where it properly belongs.

We have been told that many people are against it. I assume that is true of any bill passed by Congress, there are people for it and people against it.

I read now a telegram from the Governor of the State of California:

Hon. RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

I am convinced that Congress should adopt the necessary legislation to set aside the Kings River region as a national park. The facts and arguments presented by Regional Director Frank A. Kittredge, of the National Park Service, in favor of this proposal are, it seems to me, persuasive and conclusive. I feel certain that the establishment of this national park is in the interest of both State and Nation and wish to go on record as endorsing House Resolution 3794.

CULBERT L. OLSON,
Governor of California.

Much has been said that has no relevancy to the bill. There has been a lot of animosity exhibited, either political or otherwise. As chairman of the committee I have been very conscious of all this, and I have attempted at all times to keep above partisanship in my many years of service in this Congress. [Applause.] I say to the membership right now that partisanship is not involved in this bill. We should pass this bill and preserve this area as provided in the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land in the State of California particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the summit of Junction Peak, being a point on the present north boundary of Sequoia National Park, also a point on the Tulare and Inyo County line; thence westerly along said north boundary of said park to the crest of the hydrographic divide between Boulder Creek and Sugarloaf Creek; thence in a northerly direction along the crest of the hydrographic divide between Boulder Creek and Sugarloaf Creek to the intersection of said divide with the section line between sections 3 and 4 of township 14 south, range 30 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; thence northerly along the section line between said sections 3 and 4 and between sections 33 and 34 of township 13 south, range 30 east, to the northwest corner of southwest quarter of section 27; thence northwesterly along the ridge immediately adjacent to and lying northeast from the headwaters of the east fork of Lightning Creek to the intersection of said ridge with the section line between sections 21 and 28, township 13 south, range 30 east, which point lies on the said section line three quarters of a mile more or less westerly from the northeast corner of said section 28; thence in a northerly direction across the easterly branch of the east fork of Lightning Creek at Summit Meadow to the ridge north of said creek branch; thence northeasterly along said ridge to Lookout Peak; thence in a northeasterly direction along the ridge from said peak, being also the crest of the hydrographic divide between Sheep Creek and Lightning Creek to the intersection of said ridge, with the line between sections 15 and 22, township 13 south, range 30 east, which point lies one quarter of a mile more or less westerly of the northeast corner of said section 22; thence easterly along said section line to the corner of sections 14, 15, 22, and 23; thence north along the line between sections 14 and 15 to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 14; thence east to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the said section; thence south to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of the said section; thence east to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the said section; thence south to the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the said section; thence east to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the said section; thence south to the southwest corner of section 13; thence east on the line between sections 13 and 24 to the southeast corner of section 13; thence south to southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 19, township 13 south, range 31 east; thence east along the north latitudinal one-sixteenth section line of sections 19, 20, and 21 to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 21; thence north to the quarter section corner of sections 16 and 21; thence east along the line between sections 16 and 21 to the southeast corner of said section 16; thence north along the section line to the quarter section corner of sections 15 and 16; thence west along the latitudinal quarter section line of sections 16, 17, and 18 to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 18; thence north to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 18; thence west to the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 18; thence north along the range line between ranges 30 and 31 east, township 13 south to the northeast corner of section 13, township 13 south, range 30 east; thence west along the line between sections 12 and 13 to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12; Such extension of the General Grant grove section of the said park shall not interfere with the movement of stock and vehicular traffic, under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, to and from national forest lands on either side of the said park extension. The John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park shall receive and use all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for General Grant National Park.

SEC. 3. That, in order to insure the permanent preservation of the wilderness character of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, no hotels, permanent camps, or other similar physical improvements shall be constructed therein and no exclusive privileges shall be granted within the said park, or on or over the roads and trails therein, except upon ground used for public housing purposes, but the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, limit the character and number of nonexclusive privileges that he may grant within the said park. projects. If either or both of the aforesaid projects are constructed, the lands withdrawn therefor which lie above the high water line exclusive of any lands necessary for the administration of the reclamation projects may be added to the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park by proclamation of the President. In the event that plans for the construction of either or both the aforesaid projects are abandoned and a certification to that effect is made to the President by the Secretary of the Interior with and upon the advice of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, after public notice, hearing and opportunity to present complete facts is granted to representatives of local irrigation interests, the President may, by proclamation, add to John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park the lands withdrawn for the proposed project or projects.

SEC. 6. That any motor-vehicle license issued for Sequoia National Park shall be applicable to John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, and vice versa.

SEC. 7. Mr. DEROUEN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be printed in the RECORD, but that the bill may be open for amendment to any section.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill who read a telegram from the Governor of California, whether that is the same Governor who endorsed the ham-and-egg program and then changed his mind?

Mr. DEROUEN. The chairman is not posted on such things and is very sorry he cannot answer the gentleman's question. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill providing the bill is open for amendment by sections.

Mr. DEROUEN. That was my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 6, after the figures "34" insert "and sections 27 and 28."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, it seems to me, has caused a great deal of excitement and consternation that never should have developed and I want to address myself for a few minutes to the reasonableness of the proposal in an endeavor to see if we cannot calm down about the matter a little bit. In the first place, this bill proposes to make a national park out of a very mountainous area in California, an area which I have not visited myself, it is true, but I have been over much of our mountainous country which is similar to this area. I have walked many miles over these rocky California mountains, and I am not surprised that in this particular proposed park area we find there are only 300 sheep and about 800 cattle that are now being grazed in there, because it is just not the kind of country where stock can be profitably grazed. It seems to me that the most reasonable use for this area of surpassing scenic beauty, therefore, is that it should be converted into a national park.

We have been told this afternoon by a number of different Members that we should not make this into a national park because it is better in the hands of the National Forest Service. I do not have any choice as between the Forest Service and the National Park Service—both are fine organizations, but I believe that in the case of this particular area the making of it into a national park will mean a much more permanent preservation of its scenic beauty which, after all, is the one most important resource that there is in this particular area.

It was said here by one of the gentlemen who spoke that there was not any support for this bill except from the Department of the Interior and some other place he mentioned. I wish I had brought my letters over here about this bill because I think I am right when I say that I have hardly received a single letter from my own district in opposition to it, but, on the other hand, I have received a great many in favor of it.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. May I call the attention of the membership to the fact that on page 3294 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I have shown the names of over 200 organizations that have endorsed this bill.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Does the gentleman recall that when the president of the Kings River Water Association appeared before the committee he stated he personally was responsible for having gotten most of the resolutions in favor of this bill because he thought and believed that water for irrigation would be supplied in connection with the park bill?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. He did not get any of the people to write from my particular congressional district. I am certain of that. Furthermore, may I say to the gentleman that I am very much in favor of the pine-flats project and I hope it will go through, but I do not see how the defeat of this bill is going to help the pine-flat bill pass. I do not think anybody should be subjected to criticism because he happens to be for both of them. It seems to me each proposition has to stand upon its own merits.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Is it not a fact that, had not a lot of people gone down into the gentleman's district and talked with Rotary Clubs and Lions Clubs, he would not have received any letters in regard to this matter?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not think so. A great many of the people in our section travel through these mountains. They are interested in national parks. I think it was a perfectly spontaneous matter.

The only area in this bill which it is definitely provided shall be in the national park is 100 percent federally owned land at the present time. It is only a matter of transfer from the Forest Service to the National Park Service. So far as the Redwood Mountain area is concerned, this bill does not provide as a mandatory matter for its inclusion. It merely makes possible its inclusion in the General Grant Park area. That is a matter for the future to decide. Certainly the purchase of this beautiful redwood grove will not be forestalled by the defeat of this bill. If you want to prevent the purchase of those beautiful redwoods, that cause will not be advanced by the defeat of this bill, but must be decided on its own merits.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have been doing a great deal in the past 5 or 6 years to make this country a playground. Of course, it is a nice thing to have playgrounds, and I think every community and every State ought to have a Federal park and playground for its children. I sometimes wonder, however, at the rapidity with which we are going into the matter of trying to make everything in this country a playground, where everyone can sit down quietly on park benches, do nothing, and then expect the Government to feed them. It is about time that the people of this country get back to the old idea that they have got to do a little work. If we want to have bread and butter for ourselves and for our families we ought to be able and willing to do something to get it.

They come in here this afternoon and ask the Federal Government to take over 454,600 acres and create another national park. Everyone who is in favor of this bill makes the statement that it will not cost anything to develop this national park. Every Member who gets up here and says that this is going to be a Federal park belonging to the national-park system and is not going to cost any money is about the biggest boob I have ever seen in my life, because anyone who thinks that you can create an additional national park and do it on air has something wrong with him from here up.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. I am one of those boobs with something wrong from here up.

Mr. RICH. I will ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GEARHART. I want to point out to the gentleman why he is in error. I know he will listen because he is a very fair man. This area is going to be opened up by a road this fall and because the road will go in there for the first time there will be thousands of tourists visit the area. Whether it becomes a national park or whether it stays in the national forests, those forests have to be cared for. The Forest Service, thinking that possibly this bill might not pass, has already had designs made for roads and trails and hotels and everything else it is expected will be placed in there, because the road recently completed has opened up that country and the people are coming in there; so it is a question of spending the money whether it becomes a park or whether the land stays in the forest.

Mr. RICH. Then the gentleman admits we are going to spend money to develop it?

Mr. GEARHART. Of course; the gentleman is going to spend some money sometime himself.

Mr. RICH. I do not believe anybody is going to have anything left pretty soon. I do not believe they are going to be able to spend any money. They are going to look to the Government to put this park on the map and then they are going to look to the Government to give them a hand-out so they can go out and see it.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. HORTON. Perhaps the gentleman would like to know that the records show that out of every 100 people who visit the parks of California 88 are Californians and 12 belong to the rest of the world; so it is a grand piece of money we are spending for California.

Mr. RICH. You have heard that old song California, Here We Come. That is what we are here for again today. California, by the way, is not the only State that has its hand out, because I have seen Members of Congress from 35 States come in here and try to get a hand-out for their States. If you do not believe it, just look at this Treasury statement.

Mr. VOORHIS of California and Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin rose.

Mr. RICH. Just a minute. I want to show the Members of Congress something that the majority of them do not know anything about. Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention, so that you will impress it upon the minds of the Members of Congress, that in the past 6 years you have gone in the red over $21,000,000,000. You have set up no less than 25 or 30 great corporations in this country, owned and operated by the Federal Government in competition with its private citizens, whereby you show about $40,000,000,000 worth of assets. When you go to liquidate those assets you will find that you are six or eight billion dollars short of being able to balance; therefore, you are probably $45,000,000,000 to $48,000,000,000 in the red at this time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely desire that this bill be amended so that I can support and vote for it. Unless some perfecting amendments are incorporated, I shall have to vote against the bill with the committee amendments.

On page 4 of the committee report we find the following language:

> The bill provides that the President may, by proclamation, add to the General Grant Grove section the Redwood Mountain tract of Sequoias, an area of 10,000 acres, of which 4,297 acres are privately owned.

Mr. Chairman, the proponents of this bill have indicated that the bill does not contemplate the acquisition of privately owned land. In view of the fact there has been introduced in the Senate at this session of Congress, on January 16, 1939, the bill S. 631 providing for the purchase of 4,080 acres of Redwood Mountain at a cost to the taxpayers' Treasury of $460 an acre or a total of $1,876,800, we had better strike from the pending bill the provision giving the President authority to include this private land in the park project. Our Federal Government is almost bankrupt. We should not lay the ground for a $1,876,800 raid on the Treasury.

Here is another proposition which should be stricken from the bill. In this committee report we find on page 3 the following language, referring to amendment No. 12:

> This amendment provides that nothing in the act shall interfere with the construction upon the park lands of dams and reservoirs for flood control, irrigation, or hydroelectric power. The effect of this amendment is to open the entire Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park to dams and reservoirs.

Hydroelectric dams; this may be the Ethiopian in the woodpile in this bill, which caused our Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, to put all the pressure that he could behind its passage. Unless this committee amendment No. 12 is rejected, we should change the title of this bill and name it "The Harold L. Ickes Government power project," so the people can remember him after 1940 when he leaves public life.

To the sponsors of the bill I may say that, after talking with many Members of the House, I believe you will gather quite a few additional votes for the bill if you accept and incorporate the amendments which I have suggested.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I would like to say for the gentleman's information that that was a committee amendment, and it was put in very much over the opposition of the Secretary of the Interior. He was not in favor of the amendment at all.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am not a rubber stamp for the Secretary of the Interior. I know, however, that a good many Members of the House, including myself, will be glad to vote against this committee amendment and strike the hydroelectric provisions from this park bill. I believe that this amendment should be stricken from the bill, as well as the provision which gives the President authority to bring these four-thousand-odd acres of privately owned land within the park system, and which will be a precedent for a future raid on the Treasury to the tune of $1,876,000 for its purchase.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman's contention may or may not be true, but I just want the gentleman to know that the Secretary of the Interior was not responsible for that amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. He is a champion of Government development, ownership, and operation of hydroelectric power. He may be rendering lip service in opposition to the amendment while praying that it be incorporated in the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I must confess at the outset I have never been to this region we are now talking about, and while my tastes as a vacationist may differ from many of my colleagues, as I see pictures of this place with thousand-foot cliffs, I do not believe I care to walk around it very much. It may be very beautiful to look at but I would be perfectly willing that other people endeavor to scale those heights.

I went through the hearings on this bill as did other members of the Committee on Public Lands and endeavored to learn all I could about it and as a result of those hearings I decided to give my adherence to the measure.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] has just called attention to some language which he criticizes very severely. It is the language found on page 13 which reads:

But nothing herein shall prevent the construction upon said lands of such works as may be recommended by the Chief of Army Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation for the control of floods or for the use or conservation of water for irrigation or hydroelectric power in the areas adjacent or contiguous to said lands.

I think I can explain to the Committee of the Whole the reason that language was put in by the committee. As the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has stated, it was not requested by the Department, either the Interior Department or any other department. Many members of the committee, myself among them, were deeply impressed by the plea made by the water users down river. As I recollect there are something like 20,000 families in the area outside the park, down the river, dependent upon this river for their irrigation. Their representatives appeared before the committee and bombarded us also by mail and telegrams, pleading that we do nothing in the creation of this park which would prevent them in the future getting the benefit of that river for the irrigation of their farms.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I only have 5 minutes, may I go along please?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a brief question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Hurry along, please.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman believe that the language contained in the bill beginning on page 8, lines 19 to 22, takes care of all water-right users?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was talking about how we came to offer this amendment. Many members of the committee were impressed with this plea, because it is a serious matter if you threaten the further development of 20,000 families in an irrigation district.

We knew when we were considering this bill that the Army engineers were making a survey of that whole irrigation situation, including the possible control of the flow of the water in the Kings River Canyon. So we put this provision in the bill that nothing in the bill should be construed to prevent, upon the recommendation of the Army engineers and the Reclamation Service, the erection of works which, in our mind, might prove to be necessary for the salvation of the men and women who live down the river and are dependent upon its flow. That is the sole reason it was put in—in deference to the plea of the water users.

Since it was put in and since the report was made on this bill, information has come to us in the way of a preliminary report from the Army engineers, that the result of their survey thus far has persuaded them conclusively that no such works will ever be needed in this park for the preservation of the irrigation outside the park. So it is the intention of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], supported by the members of the committee who supported this amendment in committee, to ask that the provision be stricken from the bill because, obviously, there is no further need for it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 13, line 8 to line 14, inclusive, strike out the following: "but nothing herein shall prevent the construction upon said lands of such works as may be recommended by the Chief of Army Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation for the control of floods or for the use or conservation of water for irrigation or hydroelectric power in the areas adjacent or contiguous to said lands."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, this committee amendment which I seek to strike out was, I understand, adopted in the committee by one vote. I come from the center of the country, but the people of my section are vitally interested in conservation and in the national parks. I have received many communications in reference to this amendment. It has aroused a national protest on the part of many people who have taken an interest in our national parks. It is denounced by every national-park enthusiast in the country. They claim it is setting a terrible precedent. They assert that parks should be parks and not areas of commercial exploitation, least of all for such works, dams, reservoirs, and transmission lines. They fear the inclusion of such an amendment in any national-parks bill will create a precedent most destructive of national-park standards. Since this committee bill has been reported, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] just said, we have heard from the Chief of the Army Engineers, General Schley, and also from the Commissioner of the Reclamation Service. Both these gentlemen say that this amendment is absolutely unnecessary, that it is not needed in this bill. In view of that announcement, why should it be included here? It is not going to protect any of the irrigationists, and the retention of the amendment in the bill will serve no good purpose whatsoever, but, as I said, set a bad precedent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I rise to approve every word the gentleman has said with reference to this amendment, and I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri will prevail.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the committee language remains in the bill, every time you have a bill of this character you will find those who advocated it striving to place this same language in that bill. Friends of conservation, friends of national parks have a reason to be exercised over such an amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. If I understood the gentleman's amendment correctly, he proposes to strike out a committee amendment which has not been adopted.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Chair has been stating after every committee amendment was read, "Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to"; I thought the Chair had used that language. My amendment is to strike out the committee amendment.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman's amendment is unnecessary. The Committee should merely vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. As I understood it, the amendment had already been adopted. Probably the gentleman is correct.

Mr. TARVER. It has not been adopted.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman. My purpose is to see the committee amendment voted down. It has no place in this legislation. It is absolutely unnecessary, and, as I say, it is going to set a precedent that will come back to plague you. Regardless of what you think of this bill, whether you propose to vote for it or against it, this language has no place in this legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I wish to state that this amendment came before the committee at a time when we were trying to close the session, and it was given very little consideration. At that time I, for one, opposed the amendment. I agree that it should not be in the bill and I hope that the Members of the House will strike this committee amendment, because it has no place in a bill like this.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did I understand the Chair to say "without objection the committee amendment is agreed to"?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The Chair desires to advise the gentleman from Missouri that the committee amendment to this particular section has not been adopted. The regular procedure will be to first submit the gentleman's amendment to the committee amendment. Then, if it is agreed to, the Chair will submit the committee amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then, as I understand the situation, to accomplish my purpose we should vote down the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will come first on the gentleman's amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then a vote on my amendment "yea" will strike out this language?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair state the parliamentary situation again? I do not believe the committee understands the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first comes on adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the committee amendment. The Chair will first put the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. If that amendment is adopted, the Chair will then submit the committee amendment as amended for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is adopted, what is there left to put to the House as a committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Striking out the language beginning on page 12, line 11, down to and including the language in line 8, page 13.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GEARHART. I make a point of order against the amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman that the point of order comes too late at this juncture, and the gentleman from Missouri has proceeded to debate his amendment.

Mr. GEARHART. May I be heard briefly, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GEARHART. The parliamentary situation is that we have a bill here to which the committee has offered an amendment which has not been acted upon. Now the gentleman from Missouri presents an amendment to strike from the bill the amendment of the committee which has not been adopted. So what should happen is that the vote on the committee amendment should be presented, and those who are against it should vote it down. I take it that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is out of order, because it is an attempt to strike from the bill something that has not been put into the bill by a vote of this body.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, this bill has been considered in the committee over a long period. We heard testimony from a great many people from the affected district and we heard the testimony of Mr. Bebee, of the Power Commission. You have it in the record. It is clearly stated that if this amendment is not adopted, if we do not install storage projects in this area, we lose 60 percent of the available water power. If there is any place in the United States where the people of the country need to use water power it is right here. We are told that in the San Joaquin Valley, tributary to this district, there are 2,000 pumps being operated by electricity to raise water from the wells, to irrigate one of the most productive sections of California. Now to tie up 60 percent of the available water power in the Sierra Nevadas on a sentimental proposition that we must not build any dams or storage plants in this area is absurd. This is a practical thing. These people need power. They need energy to lift the water. They are paying excessive charges now. That has all been developed in the hearings.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If I thought there was the remotest chance of an actual, practical project really being carried out by any of these agencies in this area I would agree with the gentleman. And if any such project is ever needed and recommended in the future I will certainly vote for it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Now, I yield no further. Let me tell the gentleman from California that right next to this project in his own State is the great Hetch Hetchy project, which takes water with a series of units in the developments from the headwaters of the first stream that comes down from the headwaters in the series, and every drop of the water is used. A comparable plant can be put into this Kings River Canyon and afford cheap power to put water on this famished land in the San Joaquin Valley and make it a better place to live.

I ask the committee to support this amendment and get away from this sentimental scheme to keep people from utilizing the natural resources of this country. This is a conservation measure and I submit we should adopt it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 15, strike out "6" and insert "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, lines 16 and 17, strike out "John Muir-Kings Canyon", and insert in lieu thereof "Kings Canyon Wilderness."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 18, after "versa:", insert the following proviso: "Provided, That in order to insure the permanent preservation of the wilderness character of the Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, limit the character and number of privileges that he may grant within the Kings Canyon Wilderness National Park. No privileges shall be granted for a period in excess of 5 years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 1, strike out "7" and insert "5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 2, strike out "John Muir-Kings Canyon", and insert in lieu thereof "Kings Canyon Wilderness."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: Amend the title by striking out the word "Wilderness."
Page 8, line 18, strike out the word "Wilderness."

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which I think the chairman will accept. It is to strike out the word "Wilderness" in the title and wherever it appears in the bill so that the name of the park will appear as simply "Kings Canyon National Park."

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I was the one who introduced this amendment in the committee and I am willing to accept it so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 223, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Was the Cochran amendment adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not present during the session of the Committee, but the Chair is advised that the Cochran amendment was agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Cochran amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the Cochran amendment was an amendment to an amendment, and cannot be voted upon separately in the House.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand a vote on the committee amendment as amended. Considerable confusion exists as to just what happened in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was just upon the point of advising the gentleman that he would have a right to make that demand.

The gentleman from Idaho demands a separate vote on the committee amendment as amended by the Cochran amendment.

Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment as amended by the Cochran amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, beginning in line 11, after the word "withdrawn", strike out down through line 14 on page 13.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT moves to recommit the bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt the House divided, and there were—ayes 90, noes 81.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members; and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 205, not voting 83, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Report No. 1215), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 258

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take testimony, investigate, and report to the House as follows:

1. Whether the National Labor Relations Board has been fair and impartial in its conduct, in its decisions, in its interpretation of the law (particularly with respect to the definition of the term "interstate commerce"), and in its dealings between different labor organizations and its dealings between employer and employee;

2. What effect, if any, the said National Labor Relations Act has had upon increasing or decreasing disputes between employer and employee; upon increasing or decreasing employment; and upon the general economic condition of the country;

3. What amendments, if any, are desirable to the National Labor Relations Act in order to more effectively carry out the intent of Congress, bring about better relations between labor unions and between employer and employee, and what changes, if any, are desirable in the personnel of those charged with the administration of said law;

4. Whether the National Labor Relations Board has by interpretation or regulation attempted to write into said act intents and purposes not justified by the language of the act; and

5. Whether or not Congress should by legislation further define and clarify the meaning of the term "interstate commerce" and whether or not further legislation is desirable on the subject of the relationship between employer and employee.

The said committee shall recommend to the Congress such changes as they deem desirable in said act or in the personnel of those administering said act and shall recommend such legislation as they may deem desirable.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act anywhere within or without

FIVE YEARS OF THE TRADE-AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order that I may submit the first of a series of three studies I have prepared in support of the program set up by the Department of State under the Trade Agreements Act.

1. GENERAL BACKGROUND

On June 12, 1934, the Trade Agreements Act, amending the Tariff Act of 1930, became law. The act occasioned opposition on the part of certain groups in the Nation who contend that the program which it inaugurates is inimical to the welfare of the farmer.

The program has been denounced as selling out the farmer for the benefit of eastern manufacturers. In support of that contention it was stated that imports of agricultural products are unduly large and have been constantly increasing. It is asserted further that the agreements we had made were causing us to lose our favorable balance of trade, that foreign countries were reaping the benefits, and that we received nothing in exchange for the concessions we made. Some of those statements have been due undoubtedly to misinformation; many of them, however, have been made with the deliberate intent to mislead and confuse the farmers of the Nation and alienate their support.

What is the Trade Agreements Act, the reciprocal trade program, and what agreements have we entered into?

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act authorizes the President to enter into trade agreements with foreign governments when he finds that existing duties or other restrictions are unduly burdening the foreign trade of the United States and to proclaim such modifications as may be necessary to carry out those agreements. He is not permitted to increase or decrease any existing rate of duty by more than 50 percent, and he may not transfer articles between the dutiable and free lists. This simulates the authority vested in the President under the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930. The President acts upon information and advice furnished him by the Tariff Commission and other Government agencies.

WHY WAS THIS LEGISLATION NECESSARY?

The conditions which created an imperative need for the enactment of the Trade Agreements Act in 1934, so far as the United States is concerned, grew directly out of the depression of 1929–32 and the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930. Other factors of an international character contributed. Because of currency depreciation and a breakdown in the foreign-exchange mechanism of those years many nations were unable to bring about a normal flow of their foreign trade or to stabilize their currencies or exchange. Tariff barriers, exchange control, import quotas, and in some cases even complete embargoes all contributed to the disruption of foreign trade.

The need for some system which would enable the United States to defend its interests against the high tariffs and new devices that had been set up in many countries to shut out imports and divert trade, as well as to help restore world trade as a whole by getting it back into normal channels, was imperatively impressed upon the United States.

The war wrought vast changes in the economic conditions in our own country. Under the influence of war demand our agricultural output increased enormously. Forty million acres were added to the Nation's crop area—23,000,000 in wheat alone. In addition, we were transformed overnight into a creditor nation.

The years immediately following the war were marked by a steady movement toward extreme protection. The World Economic Conference of 1927 tried to check that movement but failed. World trade declined from more than $68,000,000,000 in 1929 to $26,800,000,000 in 1932, while our own foreign trade fell from $9,600,000,000 to $2,900,000,000 in the same period. Although our foreign trade accounted for only about 10 percent of our total trade—that is a general average and subject to various shortcomings—the dependence of many branches of industry and agriculture on exports was far greater than that. Indeed one of our major problems was the disposal of our agricultural surpluses, for to no group of America is foreign trade of greater importance than to our farmers, and especially to those who produce our great exportable crops—wheat, corn, and pork products; tobacco, rice, fruits, and cotton. Partly because of our tariff policy prior to 1933, partly for purposes of economic self-sufficiency, and for military defense, many nations stimulated more intensive domestic agricultural production. The effect was to shut out American hog products, wheat, rice, and tobacco by arbitrary and excessive governmental restrictions. Our excessive tariff policy reduced the amount of dollar exchange available to foreign buyers of our exports and stimulated the erection of retaliatory trade barriers against us.

Ever since the Civil War our tariff policy has discriminated against agriculture. Throughout those years the farmers of this Nation were beguiled into the belief that they shared in the benefits of high tariffs. It was a long time before they awoke from this delusion to a realization that tariff acts as they had been written were worthless to them as producers of exportable surpluses, and that the world market price for their exportable surpluses tended to establish the price for the entire crop. After the distresses of the twenties the farmers demanded that they be given consideration in the drafting of new tariff legislation, and in 1922 the Fordney-McCumber Act was written allegedly in their behalf. But little, if any, benefits came to the farmers from that act. The Hawley-Smoot Act followed in 1930. Farmers now know that they were sold down the river then as they always had been before. Most of the rates they were granted were ineffective or on noncompetitive articles. The extent to which this hoax was practiced upon the farmers is well illustrated by the proposal at one stage of the tariff debate to place a high duty upon bananas—the domestic production of which is negligible—in order to make people eat more apples and vegetables. But the farmers were made to believe that the tariff of 1930 would benefit them and that they should, therefore, approve and support, as always before, the entire high tariff proposal.

So long as America was the source to which Europe looked for much of her supply of agricultural products, so long as Europe existed as a market for our exportable surpluses, so long as we were a debtor Nation and Europe took our exportable surpluses in liquidation of our debts, our farmers had little occasion to be concerned about our trade policy. Moreover, they were unable to penetrate the fallacy of the protective policy they were offered. As exporters a protective policy could not benefit them, and as consumers of protected products they were penalized.

But our debtor status ended with the World War. Europe no longer was a creditor market awaiting our payments in agricultural exports. The debtor-creditor position had shifted and Europe owed us.

For 8 years, between 1922–30, we fooled ourselves by lending Europe the money with which to buy our products. Then we stopped lending; and the day of reckoning came. Europe stopped buying. Agricultural surpluses began to appear. Instead of taking constructive action, we passed the Hawley-Smoot Act. In retaliation, country after country raised its tariffs against us. Our foreign trade collapsed. As stated, it fell from $9,600,000,000 in 1929 to $2,900,000,000 in 1932. In 1929 we exported $1,693,000,000 of farm products; in 1932, $662,000,000. Our national income fell from $81,000,000,000 in 1929 to $40,000,000,000 in 1932. Farm income fell from $10,500,000,000 to $4,300,000,000.

DECLINE IN FOREIGN TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES

The loss of foreign markets for important American products was the emergency factor in the situation which caused the administration to pass the Trade Agreements Act in 1934. The following figures indicate why it was necessary to do something about our fast-vanishing foreign trade.

	Total exports	Percentage of 1929	General imports	Percentage of 1929
1929	$5,241,000,000		$4,399,000,000
1930	3,843,000,000	73.3	3,061,000,000	69.5
1931	2,424,000,000	46.2	2,091,000,000	47.5
1932	1,611,000,000	30.7	1,323,000,000	30.0
1933	1,675,000,000	31.9	1,450,000,000	32.9

Official figures.

These figures show that by 1931, the first full year after the Hawley-Smoot Act went into effect, our exports were less than half what they had been in 1929. At the depression low of 1932 they were only 30.7 percent of what they had been in 1929; by the end of 1933 there was only slight improvement, namely 31.9 percent.

In terms of value the imports for the respective years on the basis of 1929 were 47.5, 30.0, and 32.9 percent. In terms of volume trade did not decline so drastically—roughly, about half the extent of the decline in value. The value figures are important, for one who has a surplus to sell is not especially interested in disposing of twice as much for the same or of the same quantity for half the price. Furthermore, in considering the balance of trade we think and speak in terms of value and not volume. With trade reduced by an average of two-thirds, we can readily understand the repercussions on those industries exporting comparatively large proportions of their production.

For example, the curtailment of our export trade in 1932 forced down our exports of meat and meat products by 76 percent in value and of wheat and flour by 73 percent. This resulted in a direct loss of farm income; indirectly it glutted the domestic markets with unsalable surpluses that had been produced for export. It had a devastating effect not only upon farmers, but upon merchants, bankers, and industry.

THE PLACE OF COTTON IN OUR TRADE-AGREEMENTS PROGRAM

Before the World War our cotton farmers received 3 percent of the national income; in 1938 they received only 1.4 percent; during 1931 and 1932 they received less than 1 percent. Our cotton farmers are still paying the cost of the World War, and the debts entailed, as well as for our lost foreign markets.

Today, 58 percent of the total farm population of the United States lives in the 16 cotton-producing States. A million more people live on the cotton farms of the South today than before the war; yet the total income of our cotton farmers still remains far below what it was before the war and far below what is necessary to provide these citizens of the Republic with a decent existence in terms of the high standard of living we regard as requisite for the national welfare. Instead of being able to buy more of the goods produced in other sections of the Nation, they find themselves compelled to buy less. They are unable to contribute to the national income that proportionate share which they should be able to contribute, or that which they would contribute if given the opportunity.

Between 1929 and 1933 the value of our domestic exports fell from $5,157,000,000 to $1,647,000,000. Cotton exports declined 48 percent in value during that period. Since the World War cotton has suffered a severe blow from the action of certain European countries, and new competitive cotton-producing areas have developed. During this year, 1939, our cotton exports probably will not exceed three and one-half million bales—the lowest in 60 years. Our carry-over increases day by day, with every likelihood that on August 1, it will be 14,000,000 bales—an all-time high.

We set out to reduce our cotton surplus in 1933, and by 1936 we had reduced the 13,000,000 bales of 1932 by one-half. But in 1936, the A. A. A. program, under which we had brought about that reduction, was stopped, and since then our surplus has continued to mount. Without effective control our cotton farmers increased their plantings, and in 1937 we had the vast total of 19,000,000 bales. We were carried back to the condition of 1932; and the rest of the world also grew a record crop. The only way in which we have prevented the collapse of 1932 has been through our Government cotton loan of 1937 and our 8.3-cent loan of 1938. But we have accumulated 11,000,000 bales under such loans, at a current carrying price of $45,000,000 a year.

The crux of our cotton problem is how to secure for our cotton farmers a market for an export crop. For cotton is an export crop. It always has been. Only about half our cotton can be marketed in the United States, and in 1929 we sold more than half our cotton crop abroad.

The suggestion that our surplus cotton should be used by our own people through expansion of domestic utilization is most attractive, but statistics reveal that, however desirable such utilization might be, it is not feasible. The domestic expansion of cotton is sharply limited. We have no choice but to find foreign markets for the cotton we produce so abundantly. We must find ways to move our cotton into export trade.

It is true that our domestic consumption of cotton is far below what it should be, but it is so because low-income families cannot purchase much cotton in the form of cotton goods as they normally require. The 800,000 families in the Nation who received incomes of $5,000 and more in 1935–36 spent an average of $78 a year for wearing apparel and household items containing cotton. The 2,600,000 families—not on relief—receiving incomes of less than $500 a year spent an average of only about $11 per year for such items. The 18,700,000 families receiving incomes of less than $2,000 per year spent an average of $20.14 for such items, while 3,700,000 families with incomes between $2,000 and $3,000 spent about $35. If we could persuade the 18,700,000 families with incomes less than $2,000 to buy such items up to the level bought by the group of 3,700,000 having incomes above $2,000, we should be able to increase the expenditure for cotton goods in those categories by a total of about $300,000,000, a very material increase. But the fact remains that we have not been able to bring this about. Strong foreign markets are essential for the successful disposal of our surplus cotton. When surplus cotton cannot be sold abroad, it forces down the domestic price. But it does something more. It deprives our cotton farmers of the income necessary to buy the products of factory, mine, and mill. It reduces their purchasing power for the things produced in our industrial areas. It causes resultant unemployment, part-time employment, and the inadequate wages that prevent our citizens who live in cities and who are engaged in industrial activities from buying their normal share of cotton goods. Not merely barely enough but an abundance of the goods they normally need and normally require. It deprives us of the power to increase our own use of cotton.

We cannot reduce our cotton acreage below what it now is. To take more acres out of production might reduce our surplus, but only at the increased misery of our citizens who produce cotton. But there are also many thousands of citizens engaged in the processing of cotton who would suffer no less. Our cotton industry constitutes a complex empire of which farmers, bankers, shippers, merchants, railroads, and exporters are all a part. Our foreign cotton market has meant about half a billion dollars a year to our cotton farmers. It has meant far more to our cotton industry.

The South cannot afford to lose its export market; but neither can the rest of the Nation afford to lose it, for to destroy the buying power of the South means idle factories in the industrial areas of the North and East. The entire Nation will lose if the South loses its export market for cotton.

We must regain our lost world market for cotton; we must look to volume as well as to price if our cotton farmers are to have a decent income. The trade-agreements program represents the soundest long-term approach to the solution of our export surplus of cotton.

Our trade-agreements program can benefit our cotton farmers by stimulating foreign purchasing power, for although Europe wants and needs our cotton it lacks the power to purchase it and it will continue to lack the necessary purchasing power so long as we retain the excessive trade barriers that stifle international trade. When we are able to increase our sales of goods abroad our people will be able to buy more goods at home. Trade will increase employment, create profits, and raise our standards of living. It will enable our people to purchase more abundantly the things they need.

There can be no prosperity for our Nation without prosperity for the South; and there can be no prosperity for the South without prosperity for the growers of cotton. The problem of cotton is a national problem.

SELF-SUFFICIENCY OR ECONOMIC NATIONALISM

Economic nationalism has a popular appeal. Superficially it appeals to patriotism and the desire to be independent of foreign markets and foreign policies. It wins political support because economic isolation presumptively means freedom from competition. It commends itself as apparent protection against foreign currencies, dumping, and arbitrary discrimination. The Hawley-Smoot tariff exemplified it.

But economic self-sufficiency is a costly program. The geographical distribution of natural resources makes it so. Italy lacks coal and oil; Germany lacks cotton and other raw materials; England imports foodstuffs. We lack tin and rubber and coffee and many tropical and other products necessary in our modern life. We increase our dependence upon the products of other countries and other climes in direct ratio to the progress of our complex civilization. The geographical distribution of raw materials is such as to compel some international trade, and the extent of that trade bears a direct ratio not only to the progress of civilization, but to invention and industry. Increased international trade means increased national wealth, an increase in the standard of living.

We would be less than realists if we did not recognize that some of the leading factors in our decline in exports was the restored and increased production by European countries of some of the products which we formerly shipped abroad in large quantities. Likewise we realize that once a self-sufficiency drive has gained momentum it is difficult to dispossess producers who have stepped up production primarily because of tariff bounties or other subsidies. This uneconomic and extreme self-sufficiency movement is the very thing which we are attempting to correct through trade agreements. It is not necessary here to recount how some countries are making high-cost substitutes for natural products which could be obtained much more cheaply in world markets, if more liberal trade policies were adopted. Those countries which carry on the largest interchange of world trade should be foremost in the effort to prevent the retardation which inevitably follows a restriction of commerce and trade.

WHAT SUPPORTERS OF THE PROGRAM HAVE CLAIMED FOR IT

On May 22 the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] stated that when the Trade Agreements Act was presented to Congress:

> We were assured, and the American people were assured, after it had been in effect 6 months' time that it would put 3,000,000 American wage earners back to work.

The gentleman from New York must have been mistaken in attributing such statements to proponents of trade agreements. I have had some examination made of the legislative history of the act and have not been able to find any such statement. I do not believe that he can find any such statement by any responsible person. If the gentleman cannot cite the source of his statement, I hope he will tell us frankly from the floor of the House that he was mistaken. On the contrary, I find that those sponsoring the program all the way down from the President—Secretaries Hull, Roper, and Wallace, and others—stressed the fact that it would take a long time to work out this program before we could regain our foreign trade and give jobs to our workers. The President's message of March 2, 1934, when he asked the Congress to pass this legislation stated in part:

> I would emphasize that quick results are not to be expected. The successful building up of trade without injury to American producers depends upon a cautious and gradual evolution of plans.
>
> The disposition of other countries to grant an improved place to American products should be carefully sounded and considered; upon the attitude of each must somewhat depend our future course of action. With countries which are unwilling to abandon purely restrictive national programs, or to make concessions toward the reestablishment of international trade, no headway will be possible.
> * * * * * * *
> From the policy of reciprocal negotiation which is in prospect, I hope in time that definite gains will result to American agriculture and industry.

Cautious and careful action has been the keynote of the program all the way through. Secretary Hull stated before the Committee on Ways and Means as follows:

> While naturally no detailed plans and methods relative to the proposed negotiations have been formulated, it can be stated with emphasis that each trade agreement undertaken would be considered with care and caution, and only after the fullest consideration of all pertinent information. Nothing would be done blindly or hastily. The economic situation in every country has been so thoroughly dislocated and disorganized that the people affected must exercise patience while their respective governments go forward with such remedial undertakings as the proposed bilateral bargaining agreements.

The leaders of the Democratic Party, responsible for passing the Trade Agreements Act and its subsequent operation, realized that it was high time for some important commercial country of the world to start unraveling the snarl into which international commerce had become involved. It was an emergency matter to get something done which would reverse the existing trend. It was realized that without some modern method of bargaining for trade our own country could not hope to win out in the contest. We realized that a mere reduction of our own tariffs would not automatically reopen markets in foreign countries unless at the same time such reduction removed trade barriers set up against our commerce.

It is frequently stated in criticism of the trade-agreements program that our export trade is gone and there is no use attempting to regain it. This seems a rather pessimistic point of view, for two important reasons. First, we are now exporting larger percentages of some products than we did in 1929, such as petroleum products, phosphate rock, canned salmon, pears, and radio apparatus. Second, our trade with certain foreign countries is greater than it was before the depression, such as with Sweden, the Netherlands West Indies, and Venezuela. It will be some time before we ever reach the 1929 level of total foreign trade. But I refuse to believe that the world is not going forward and that a profitable foreign trade for the United States will not be carried on for years to come.

In 1934 the Congress made it possible for the United States to create the machinery which would give our Government an opportunity to take steps to correct this undesirable international situation. It was essential for our Government to be in a position to indicate to foreign governments that we meant to lower our tariffs and give them an opportunity to sell some of their products in our markets so that they would buy from us. The mere passing of this bill by Congress, I am convinced, influenced foreign governments to exercise restraint against placing additional barriers against our commerce. Psychologically this was an important act, irrespective of its subsequent relation to trade.

By means of reciprocal-trade agreements it is sought to create a basis for international trade which will enable mutually beneficial commerce among nations to flow more and more into channels of natural advantage. We are prepared to negotiate mutually advantageous trade agreements with all nations. We are prepared to extend the benefits of concessions which we grant in such trade agreements to all nations willing in turn to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to our trade. That is the essence of our trade-agreements program. [Applause.]

PROMOTION OF THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, back in the spring I made some remarks on the floor of the Senate in which I characterized the idea that came out from Wisconsin in relation to handling the dairy problem as the "Wisconsin idea." It included dairy products in the so-called basic commodities and provided for parity payments for milk. At that time a representative of the farm group called on me, and I presented to him a rough draft of the bill that I had drawn to fit the situation, providing for parity payments and making milk a basic commodity. I was requested at that time not to introduce the bill. For reasons which he then gave, I did not introduce the bill. I assumed, from what this dairy representative said, that the senior Senator from the State of Wisconsin was to introduce that bill, similar to a bill that was introduced in the House on May 24 by Mr. HULL. Today for the first time I was informed that the bill had not been introduced in the Senate, and I ask consent at this time to introduce a bill to provide for the promotion of sound dairy practices and to provide an adequate and balanced flow of milk and its products in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am doing this at the request of Mr. W. H. Bundy, of Menomonie, Wis., who represents the proponents of this plan. This is the same bill introduced in the House by Mr. HULL.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2835) to provide for the promotion of sound dairy practices and to provide an adequate and balanced flow of milk and its products in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

SHIPOWNERS' LIABILITY CONVENTION, 1936—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 2647, to implement the provisions of the Shipowners' Liability (sick and injured seamen) Convention, 1936, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce. I may state that the reason for the request is that the Committee on Commerce are considering at the present time the facts involved in Senate bill 2647. After they report to the Senate on the bill I shall ask that the bill be again referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for the sole purpose of ascertaining whether or not the bill, as reported by the Commerce Committee, infringes any of the terms of the treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not identify the bill. Will the Senator help me in that regard? What is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not on the calendar. It is in the committee. What I ask is to have the committee discharged from the consideration of the bill and to have it referred to the Commerce Committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator who is making the request is chairman of the committee which he wishes to have discharged?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; and it is done by request of the committee this morning.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Foreign Relations will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LOANS FOR SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2759) to provide for the construction and financing of self-liquidating projects, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ECONOMIC RESEARCH STATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask consent to submit an amendment to be printed and lie on the table. It is an amendment to Senate bill 1740, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]; and I should like to take just a moment to explain the purposes of the amendment.

Senate bill 1740 is intended to promote business and economic research in the United States by establishing and maintaining, in connection with State university schools of business administration, research stations to cooperate with the Department of Commerce.

At the time the bill was under consideration in the Committee on Commerce I offered an amendment which would have included the District of Columbia with the States. Through some misunderstanding somewhere, the bill was reported to the Senate with the District of Columbia excluded. That was not the desire of the committee, and it happened through error. Since that time I have talked with officials of the Department of Commerce, and they are in accord with my view that the District of Columbia should be included in the bill.

My interest in the matter is that the Department shall have a chance to include Howard University. I am concerned with Howard University because I think there is a need, in connection with this study, to give thought to the serious problem of the Negro engaged in small business. I do not think any other school is so well equipped as is Howard University to make this study. I think the university would be most anxious to make the study. I know the Department of Commerce is most anxious that it be included; and I offer the amendment with the request that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] has accurately stated the situation in connection with his amendment to Senate bill 1740, and that when the bill comes before the Senate I shall be glad to accept his amendment.

PROVISION FOR RESEARCH ASSISTANTS

Mr. GUFFEY submitted the following resolution, S. Res. 167, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That on and after the date this resolution is agreed to and until otherwise provided by law the majority leader and the minority leader of the Senate shall each be entitled to have a research assistant, in addition to any other clerical assistance to which he may be entitled under any act of Congress. Each such research assistant shall receive compensation at the rate of $5,000 per annum which shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

REPORT ON NECHES RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES, TEXAS (S. DOC. NO. 98)

Mr. SHEPPARD. I submit a report to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate from the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army on reexamination, and preliminary examination and survey, of the Neches River and tributaries, Texas. I ask that it may be printed, with illustrations, as a document, in accordance with the practice in such cases, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXPEDITIOUS SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, on yesterday on the call of the calendar I was unavoidably detained from the Senate. An important bill was passed at that time by unanimous consent. Had I not been unavoidably detained from the floor, I should have entered my objection. I am, therefore, compelled now to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed. The bill to which I refer is Senate bill 915, to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes. I now enter the motion to reconsider.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MINTON. As I understand the situation, the motion of the Senator from Kentucky is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable, but it is not the business of the Chair to say it is not in order, although the Parliamentarian advises the Chair that it is not.

Mr. MINTON. Then, I make the point of order against the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, did the Chair say it was not his business to hold the motion not to be in order? To which motion does the Chair refer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table, because there is pending business; so the Parliamentarian advises the Chair. The Chair would ordinarily think it was in order, but he has not investigated and does not know. However, the Parliamentarian advises the Chair as indicated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we have a bill which is the unfinished business. A motion to reconsider, of course, may be made at any time within 2 days. I do not understand the rule to mean that we have got to conclude the unfinished business before a motion to reconsider would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that, under the rules of the Senate, a Senator can enter a motion to reconsider at any time within 2 days, and that is the only motion that is privileged.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that the motion would be entered, to be taken up and disposed of later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And then, when the time came for it, a motion to lay on the table would be in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

A motion has been made to reconsider. That is in order; but a motion to lay that motion on the table, as I understand, the Chair holds is not in order. So, if the pending business should run on until the end of the session, there would be no way to dispose of the motion to reconsider.

The Senator from Indiana did not give notice that he would make a motion to reconsider. He made a motion to reconsider now. If that motion is privileged, it seems to me it would take precedence over the pending business; and, if it does, it seems to me a motion to lay it on the table would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair say to the Senator from Kentucky—and the Chair thinks the Senator's observations will confirm the statement of the Chair—that the Senate rules are so indefinite, so mysterious, so illogical in many ways, that the Chair is wholly at a loss to make a ruling on a matter of this kind except by advice of the Parliamentarian; and he has made this ruling according to the advice of the Parliamentarian.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the bill concerning which the motion is entered is a bill which really ought not to have been passed on the call of the calendar. It has been reached on the call of the calendar a number of times during the past few months, and has been laid over on each occasion because representatives of the Department of Justice and the Attorney General had spoken to me two or three times about it, and said they were working on the matter through a committee of the Department, suggesting some changes or amendments to the bill which was introduced by my colleague and reported to the Senate.

I was temporarily off the floor yesterday when the bill was called. If I had been here, I would have suggested the same course I have suggested heretofore, that the bill go over. The bill really should be considered on its merits and debated, and not passed simply by default on the call of the calendar, although I realize that no Senator has any right to complain of the passage of bills in that way. But an important measure of that kind should be debated, so that Senators may know what it contains. For that reason I had hoped no effort would be made to pass the bill on the call of the calendar.

I wonder if my colleague would be willing to have the vote on the passage of the bill reconsidered, with the understanding that it will be separately taken up and discussed on its merits.

Mr. KING. I should object to that.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I will say that the Committee on the Judiciary had this bill under consideration for a year or two. The sole issue presented to Congress is whether we shall have a government by men or a government by law. There are a number of persons connected with the present administration who believe it ought to be a government by men, and so they are very rabidly opposed to the bill.

I may say that twice I have had conferences with representatives of the Attorney General's office. I said I would not attempt to prevent their submitting their suggestions. They said they had a committee considering the matter. In other words, the bureaus desire to work out their own regulations free from interference by Congress. I asked them to submit anything they had. None of them ever submitted anything except the Department of the Interior.

This measure was considered for a long time by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, consisting of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senators from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE and Mr. NORRIS], and myself. We made a report, and it was unanimously approved by the Judiciary Committee. There is no more important piece of legislation. So far as I am individually concerned—I cannot speak for the other members of the committee—if the bill may be set down for argument within the next few days, I shall have no objection in the world to what is proposed, because I dare say there will hardly be a vote in the Senate against the bill when it comes up. I do not believe any Senator, after he familiarized himself with the provisions of the bill, would vote against it, because I think to do so would shock his conscience to such an extent that he would not do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am making no predictions as to how many votes there would be against the bill, or whether there would be any; but the bill which passed yesterday on the call of the calendar, and which has gone over a number of times for reasons which have been expressed, makes an important departure from the present law and procedure with respect to the departments. Whether or not it is solely an issue between those who want a government of men and those who want a government of law is a matter which may well be debated here. It may be that the bill sets up a kind of supercourt to decide administrative matters in the various departments in Washington.

Mr. LOGAN. No; I will say to my colleague that the bill does not set up a supercourt at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I mean it sets up a sort of superjurisdiction over departments as to matters of administration.

Mr. LOGAN. It allows appeals to the courts from rulings of the departments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going into a discussion of the merits of the bill, but I think it is of sufficient importance that it ought to be discussed. I very seriously doubt whether a majority of the Members of the Senate are familiar with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. If we can reach an agreement as to when the bill may be made the special order or unfinished business of the Senate, then it may be that we could have it discussed, if anyone desired to discuss it. It has been under consideration for some time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall be glad to talk over the matter with my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senators from Kentucky permit the Chair to make a suggestion which may clear up the matter? When the consideration of the unfinished business shall have been concluded, the junior Senator from Kentucky may obtain the floor and move to take up the motion to reconsider. If the motion should be agreed to, he could then move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, or he could go on and debate the motion; and the question could be determined in that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I myself do not care to terminate it in that way. If my colleague and I can come to an understanding about the consideration of the bill on its merits—and I shall be glad to talk with him about it during the day—I prefer to do it in that way.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky—who is the author of the bill, I understand, and a member of the Judiciary Committee—that I have no disposition unduly to delay the consideration of the bill. The Senator stated that the Judiciary Committee considered the bill to be one of the most important measures the committee had had to deal with, and that they gave it years of consideration. Certainly the Senate ought to be entitled to take a look at it. What happened yesterday was that the bill just passed through here in routine, without anybody knowing what it was all about.

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot agree to that statement.

Mr. MINTON. We certainly are entitled to have time to consider the bill, and possibly debate it on the floor of the Senate. That is all I ask.

ATTENDANCE OF NAVAL ACADEMY BAND AT NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in a moment I shall make a unanimous-consent request, but before doing so I wish to offer a brief word of explanation, so that Senators may know in advance why I am making it.

July 28 next, a very few days off, is Maryland Day at the New York World's Fair. The Naval Academy, of course, is a national institution, but is domiciled in Maryland. One of the purposes of Maryland Day is to accentuate the virtues and beauties and usefulness of the Naval Academy, and the State is entirely willing to pay the expenses of the Naval Academy Band to take part on that occasion. The Naval Academy Band is perfectly willing to play on that occasion, but in order that it may be done "according to Hoyle," and no law may be violated, it is necessary to obtain an authorization for the President of the United States to let the band go to New York. It will cost the Government not a single cent.

Therefore, with the consent of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has a measure pending before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that Senate bill 2805 be considered, and that immediately upon its disposition the consideration of the unfinished business be resumed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland; but I should like to say, in connection with this matter, that the Committee on Naval Affairs is very much embarrassed by the many demands made for legislative authority to permit various bands in the Navy, particularly the Marine Band, to appear at public functions. The House recently passed a bill authorizing the Marine Band to appear at Rye Beach in New Hampshire.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. In that case the expenses were to be borne by the Federal Government. In the bill of the Senator from Maryland no expense to the Federal Government will be involved.

Mr. WALSH. I was about to say that. The object in the case of the House bill, to which I have referred, was to raise funds for the dependent survivors of the Squalus disaster.

The bill which the Senator from Maryland presents is different in several essential particulars. It provides for permission being granted by the President if he chooses to do so. It provides that the band shall go to the World's Fair, if consent is given, without cost to the Government. I personally think it is differentiated from other bills in the fact that the band is to participate on Maryland Day at the World's Fair in New York, and the band is located at Annapolis, which is in the State of Maryland. Therefore, I think, it is removed from the class of bills which would establish a precedent.

I desire to call attention to the fact that the Marine Band and other service bands should not be sent broadcast throughout the country at the expense of the Government. It costs about $3,100 for the Marine Band to leave Washington on a 2-day trip, and it should not be taken away from its post of duty, and its obligation to drill and participate in drills, and participate in the training of enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps. I have no objection to the bill presented by the Senator from Maryland for the reasons stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill presented by the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2805) to authorize the attendance of the United States Naval Academy Band at the New York World's Fair on the day designated as Maryland Day at such fair, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the band of the United States Naval Academy to attend and give concerts, without expense to the United States, at the New York World's Fair on July 28, 1939, which has been designated as Maryland Day at such fair.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, yesterday a motion was made that the Senate concur in the House amendment to the bill (S. 188) to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes.

I now give notice that at the proper time I shall make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator enters a motion to reconsider the vote referred to in his motion.

INSURANCE OF COTTON CROP

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2635) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] will be compelled to leave the Chamber in a little while, and he desires to address himself to the pending bill. I have consented to yield the floor to give him that opportunity. I shall take the floor after he concludes.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and when we had before us the legislation proposing crop insurance, through a gentleman's agreement it was decided to try out the insurance scheme on wheat first, with the understanding with the Senators representing the wheat States that after a trial of the wheat-insurance scheme we would then take up the matter of putting cotton in the same category. I do not know that there is any opposition to the pending bill, but I desire to direct attention to the fact that if the cotton growers in the Cotton Belt, which extends from California to North Carolina, representing about 2,000,000 farmers, are anxious to have this legislation enacted, I cannot understand how any Senator could get their consent to vote against it.

If a cotton-insurance law were in force at this time, it would result in a great saving to the Federal Government, because it has always been the custom of the Government to come to the assistance of distressed farmers as a result of its great humanitarian spirit and desire to help citizens in distress.

Recently there has been a tragic situation in my State, and also in Alabama, and possibly in other Southern States, where the rainfall has broken the record of a hundred years. I am informed that the rainfall in half of the State of Mississippi has been 18 inches more than the average for a hundred years. There has been an incessant rainfall for nearly 2 months, and it came just at the time when the farmers were planting their crops. In fact, they have planted two crops, and, because of the continued rain, they have lost those two crops, and it is too late in the season to plant a third time. They have lost their seed; they have lost their fertilizer; they have lost their labor, and it is too late to plant another crop for this year. We find several million of our citizens in distress, and the various agencies of the Government whose duty it is to look after the welfare of people in distress very graciously agreed to come to the rescue of these stricken people in two or three of the Southern States, the major part of the tragedy being in my home State.

If the 2,000,000 cotton farmers had had an opportunity to take advantage of the crop-insurance scheme, as provided for in the wheat-insurance arrangement, protection would have been given to them, and it would have saved the millions of dollars which the Government will be compelled to spend in order to rescue these people from starvation and from despair. As a cold-blooded business proposition, it is the best thing for the Government, and it is the best thing for the farmers themselves. With a small premium paid by the cotton growers, 2,000,000 in number, from California to North Carolina, there would be enough to take care of the major load or burden imposed on the Government at this time as a result of the great rainfall which has exceeded the record for a hundred years.

In this extensive strip of territory, from North Carolina to California, known as the Cotton Belt—and California is becoming one of the great cotton-producing States of the Union—from time to time there are tragedies all along the belt, and with the proposed legislation on the books, in which the cotton farmers will be glad to participate, just as the farmers in the wheat section have participated in the scheme provided for them by the Government, our farmers would be able to protect themselves against such tragedies and distressful conditions as obtain now in half of my State, and in several of the adjoining States.

I therefore ask Senators to give careful consideration to the matter and to accord my people, and the people of the entire Cotton Belt—2,000,000 farmers—an opportunity to protect themselves by this mutual-insurance scheme of the Government against such tragedies. In one case it may be insect infestation, in another case it may be a dry spell which will hit some part of the belt. In the present case there was excessive rainfall; but from time to time we have had these distressful conditions somewhere along the belt, and, with this insurance scheme in operation and backed by the Government, we will be saved in the future. It will be a protection to the farmer, protection to the merchant, a protection to everyone in the area affected. It will be a protection to the Government, because I know the Government will always come to the rescue of its citizens when they are in dire distress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, at the time the bill was before the Senate on a previous occasion there was discussion regarding the success or failure of the preliminary experiment with wheat insurance. In a colloquy with the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] the suggestion was made that the wheat operation had been a profitable one for the Government Insurance Corporation. I think since then supplemental information has been developed, and I am inquiring of the Senator from Alabama whether he has made a supplementary statement for the RECORD on that subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not, Mr. President, because the bill has not been before us; but I shall be glad to have the Senator put into the RECORD the statement furnished by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me ask the Senator for his interpretation of the memorandum to which he refers. In other words, what would be his answer now to the question whether the wheat-insurance scheme has liquidated itself successfully?

Mr. BANKHEAD. At the time I received the original information, as I suggested previously on the floor, there was a profit. There is a profit to date if one figures on the income and the outgo up to this time, but while this memorandum shows that there is a substantial difference in favor of the Government between receipts and payments, yet it develops that there is a potential liability which will likely exhaust the difference, so that there will be no profit. But that does not indicate any substantial loss.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator whether there would be a loss without charging the administrative costs to the premiums?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the loss would be less if the administrative costs were charged to the premiums, but I have never considered that. I have always figured that the cost of administration was the real financial contribution which the Government was to provide, and that the farmers themselves, through the premium payments over a period of years, would cover and provide for all losses that might result.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me see if I understand the Senator. Eliminating the administrative costs, it is the Senator's judgment that there still would be something of a loss in the operations?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The memorandum referred to indicates that there might be some small loss. The Senator has the figures before him. It certainly could not be of any significance. I read part of the memorandum:

> In his statement on the floor of the Senate recently Senator BANKHEAD must have had in mind the fact that the Crop Insurance Corporation has collected approximately 7,000,000 bushels of wheat during the first year in payment of premiums, whereas up to the present time less than 1,000,000 bushels has been paid out in losses.

That is what I had in mind when I had the bill up here before.

> On the other hand Mr. Johnson—

Who testified before the House committee, to which the Senator from Michigan made reference—> was aware of the fact that the entire 7,000,000 bushels and probably some in addition thereto may be required to meet all losses during the first year, as the wheat crop this year is reported to be below the average normal yield for the 10-year base period upon which the program rests.

That indicates the possibility of a very narrow margin, but nothing substantial; nothing, as I see it, to affect the merits of the program. It is anticipated that during some years there will be losses, and that during other years there will be profits, and over the period of the actuarial basis the premiums will be such that ordinarily, based upon experience, where there are losses subsequently there will be sufficient profits to repay and balance the losses.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me in order that I may ask the Senator from Alabama a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to ask the able Senator from Alabama, who has made quite a prolonged study of the cotton industry, and also of the wheat industry, whether or not on the average the cotton crop is as stable a crop or a more stable crop than the wheat crop.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume the Senator refers to conditions relating to production.

Mr. OVERTON. To production, yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; cotton is more stable. There are more risks in the wheat area than there are in the cotton area, based upon long experience. Wheat production is more hazardous than that of cotton.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Alabama one further question, am I correctly informed that the Secretary of Agriculture recommends the extension of this program to the cotton crop?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have such complete belief in this particular method of attempting farm relief that I am not going to quarrel with the pending bill extending the experiment to cotton at the present time, but I think it is a rather imprudent and hazardous thing to do on the basis of the incomplete and inconclusive experience which we have had with crop insurance up to date.

When the program was launched it was with the specific understanding that we were to feel our way along, and succeed with one commodity before we attempted to follow with another. I would not say that the year's experience with wheat has been a success when it shows a loss. I think it is premature to enter the larger field; but, on the basis of the Department's recommendation, I assume the Senate is going to make the extension anyway, and I can simply express the hope that it will succeed. It certainly is an effort in the right direction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the statement just made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], together with the observations by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] reveal, in part at least, the purpose of the bill now under consideration. In my opinion the inevitable conclusion to be drawn from these statements is that the bill is lacking in merit and is not in harmony with our principles of government. It is an effort to plunge the Government further into the evils of paternalism; indeed into socialistic policies at variance with the philosophy and theory of our Government.

The act of Congress—a measure which was approved February 16, 1938—sought to deal with agriculture. That measure contained provisions which many persons believed to be not only unwise, but also at variance with the principles upon which our Government is founded. This measure was criticized by many because of the extraordinary power which it conferred upon the officials of the Department of Agriculture. It was claimed by some that the provisions of the measure interfered with the freedom of individuals to prosecute their activities in agricultural fields; that it contemplated the control of agriculture by the Government and the regimentation of all engaged in this important and vital industry.

In my opinion a perusal of the measure will convince fair-minded persons that some of its provisions are at variance with our theory of government and would subject agriculturists to oppressive bureaucratic control and lay a heavy hand upon agricultural development. The view was entertained by some persons that the act contained unconstitutional provisions. Certain it is that freedom of action upon the part of those engaged in the various forms of agriculture were interfered with, and under the operations of the bill the agriculturists of our country have sustained great losses.

In an attempt to enforce the act, plans have been devised and policies followed which have proven injurious to the farmers, and indeed harmful to the consumers of agricultural commodities. I think it may be said that the agricultural situation of our country is worse today than it was several years ago; that the condition of the farmers is more serious than it was in some period during several decades. Some of the plans urged by the Department of Agriculture called for the reduction of acreage and the destruction of agricultural products. Efforts were made to prevent the operation of the law of supply and demand, and to interfere with legitimate activities which would broaden the market for agricultural products.

I repeat when I say that policies and plans urged by the Department of Agriculture have been unsuccessful. But as one plan failed, another equally illogical and unsound was suggested. The policy of the Department has resulted in the accumulation by the Government of millions of bales of cotton and has resulted in severely injuring the foreign market for cotton as well as for other agricultural products. Tens of millions of dollars have been expended in the experiments tried by the Department of Agriculture and tens of millions of dollars have been expended in adding to the personnel of the Department of Agriculture of tens of thousands of additional employees.

Later in my remarks I shall call attention to the enormous expenditures of this Department during the past few years, and the apparent purpose of those controlling the Department to still further augment the list of employees and increase by many millions of dollars the administrative cost of the Department. In my opinion, there has been no more unfortunate and disappointing experience in any department of our Government than that which we witness in the administration of the Department of Agriculture during the past few years.

The bill before us now is in line with a number of the unwise and unsound experiments and plans of the Department. It further embarks the Government in the insurance of crops and seeks to broaden the field of its experimental policies by providing insurance for cotton.

I submit that the experience of the Department in connection with the insurance of wheat has been disappointing and certainly should prove an admonition to the Government to not further continue this system of experimentation in agricultural commodities.

I might add in passing at this point that persons familiar with the purpose for which our Government was founded will not be reconciled to the embarkation of the Federal Government upon the sea of socialism. The bill before us gives to the Department of Agriculture the authority to insure cotton and calls for the expenditure of millions of dollars to carry out that policy.

When the Senator from Alabama called the bill up for consideration a few days ago, I was not privileged to hear his explanation of its terms. I did, however, hear part of the colloquy between the Senator and the Senator from Vermont, and reached the conclusion from the statements of the Senators that the measure lacked merit and would prove more difficult of administration and more unsatisfactory in its results than attended the administration of the law providing for the insurance of wheat.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has just submitted a number of questions to the Senator from Alabama, and the information obtained brings further confirmation of the proposition that the projection of the Federal Government into the field of insurance is unwise and will constitute a precedent that will result in continuing irritation, difficulties, and losses to the Federal Government.

A few days ago I inquired of Mr. Johnson, the head of the insurance organization in the Department of Agriculture, concerning the work which had been done in connection with the insurance of wheat. He stated, in substance, that $5,000,000 had been expended during the first year of the administration of the act in connection with the insurance of wheat.

In reply to my question as to whether the costs of administration would be diminished, he stated, as I recall, that he did not expect any reduction, and that possibly there might be some increase, depending upon the number of wheat farmers who obtain crop insurance.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that the Department of Agriculture has more than 100,000 employees and has added to its organization these agencies, there have been added to the personnel a considerable number who have cost the Government $5,000,000 for the first year of the administration of the Crop Insurance Act. We are confronted with the fact that we are imposing upon the taxpayers of the United States a cost for administration of at least $5,000,000 per annum.

I inquired of Mr. Johnson whether, if cotton was added to the list of insurable commodities, the administrative expenses would be greater than those required in the administration of the insurance of wheat. He stated, as I recall, that in his opinion the expenses would be larger, because there would be more cotton growers who would avail themselves of the crop-insurance provisions than there were wheat producers.

I learned from Mr. Johnson that the wheat growers who obtained insurance did not pay for their insurance in cash, nor would the cotton growers be expected to employ cash in paying for the insurance which they would obtain. The wheat farmers paid for their insurance by delivering at various stations wheat which they had produced. The Government was required, under its policies, to accept the wheat, and of course to furnish suitable elevators in order to care for the same. Under this plan, the Government is compelled to incur great expense for costs of storage, insurance, and handling of the wheat. It cannot keep the wheat indefinitely, and must therefore find markets for the same. This requires a sales organization in order that the wheat may be disposed of advantageously.

This plan places the Government in the position of a broker or dealer in the wheat which it accepts in payment for insurance. The Government is compelled to gage the markets and to handle the wheat in such a manner as to prevent loss.

In my opinion it is improper for the Government to engage in the purchase and disposition of wheat, and to enter into competition, as it would, with those who are engaged in the buying and selling of wheat.

Mr. President, it is clear from the colloquy between the two Senators just referred to that not only has the Government lost $5,000,000 for administrative expenses for the year, but it will suffer losses growing out of the wheat transactions. The 600,000,000 bushels of wheat which the Government has acquired will not meet the insurance losses, as a result of which the Government will sustain a considerable loss in addition to the $5,000,000 administrative expenses.

The experience of the Agricultural Department in this wheat venture is an admonition that the Government, even if it had the authority, should not enter this field of insurance. May I add that demands for the insurance of additional crops will be made, and soon Congress will be requested to appropriate tens of millions of dollars for administrative purposes, with the certainty of being compelled to appropriate additional millions in order to meet the losses that will be sustained in its insurance activities.

May I add that Mr. Johnson stated to me that private insurance companies had sustained great losses.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Senator say that all the private companies had failed?

Mr. KING. My recollection is that Mr. Johnson stated that the companies which had engaged in the insurance of crops had met with great losses, and many had failed.

Mr. HATCH. I happen to know that that is not a correct statement. I have had hail insurance this year with a private company, and I know that it is still doing business.

Mr. KING. The insurance acquired by the Senator provided only for losses occurring from hail?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Not for the entire crop.

Mr. HATCH. The company will write crop insurance if one is willing to pay the premiums, which are rather high.

Mr. KING. Obviously, that must be true. Perhaps Mr. Johnson limited his statement to those insurance companies which had insured prices, and as to those companies my recollection is that he stated all had failed.

Mr. President, I again repeat there is no authority for the Federal Government to embark upon the business of insuring properties or crops. Certainly there are limitations upon the authority and the functions of government. The line of separation between private activities and private enterprise and the functions and authority of government, is marked particularly in a government such as that in which we live. The Federal Government, it is unnecessary to state, possesses only limited authority. It may operate only in fields which pertain to governmental matters, and which it may enter because of the authority delegated to it in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, the Government has been generous in dealing with agriculture. It has appropriated to the Department of Agriculture and its agencies during the past 8 years more than $7,337,000,000. And I should add that that stupendous sum does not comprehend all the expenditures which have been made for the benefit of those engaged in agricultural pursuits; nor does it comprehend losses which the Government will sustain by reason of guarantees and commitments which have been made. Perhaps these losses which the Government will be required to meet will aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars. However, I believe that the Government should deal generously and not act magnanimously with the farmers of our country.

In 1933 Congress appropriated for agriculture $251,931,139. The appropriations for 1934 were more than $924,000,000. In 1935 they exceeded $1,140,000,000. In 1936 the appropriations for agriculture were approximately $946,000,000. In 1937 they amounted to more than $869,000,000. In 1938 they amounted to more than $971,000,000. In the fiscal year 1939 the appropriations exceed $1,267,000,000. In addition to these appropriations there are additional funds supplied to the Department of Agriculture which amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. The Senator from Georgia, who sits near me, and who has had charge of the agricultural appropriation bill in the Senate for a number of years, can advise me whether the figures which I have just submitted are accurate. The figures which I have just mentioned as the appropriation for the coming fiscal year of more than $1,000,000,000 do not include the amount which will be received by the Department of Agriculture from customs duties.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is my understanding that it does not. The figure which the Senator has just given does not include the $90,000,000 which will be available from section 32; nor do the amounts stated by the Senator from Utah for the years 1939, 1938, and 1937 include the sums available from section 32.

Mr. KING. So, Mr. President, I have understated the aggregate amounts which were appropriated by Congress to aid agriculture during the years indicated. There should be added to the figures which I gave the amounts which were obtained from customs receipts. Such amounts would aggregate perhaps $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 during the past few years.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think they would easily aggregate $400,000,000, or perhaps slightly more.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have before me a complete statement, furnished by officials of the Government, of the appropriations made for agriculture from the year 1848 down to the present time. I hope Senators will examine them; they will discover the enormous increase which has occurred year by year in appropriations for agriculture by the Federal Government.

For example, in 1848 only $3,000 was appropriated for the benefit of agriculture. Skipping the intervening years, in 1865, the amount was $143,100.

Beginning in 1848 the Federal appropriations for agricultural purposes were but $3,000. There were slight increases during the intervening years and in 1863 $60,000 was appropriated. The appropriations varied during the following years and in 1881 they totaled $353,000. There were unimportant increases in agricultural appropriations until 1888, when they totaled $1,028,000. There were slight increases between that year and 1900 and 1901, when the appropriations totaled $4,023,000. Between that date and 1907 the appropriations were substantially the same. In 1908 they totaled $9,437,000. During the period between 1908 and 1917 there were unimportant increases in the appropriations. In 1918, owing to the war and the demands for "food stimulation," the appropriations reached the sum of $40,000,000. In 1919 for "food stimulation" and for the Department of Agriculture $38,000,000 was appropriated. In 1920 the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture were $112,000,000. However, there was $1,000,000,000 for wheat guaranty. In 1922 there was $38,000,000 appropriated. In 1922 there were seed-grain loans amounting to $1,500,000 appropriated, and in 1923 the Department of Agriculture received $62,000,000 and for the same year $25,000,000 were appropriated for roads. Following that year the appropriations were increased until in 1930 the appropriations for the Department amounted to $160,000,000. In addition $251,000,000 was appropriated for "marketing funds." In 1931 the appropriations for the Department amounted to over $200,000,000 and $89,000,000 was also appropriated for roads. The same year $150,000,000 was appropriated for "marketing funds" and $45,000,000 for the "relief of farms." In 1932 $269,000,000 was appropriated for the Department and $50,000,000 for roads. The appropriations in 1933 were $176,500,000, and in 1934 $200,000,000 was provided as a loan to farmers and, in addition, $100,000,000 was appropriated to the Department and $40,000,000 for "crop-production loans." In 1935 there was appropriated $15,000,000 for agricultural adjustment and $66,000,000 to the Department and $2,389,000 for the Farm Credit Administration.

In 1936 the Department of Agriculture received approximately $430,000,000, and also $296,000,000 under the Agricultural adjustment provisions of the law. Further, in 1936 an act of Congress was passed under the terms of which 30 percent of the gross customs receipts were to be expended by the Agricultural Department.

In 1937, $172,000,000 were appropriated to the Department and $4,000,000 for the Farm Credit Administration.

In 1938, for all purposes, including roads, the Department received over $1,100,000,000, and the Farm Credit Administration $4,000,000. In 1938 also, under the terms of the Sugar Act, $39,750,000 were appropriated, and a deficiency appropriation of $23,365,000 was made.

In 1938 the appropriations for the Department amounted to approximately $750,000,000.

Mr. President, only a few days ago the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]—and I emphasize the word "able" because since he has been in the Senate he has demonstrated his earnestness, zeal, and comprehension of public questions—submitted a conference report to the Senate. There were only a few minutes of debate. I did not agree with the report which was submitted. The Senate agreed to the same and as a result of which a measure providing an appropriation of about $1,300,000,000 to be expended in aid of the farmers during the next fiscal year was passed. When the bill was under consideration by the Senate I invited attention to the vast increase in the appropriation for the next fiscal year. I referred to the fact that in 1920 the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture was only $66,000,000. Large as that figure was, how infinitesimal it is when compared with the sum agreed upon in the conference report carrying appropriations for the next fiscal year. Although the figure for 1933 is approximately four times as large as the appropriation 13 years before, it is $1,000,000,000 less than the sum being appropriated for agriculture for the next fiscal year.

The total individual-income taxes collected during the fiscal year 1937 would not be adequate to pay for the current appropriations for agriculture. From time to time we hear much talk about imposing higher income taxes. The Finance Committee has addressed itself with earnestness to the problem of obtaining revenues adequate to meet the expenses of the Government. We have very heavily taxed the incomes of the people. However, the other day we resisted a suggestion made by the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to lower the income brackets, and so increase the number of persons subjected to the income tax. I can assure the Senate that members of the Finance Committee have not been derelict in their duty to find sources of revenue to meet the mounting expenses of the Government. However such efforts, the revenues collected will be wholly inadequate to meet the appropriations made.

I noticed in a morning newspaper that a learned professor and economist, who delivered an address in California, stated that the course which we are pursuing will inevitably lead to inflation; and inflation carries with it economic and industrial dangers, if not deadly perils.

Germany had inflation. As I stated a number of months ago, during the course of an address, that when I was in Germany the inflation had been so extreme that it had practically destroyed the middle class and brought incalculable injury to the entire population. I talked with hundreds of Germans, some of whom were walking the streets in despair, who had prior to the inflationary policy of Germany possessed resources adequate for their sustenance for life; and, as I was told that many persons had committed suicide because of the tragic conditions which had followed the destructive policies of the Government.

The total individual income taxes collected during the fiscal year 1937 were not sufficient to pay for the appropriations for agriculture. It will not be a happy thought for any citizen who complains over paying a high income tax to remember that, high as it is, his income tax, together with the income tax paid by every other person in the Nation, will not even pay for the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1940.

These figures are borne out by official reports. The Annual Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1937, at page 1, gives the total collection of individual taxes for that year as $1,091,740,746, while, according to Government figures, the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for 1937 was $1,264,000,000, and, according to the statement made by the able Senator from Georgia, the appropriation for 1940 will exceed that sum perhaps by one or two hundred million dollars.

Let it also be remembered by the taxpayer that all the individual income taxes collected are not even sufficient to pay the interest on our public debt.

With the mounting expenses of the Government we have now reached approximately the $45,000,000,000 limit of indebtedness, and undoubtedly Congress will be asked at the next session of Congress to meet large deficits because of the failure of the departments to live within the appropriations which have been made.

Mr. President, this is, indeed, a serious situation, though I know that any observations which may be made in behalf of economy fall upon deaf ears. We are continuing to spend, and spend more, and the appropriations next year which will be demanded will exceed those for this year, stupendous as they are. Obviously, we may not continue this profligate course without bringing disaster not only to the credit of the country but to millions of the American people.

One of our richest sources of income—that is, the income tax—being inadequate to meet the interest alone on our public debt, being insufficient to pay for the running of merely one of our 10 executive departments, it is obvious that we are being confronted with a most serious condition which should challenge the attention of thoughtful Senators and the public, and lead to a universal demand that these profligate expenditures shall cease and that we shall inaugurate a policy with respect to our fiscal affairs which will be consonant with democratic institutions and with wise and efficient administration of the Government.

Need I say there is concern being expressed by many thoughtful persons concerning the solvency of the Government? Congress is largely to blame for this condition. If new functions and new duties are delegated to a department, there can be only one answer—increased expenditures and increased personnel.

Since I have mentioned "personnel," I may add that when I came to the Senate in 1917 there were 34,000 Government employees in Washington; there are now more than 100,000, and the number of persons on the Federal pay roll, not including those in the Works Progress organization, number nearly 2,000,000, and their salaries and compensation will total approximately $2,000,000,000 a year.

When the Government a few years ago appropriated $1,000,000,000 for 2 years, it excited criticism, many Senators and Representatives who had voted for the same were rebuked by their States. Now, it is said by some that Senators and Representatives may be defeated for reelection if they do not vote for large appropriations, showing the difference in the attitude of the American people toward economy and thrift and those fine virtues which manifested themselves in the early days of the Republic.

Permit me to present a list of some of the agencies of the Department of Agriculture as shown in the Congressional Directory in order that we may obtain some idea of the extent of this organization. The Congress, I repeat, is largely to blame. The demands of officials of the Federal Government are increasing. We do not find, as a rule, bureaucrats asking for smaller appropriations or reduced personnel. They are asking for increased jurisdiction, as they are asking now for increased jurisdiction under the act under which wheat has been insured.

The major divisions are listed as follows:

The Office of Land Use Coordination.
The Office of Personnel.
The Office of Budget and Finance.
The Office of Plant and Operations.
The Office of the Solicitor.
The Office of Information.
Library.
The Office of Experiment Stations.
Extension Service.
Foreign Agricultural Service.
Agricultural Adjustment Administration.
Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.
Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.
Bureau of Agricultural Economics.
Bureau of Agricultural Engineering.
Bureau of Animal Industry.

National Agricultural Research Center, whatever that may be.

Bureau of Biological Survey.

Bureau of Chemistry and Soils.

Commodity Exchange Administration.

Where did they get the authority under form of government to set up an exchange for commodities, engaging in traffic and buying and selling commodities?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I will state that the function of that agency of the Department of Agriculture is to regulate abuses on the commodity exchanges in the large cities. It does not involve any actual exchange of commodities by the Department of Agriculture, but rather the regulation of dealings in futures on commodity exchanges, which, in times past, has been disastrous to the farmers of the United States.

Mr. KING. I am glad to have the explanation. I recall now that when the matter was under consideration by the Senate a number of years ago it was demonstrated that there needed to be some restrictive measures with respect to operations upon the commodity exchanges.

I continue with the list of agencies under the Department of Agriculture:

Bureau of Dairy Industry.

Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine.

Farm Security Administration.

Food and Drug Administration.

Forest Service.

Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration.

Bureau of Home Economics.

Bureau of Plant Industry.

Advisory Council of the National Arboretum.

Bureau of Public Roads.

Soil Conservation Service.

Sugar Division.

Weather Bureau.

Thus we have 33 major divisions of this one executive department. A mere reading of the names of the divisions suggests the widening scope of Federal activities in the field of agriculture.

Mr. President, it can be easily understood by the sheer force of the added work that has been placed upon the Department of Agriculture by the Congress why the number of employees in this Department alone has, as I am advised, doubled in the short space of 5 years.

In 1934 the total personnel of the Department of Agriculture was 51,000; in 1938 the number was approximately 102,000, and I am told that there have been a large number of increases in the various branches of the Department since 1938.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] placed in the RECORD a table of the total appropriations by sessions of Congress from the year 1873 until the present year. That table, Mr. President, I suggest should be examined not only by Members of Congress but by the public at large. It was presented June 1 of this year—and it is found at page 6511 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I submit this table indicates the dangerous, if not ruinous, trend that has been followed by our Government in the matter of appropriations and expenditures during the past decade.

I may say that not in 1 year, from 1873 down to and including 1916, did the total appropriations for the operations of the entire Government equal the amount of money that was recently appropriated for the Department of Agriculture alone. The entire expenditures of the Federal Government prior to 1909 never totaled $1,000,000,000 in any year. In 30 years the expenditures have increased by more than 10 times; and, as I believe, before we adjourn, the appropriations for the next fiscal year will exceed $11,000,000,000, and commitments and authorizations will be made aggregating between three and five billion dollars. Yet, I find no spirit of opposition to these mounting expenditures that is sufficient to restrain the appropriations. Motions have been made from time to time to reduce the appropriations 10 percent, or 5 percent. Only a few Senators voted for those motions.

I wish to pay tribute to the President for the attack which he made upon expenditures when he first came to the White House. He recommended a reduction of 25 percent in governmental expenditures, and both Houses of Congress enthusiastically supported that wise and statesmanlike movement of the President. I wish the spirit of moderation—if I may use that expression—which would lead to reduction in expenditures had characterized the executive departments since that time. The reverse has been true, however; and an examination of the hearings before the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate will show that most witnesses in favor of increased appropriations were from the Government departments. The itch for greater power and the demand for larger appropriations are deplorable, and constitute a danger to the Republic.

As stated, the figures presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] indicate that the expenditures for the fiscal year just ending—1939—amount to nearly eleven and one-half billion dollars. This staggering figure is beyond visualization. I can only say that it took no more than this sum—eleven and one-half billion dollars—to pay the expenses of the Federal Government for 9 years between 1909 and 1917, inclusive. Less than three decades ago our Government could operate for 9 years on the amount of money that is now being expended in 1 year. The expenditures have steadily increased since 1932, enormous as they seemed to us in those days, to the point that at the present time the yearly appropriations are nearly equal to the total expenditures of the Government during the 2 darkest years of the depression, 1933 and 1934, when the appropriations were $5,785,252,641 and $7,692,447,339, respectively. How long can this profligate spending continue without the appearance of the dreaded and inevitable result, national bankruptcy?

I know that appeals for economy meet with but slight favor in this Chamber, and probably with but little success in the country. It is not difficult to conjecture what will be the result of this orgy of expenditures; we know that every nation which has abandoned sound economic and fiscal policies has met with disaster and frequently with general bankruptcy.

Mr. President, where is the power that can stop this torrent of demands for Federal money? Only a few days ago an important person, in decrying our reckless spending and the terrific debt that is being created, was critically questioned, and some Senators indicated that he was only talking "generalities." It is not an unimportant "generality" when attention is challenged to these enormous expenditures and the danger of national bankruptcy. It will not be a case of "generalities" later on, when pay day comes, and when the foundations of our economic, industrial, and political systems have been undermined.

These questions are illustrative of the dilemma into which this Nation has fallen. I believe there is general alarm among many persons over the increasing enormity of our Federal debt—a debt which cannot help but grow in the face of annual expenditures which are more than double the annual income. Thoughtful persons are beginning to realize that we cannot continue operating under such an unsound and dangerous fiscal policy. There must be an end. My hope is that the end will be in the courage of Congress to stem the tide of disaster which I believe is threatening our country, and that the end will not be inflation and national bankruptcy.

Any person who is ready to admit that the Congress cannot reduce expenditures must be ready to face the ultimate and inevitable end which must come to a nation or to a person following a course of spending greatly in excess of income.

Unfortunately, many of the people are bewildered by reason of this situation, and their bewilderment produces fear and distrust, which lead to resentment, anger, and animosity. It has been said that the world is still suffering from the shock of the World War—that its horrors are still before nations as a frightful specter. Nations are oppressed by burdens which the war imposed, and people are bowed beneath debts, national and international, and they are suffering from disorders, mental and physical, which can be cured alone by peace and the reign of law and justice.

I need not advert to the fact, with which Senators are familiar, that not alone is our Nation bowed beneath the burden of debt but most nations are in a similar situation. Capital levies have been made in some lands, and more will be made in the future if the present madness is not abated; the earnings of the people will be absorbed in the processes of war, or preparations for war; and the movements for peace, for education, and for the resuscitation of industry will be postponed to meet the emergencies, so-called, and the exigencies of the war psychosis which unfortunately controls too many people of the world.

Moreover, as I have indicated, that cry will be carried across the seas and will impel other nations to increase their burdens and to make larger preparations for war than they otherwise would be willing to make.

Mr. President, it is my opinion that the enormous Federal appropriations of the Government not only for military purposes but for other activities are largely the product of active propagandists and constant pressure by Federal departments, bureaus, and agencies. We know that representatives of the War and Navy Departments, as well as other Federal agencies, avail themselves of opportunities to arouse the people to urge increased Federal appropriations. We know that officials and important figures in various departments visit communities and States and impress upon the people the importance of the work which they have done and the necessity of increased appropriations for their respective fields of activity.

The great expansion of the Federal Government and its intrusion into fields of private endeavor has increased the army which annually invades Washington and multiplies the demands for Federal appropriations.

Let me say, by way of parenthesis, that the criterion by which the success of legislators is not infrequently measured is the extent to which they can aid in securing Federal appropriations for the benefit of their constituents. The philosophy of the fathers—of service—which guided the American people in the early days of the Republic, has given way to a new philosophy of dependence upon contributions, subsidies, and, in common language, "hand-outs" from the Federal Treasury. No longer do the people ask, as they did in the days when the patriotic fathers struggled for their independence and the establishment of this Republic, "How can we serve?" The question too often is now, "How much can we and our communities obtain from the Federal Government?" This philosophy, Mr. President, not only weakens the people but it is not consonant with the precepts of Christianity.

Mr. President, the demands for Federal appropriations are, in my opinion, a challenge to the patriotism of the people, and certainly a challenge to the executive and legislative branches of the Government. As indicated, demands for appropriations are increasing, and the Federal Government is urged to take over duties and responsibilities which belong to individuals and to the States and their subdivisions. The spirit of independence is being undermined, and the people are being taught that the Federal Government must assume the part of a benignant father. Our dual form of government is being undermined, and there is a subsidence of that fine spirit of individualism which is essential to the maintenance of our form of government.

The indebtedness of the Federal Government has reached stupendous heights, and yet we are told that the limits of $45,000,000,000 of indebtedness must be removed. I observed in an article a few days ago that the suggestion was being made by representatives of the Government that expenditures amounting to $75,000,000,000 might be required. Measures have been passed, and are being considered, which confer upon the Federal Government much of the authority and power which accompany a totalitarian state. It is being urged that the Government take over and control public education; public health; provide pensions for all; construct homes for the people; take over and operate the railroads and all public utilities; determine what crops each person shall produce; regulate commodities, and, indeed, regiment business, communities, and individuals.

These tendencies find expression in totalitarian states and are reminiscent, as I stated in the Senate yesterday, of Hitlerism.

When the pillars of constitutional government are weakened they may be broken, and when they are broken, the torrential flood of communism, nazi-ism, or powerful centralized authority will menace orderly government and democratic government.

There is no promise of immortality for this Nation, and an examination of the history of nations which have perished justifies the epitaph—if one were written—"They perished by their own folly and their centralization of political and economic power in the hands of the government."

Unfortunately there is great public apathy with respect to the encroachments of the Federal Government; its usurpations; its impingements upon the rights of individuals and of local communities. As I have indicated, the demands for the maintenance of local self government and for economy, are no longer heard or, if made, are ignored. If warnings are sounded of the dangers of impaired credit, of inflation, they also are ignored and indeed are too often treated with derision. The result, of course, is increased expenditures; mounting deficits; bonded indebtedness, and the torrential floods of appropriations, and increased burdens of taxation upon the people.

There was a time when economy was a virtue; when public spending was deplored; when criticism and, indeed, condemnation awaited those who laid heavy taxes upon the people and incurred State, municipal, or national indebtedness. Reference has been made to the example of the founders of the Republic. The philosophy of Benjamin Franklin concerning thrift and savings was approved by the States as well as by the Federal Government, and the spendthrift and the debtor—whether individual, State, or National—were looked upon with disapproval.

Political parties pledged themselevs to economy in the administration of public affairs, and in those better days counties, States, and municipalities vied with each other in maintaining their governments free of indebtedness.

As I have stated, when Congress appropriated $1,000,000,000 to meet the expenses of the Federal Government for 2 years, the Nation was shocked and the party in power criticized for its unprecedented act. But the virtues of early days seem to be forgotten and thrift and savings are not regarded as proper attributes of individuals, State or the Federal Government.

Notwithstanding the stupendous appropriations now made, there is a bill pending in the Committee on Banking and Currency which commits the Government to additional appropriations of more than $3,000,000,000, and efforts are being made, largely by Federal officials, to secure the enactment of this bill. This bill, in my opinion, should not be passed. It is unwise, unsound, and without justification.

It has been said that individualism in all that that word implies, and as it was understood in the early days, does not now exist; that it is an anachronism, and economy is a quality not commended, and possessed but by few.

I have referred to the demands made by individuals and States as well as by the National Government for appropriations. In my opinion Congress has been derelict in its duty in acceding to these demands, but the American people should know that if the credit of the Government is impaired, and the powers and authority of the States are taken over by the Federal Government, they will be the betrayers. Economy must begin in the family and the local community in the State. The sovereignty of the States, however, is being destroyed. There seems to be a mad rush from all parts of the Union to confer upon the Federal Government the crown and jewel of States' rights and individual liberty. We should not forget that debts are cruel masters and individuals, governments, and communities suffer from their scourgings. Not only the States and their political subdivisions but the Federal Government are putting on chains of bondage—bondage of debt; and individuals, corporations, and partnerships are overwhelmed with indebtedness.

The wealth of the people of the United States, by some statisticians, does not exceed $200,000,000,000, and it is estimated by others that the indebtedness of the Federal Government, the States and their political subdivisions, corporations, and individuals, exceeds that amount. There are more than 200 Federal departments, bureaus, and agencies, and several score additional will be created by this Congress.

I think a proper appraisal of the Federal indebtedness and the indebtedness of the States, and counties, and their political subdivisions, and the indebtedness of corporations, partnerships, and individuals, will show that the combined indebtedness exceeds $200,000,000,000. The States and municipalities are keeping pace with the Federal Government in the race for expenditures and the creation of additional bureaus, departments, and agencies, and, of course, in the augmentation of the number of employees.

As I have indicated, notwithstanding the heavy burdens of taxation, the deficits during the past 6 or 7 years exceed $22,000,000,000, while during the past 7 years, we have increased the Federal taxes at least 500 percent. We have increased the expenditures by from 800 to 1,000 percent; also increased the public debt from $22,000,000,000 in 1933 to more than $40,000,000,000.

During the time this administration has been in power, by heavy taxation we have wrung from the people approximately $32,000,000,000, and, notwithstanding that tremendous burden upon them, we have deficits of considerably more than $26,000,000,000.

It is obvious that the appropriations for the next fiscal year will reach the stupendous sum indicated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] of approximately $11,500,000,000, with authorizations of approximately $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 additional. I repeat that a continuation of these expenditures and inflation, with all its evils, will beset our pathway.

For years I have protested against governmental extravagance, and when the Republicans were in power I criticized many of their policies and rejoiced when the Democratic Party, in its national platform of 1932, declared for economies.

Mr. President, as I indicated a few moments ago, I heartily approved the recommendation of the President when he announced a reduction of 25 percent in the expenses of the Government, and I hoped that the platform of the party would be rigidly adhered to. But, in my opinion, it has been departed from.

I have deplored measures which invaded the rights of the States, and which embarked the Federal Government upon policies—many of which were socialistic—and some of which, in my opinion, seriously interfered with the rights of individuals and invaded the rights of sovereign States.

The time has come for economy—and still more economy—but I fear we will have none—for a return to genuine democratic government, to policies which defend the rights of the States, and withdraw the hand of the Federal Government and its army of employees and bureaus from the lives, conduct, and activities of individuals; and it is also a time for our Government to take the lead to bring about a reduction in the military armaments of the world.

Mr. President, I know the bill will pass. My friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] stated to me yesterday that it would pass. I knew that. But I am not to be deterred from expressing my dissent simply because important and leading members of my party favor measures which I regard to be unsound, unwise, and in some instances unconstitutional.

I am opposed to this bill. It is a further step in the direction of socialism. Notwithstanding the asseverations which may be made, it will cost the Government millions of dollars, and will lead the way to further demands for larger extensions of socialistic policies, and the invasion still more of individual liberty and the rights of sovereign States and their political subdivisions.

I yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 1558) to provide for the acceptance of an easement with respect to certain lands in New Mexico, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, Mr. HILL, Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT, and Mr. WADSWORTH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CELLER, Mr. WEAVER, and Mr. GUYER of Kansas were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3794) to establish the Kings Canyon National Park, Calif., to transfer thereto the lands now included in the General Grant National Park, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

INSURANCE OF COTTON CROP

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2635) to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send to the desk amendments which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, in line 6, after the word "commodities" it is proposed to insert the words "including tobacco"; on the same page, in line 13, after the word "cotton", to insert the words "and tobacco"; on page 2, in line 5, after the word "commodity", to insert the words "including tobacco"; in line 6, after the word "commodity", to insert the word "including tobacco"; in line 9, after the word "commodity", to insert the words "including tobacco"; in line 13, after the word "commodity", to insert the words "including tobacco"; and on page 3, in line 8, after the word "or", to strike out the word "both" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "tobacco."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I would ask that the managers of the bill accept the amendments which have been submitted in this connection, and if such acceptance be noted on the RECORD at this time I shall not speak further on the question. Otherwise, I should like to proceed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not accept the amendments. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, after everything is said and done, what is involved here is the question of being fair in this matter. I realize that we are far short of having a general crop insurance. It well may be that the answer ultimately will be to have a general crop-insurance program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think we had better have a quorum. Will the Senator yield to me in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I have previously sent to the desk an amendment which was stated by the clerk, which would include in Senate bill 2365 tobacco as an agricultural commodity to come within the Federal Crop Insurance Act. The changes suggested by the amendment are in verbiage only, but the effect necessarily is to include tobacco among the insurable crops.

I should point out that in fixing adequate premiums for the insurance, the amount thereof will be payable either in cash or in the commodity itself. The basis for the amount of the premium is fairly well establishable on the basis of information already in the hands of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator the extent to which the Department of Agriculture has made a survey of this question so far as tobacco is concerned?

Mr. DANAHER. I cannot adequately answer the question as to the extent to which a survey has been made with reference to tobacco. However, our agricultural economists certainly are in possession of full information with reference to the tobacco situation.

In the Connecticut Valley we are flooded year in and year out by the Connecticut River. Tobacco farmers within the scope of the river at flood stage have been absolutely wiped out time and again. No adequate effort has been made to arrest the flood condition which prevails annually in the Connecticut Valley. The net result is that 3 and sometimes 4 years are required for the tobacco farmer to make the equivalent of 1 year's income for himself. He is constantly operating at a loss; he is constantly behind.

The bill includes losses due to floods. Because it does, and because the inclusion of tobacco will do no more than fairly measure the amount of loss to the farmers in Hartford County, Conn., particularly—and I dare say in other tobacco-raising sections of the country—the least we can do for them, so long as we have no general crop insurance, is to include them in the pending bill.

I offered the amendment with the request and in the hope that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] would accept it. He feels that he cannot do so in justice to his own position. Of course, I respect his position and his attitude in that connection. However, I respectfully ask that the Senate reverse the attitude of the Senator from Alabama and support me in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I can appreciate the interest and concern of the Senator from Connecticut in having tobacco included in the bill. I hope his desire to see tobacco included is evidence of his belief in a general system of crop insurance.

We have previously had before us the question of what commodities could properly be included in the legislation.

When the bill insuring wheat was brought before the Senate, amendments were prepared including cotton, tobacco, rice, and corn among the basic commodities. Amendments were also proposed to enlarge the scheme of crop insurance so that it would be possible to insure fruits, vegetables, and crops which are subjected to unusual hazards. In some years there is a complete crop failure in certain crops.

After a rather full discussion of that bill on the floor of the Senate it was decided that it was much better to proceed in an orderly way, and not to endanger the success of the entire program of crop insurance by embracing commodities with respect to which the Department had not had an opportunity thoroughly to study the various phases of the question and determine whether or not it was possible to have a plan of crop insurance, or what premiums should be charged.

This plan of insurance is unique in one respect, in that the premiums are paid in kind. They are paid in the crop which is insured. Therefore the question of storage is involved, as to whether or not a commodity is adapted to being stored from year to year or for several years, so as to leave available a reserve with which to pay any losses that might be incurred by reason of crop damage, whether brought about by flood, drought, or the attacks and ravages of insects.

I am as much interested in having tobacco insured as is any other Member of the Senate. My State produces a large quantity of tobacco. However, I think it is best for us to proceed in an orderly way, and not jeopardize the entire program of crop insurance by setting a precedent by including tobacco, thereby opening the door to amendments which would bring in other crops and other commodities with respect to which no study has been made, and with respect to which the Department of Agriculture is not prepared to say that it has a definite program which would enable the Department to insure such crops. There would be no end to it if the Senate should set the precedent now and include tobacco. Much as I would desire to see tobacco included among the crops insured, there would be no way to say to the fruit and vegetable producers, "You cannot come in."

I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I understand the Department of Agriculture is now working up all the data relative to tobacco, and that it is contemplated that tobacco will be the next crop that will be brought into the program of crop insurance; but, in my judgment, if the amendment now proposed were adopted, it would be very unwise and, in fact, might jeopardize the entire program which I regard as being fundamentally sound and which holds a great deal of hope to the farmers of the country. The system is a cooperative system; it does not involve any huge expense on the Government of the United States; but it is fundamentally sound, and I hope that the Senate will reject the amendment and not vote tobacco into the bill, because we desire to proceed in an orderly way, and only after the Department has carefully investigated the different phases of the question and are satisfied that the proposals which they bring to the Congress stand on solid ground.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. It happened that in 1937 I was a member of the subcommittee which had under consideration the question of crop insurance and heard the testimony of a large number of witnesses. I appreciate the fact that, representing as I do a State which produces no tobacco but which does produce wheat, what I may say could be inferred to be more or less seifish. However, in discussing the matter and in considering the matter, I want to avoid being selfish about it, if possible.

The crop insurance question was considered in 1923 by a committee of this body. A program was discussed until 1937. It happened that in the special session I was the one who introduced the crop-insurance title to the agricultural act. It is purely a business proposition, and the desire to limit the crops included in the program until such time as ample study can be made concerning them is actuated only by a desire to make a success of the crop-insurance plan.

Early in the 1920's there were a number of private insurance companies in this country that entered into the crop-insurance business. They sold insurance on various crops in different sections of the country. Without exception those efforts upon the part of private insurance companies failed. They failed for the reason that the insurance companies did not have sufficient data and sufficient statistics upon which to base the premiums which they charged or the penalties which they paid. Those failures were presented in detail to the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and, in a number of instances, the officers of the companies which had engaged in an effort to sell crop insurance earlier appeared before the subcommittee and gave their testimony. They were, without exception, of the belief that if we intended to make a success of crop insurance, taking into consideration the experiences they had had, we would have to proceed slowly and carefully, and with a conservative attitude toward it, with the idea that in each particular instance we would not attempt to write into the law a provision for crop insurance unless and until the Department of Agriculture had secured sufficient data so that they would have their actuarial tables worked out and so that they would at least be reasonably sure of making a success of the program.

There is not any difference from an insurance point of view between writing insurance upon a crop against hail or flood or a blight of some kind than there is writing insurance on a barn or upon glass or upon machinery or anything else. It is simply a task of ascertaining what the experience has been over a period of years, knowing what the averages have been, and writing upon that basis.

It happened that the Department of Agriculture had the data on wheat at the time the bill was presented, and it was for that reason, and that reason alone, that wheat was accepted and selected as being the one crop upon which we would try the insurance plan. The experience in the case of wheat has been ascertained in 1938 and thus far in 1939, although we have had practically no experience in 1939.

I went to the Senator from Alabama yesterday to ascertain whether or not the Department was of the opinion that it had made a sufficient study as to cotton in order to assure themselves that they would have a reasonable chance of making a success if cotton were included along with wheat. If they had not made such a study, I would now be opposed to the inclusion of cotton. However, the Department now says that they have statistics in reference to cotton which are comparable with those which they had in reference to wheat when Congress passed the wheat insurance law. If they go into a field in which they do not have sufficient statistical data, and, as a result, they have the same experience that the private companies had, and the plan shall be a failure, it will mean that the whole crop insurance program of the Government will fail.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I gladly yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator know when the acreage-allotment program was in force that all the acreage was known, the acreage was apportioned on the allotment basis; the average yield was known, and the amount that had been produced over a period of years was known? All these economic facts and factors are now in the possession of the Department.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The statement the Senator makes insofar as it refers to that one factor is correct; but there is nothing in the experience which the Department gained as a result of acreage allotments to enable them to know when and on what occasions and in what territory the blight, floods, insect pests, or drought come. Those are factors which they must take into consideration in determining the premiums which will be charged for crop insurance. Those are factors which they have to consider. It took them a year and a half, I will say to the Senator, to obtain the data with regard to wheat. They started, as I recall, in the middle of 1936 to make the study concerning wheat, and it was not until the middle of 1937 that they had completed the study with regard to wheat. It takes them about a year and a half of study to obtain the statistics which they need on those particular subjects to correlate them with the statistics they have as a result of their reduction of acreage and curtailment program.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Under section 508 subsection (a) there is a provision to the effect that—

> The Board may condition the issuance of such insurance in any county or area upon a minimum amount of participation in a program of crop insurance formulated pursuant to this title.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me say that if the Senator had been in a wheat area and had gone into certain counties where that particular section has been used, he would not be asking that it be used in reference to tobacco in his State. There have been complaints about it. I will say that when the wheat program started it was not popular with the wheat farmers. They did not understand it. It was merely a matter to them of selling them insurance. I was at a meeting last fall attended by a number of wheat farmers—75 or 100 of them—and I remember one man getting up and objecting that in his county that particular section of the law had been used, and it was the subject of very great criticism. He could not see why it was that in his county that particular section should be put in use while in another county it was not put in use. I do not think the Senator, if he had practical experience with that section where the insurance plan has been in operation, would want that particular section to be availed of, because it has resulted in unpopularity.

If the Senator from Connecticut wants to do the way the Senator from Florida did last year, it seems to me there can be no objection to it. I do not know what the attitude of the Senator from Alabama would be upon the subject, but last year the Senator from Florida wanted to include fruits and vegetables. No Senator here is more interested in seeing fruits and vegetables put under crop insurance than am I. We have, if I may boast a little, the most and best apples in the United States in the State of Washington, and I should like to see them under the crop-insurance law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Almost the best.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. We will leave that to the trade. I wanted to see fruits and vegetables put under the act. However, the Department did not have the statistics in reference to fruits and vegetables, and they were not able and knew they would not be able successfully to carry out this program with reference to those commodities. So I vigorously opposed the Senator from Florida in his effort to have fruits and vegetables included. However, as I remember, the Senate adopted a resolution which directed the Department of Agriculture immediately to proceed with their studies of fruits and vegetables. So far as I am concerned—I cannot speak for the Senator from Alabama—I would have no objection to an amendment by the Senator from Connecticut which would direct the Department of Agriculture to proceed with investigations and studies of tobacco as expeditiously as they possibly can.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has just stated that such a study is now in progress. That statement is in accordance with my information.

Mr. RUSSELL. A study is now being conducted of all basic commodities, and I understand it is contemplated by the Department that tobacco will be the next one on which studies will be concluded.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator from Georgia. I did not know he placed tobacco in that category.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad the Senator did. I do not oppose the inclusion of tobacco. I favor it when the time comes and the Department is ready.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. So far as I am concerned, I think the possibilities under crop insurance afford the greatest chance of success of any agricultural problem. While I have been here and have sat on many committees I never have heard testimony in reference to any subject which was so satisfactory as that submitted upon this particular program. It had been carefully worked out, carefully studied, and carefully thought out; but it seems to me it would be a very serious and a very dangerous mistake to extend it on further into fields where the Department officials do not have the statistics and do not have the data, and thereby possibly endanger the whole program; and I know that no Member of this body wants to have that done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the capital structure of the Crop Insurance Corporation, or bureau, or whatever it is?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is so long since that question was up that I cannot give the exact figures. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] says he can.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the total amount of capital authorized by the original act was $100,000,000. However, only $20,000,000 of that amount has ever been utilized. Only that much stock has been issued.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was this capital structure created in contemplation that it was essential for wheat insurance alone?

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand it was to apply to all the crops that were insured, because the Department is not asking for any increase either in the amount of the total authorization or in the amount which has been allocated for that purpose in this legislation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from Michigan will remember that one occasion when former Senator Pope, of Idaho, had this matter up, the Senator from Michigan raised the same question, and I came over on that side of the Chamber and we worked out a little amendment—I do not remember the language of it—which limited the capital structure to the amount necessary for whatever crop they were working on.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes. What I had in my mind was that if capital structure of a given amount is essential for crop insurance for wheat alone, for example, it is a rather sad economic adventure to proceed to expand the coverage without expanding the capital.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. As I have said, that was a year ago last fall. My recollection from that time was that we provided for sufficient capital to take care of other crops besides wheat, with the understanding that the authorities were going to ask only for the issuance of an amount sufficient to provide the necessary capital for wheat alone.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If there is an exceedingly bad year, from the standpoint of an insurable risk, I suppose the deficit is chargeable to the capital structure. Is that correct?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; that is correct. It is just an insurance proposition. The Government has organized an insurance company. That is all we have done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In an exceptionally bad year from the insurable risk standpoint, might not the loss easily reach $100,000,000, even on wheat itself, or is that too large a figure?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I cannot remember the figures. I know that we set up a capital structure for more than wheat. I know the authorities said to us that they were going to use only a sufficient amount to provide the necessary reserve in accordance with the amount of insurance they figured on writing on wheat.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the Senator thinks the capital structure at the present time is sufficient to cover tobacco also?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Without going into that particular question specifically, I should think so; yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not the appropriated capital structure.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The authorized capital structure.

To clear up my answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan, I think he understands, but I want to make certain, that while I think the authorized capital of $100,000,000 would be sufficient to take care of tobacco, too, the appropriated capital of $20,000,000 would not be sufficient. In other words, it would take an additional appropriation, putting more money into the corporation, to meet the requirement of capital reserve if tobacco were included.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is because the $20,000,000 quota is considered essential for the purposes of wheat insurance?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does that mean, then, that we shall have to make an additional appropriation in order to take care of the new cotton adventure?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I assume so; yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And what will that be?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not know. I have not had anything to do with that.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know that I could answer that question on the basis of any definite information I have; but it is my understanding the wheat insurance has worked so well the first year that the same $20,000,000 which has been heretofore appropriated will be the reserve for the cotton insurance contemplated by the pending bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator means the net loss has been so low?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. There has been no net loss, as I understand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; there has been. It is now conceded that there has been or will be some sort of loss.

Mr. RUSSELL. The last figures I saw showed that the premiums which had been collected greatly exceeded the claims that it was anticipated would be approved.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My interpretation of the memorandum submitted by the able Senator from Alabama today was that there will be a loss of some degree.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not necessarily, as I stated to the Senator. Apparently, it is about an even break. Speaking of having collected 7,000,000 bushels and having paid out only 1,000,000 bushels, the memorandum says that on the other hand Mr. Johnson is aware of the fact that the entire 7,000,000 bushels, and probably an amount in addition thereto, may be required. In other words, it seems to be a matter on the border line. There is no positive adverse balance.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And that, of course, is without counting administrative costs.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to say, so far as I am concerned, that if the Department's figures show that they needed $20,000,000 as a reserve for wheat, offhand I do not approve of the theory that merely because they have not had losses during a period of a year and a half they should not increase the reserve if we should include cotton under the provisions of the act.

Any insurance company must have a proper reserve. Such companies cannot go upon the basis that from year to year, merely because they do not have losses, there will not be any. A large percentage of failures of insurance companies comes when they have a good year, and pay out dividends to their stockholders. I do not think the Department officials have had sufficient experience in a year and a half to say that their original figure of $20,000,000 should now be modified upon the basis of that experience. I think they should ask for additional appropriations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, I agree with the Senator. It also seems to me they have not had sufficient experience to say they are justified in expanding the experiment into any additional commodity.

What will be the increased administrative expense as a result of the expansion of the insurance into the cotton field?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is a question which the Senator must submit to the Senator from Alabama. I have not had anything to do with this particular piece of legislation; and, as a matter of fact, it was not until yesterday that I started to go into the particular question of whether or not the Department had made the basic studies prior to the time they approved this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wonder if we might have an answer to the question from the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the actual outlay in the wheat program was slightly above $4,000,000. It is estimated, however, that the cotton program will cost somewhat more, because there are twice as many cotton farmers as wheat farmers, and the Department figures that they should certainly cover the expenses with the requested amount of $6,000,000. Five and a half million dollars were appropriated under the wheat program. They did not spend it all; but the Senator, I am sure, will bear in mind that the first year the expenses will be greater than thereafter, because they have to set up the machinery; they have to sell the idea, and do the other things which necessarily accompany introducing a new program of this sort and putting it into effect in a wide way.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that is fair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So, doubtless, the expenses of cotton insurance the first year will be more than the expenses of wheat insurance last year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me ask the Senator a further question, and then I shall subside.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to furnish the Senator any information I can.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture which the able Senator submitted this morning for the RECORD, I notice he suggests that the administrative expenses in connection with this experiment should be a general charge on the Treasury, rather than a charge against the insurance operation itself. Is it contemplated, in the development and expansion of the crop-insurance plan, that that theory will be pursued, and that the administrative expense hereafter is to be a general Treasury charge, rather than a charge against the insurance premiums?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can speak only for myself, but personally I favor that plan. I think the Government can well afford to make that contribution, because, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] today, the insurance will in many cases relieve the Treasury from direct relief obligations resulting from loss of crops.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What actually happens as the law now stands? Is administrative expense charged to premiums?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; there is a straight appropriation from the Treasury to support this program, to aid farmers in carrying out the crop-insurance program. As stated before—and it is reasonable—if the premiums are fixed upon a sound actuarial basis, the Government will save money, considering the amount of money the Government will pay out to farmers whose distress is occasioned by the loss of crops. If this plan goes into wide operation, the farmers pay it in a mutual way, in a cooperative way, instead of the Treasury paying it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, the enactment of the bill and the expansion of crop insurance to cotton contemplates an additional appropriation of six million or eight million dollars for administrative expenses?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is as provided in the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to conclude discussing the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut with one further observation. I think he will find, as anyone else will find, in connection with the failure in the past of insurance companies, which were in the nature of casualty companies, rather than those which limit themselves exclusively to life insurance, the greatest factor in such failures has been the extension of the field of activity of those companies to the coverage of different classes or kinds of risks concerning which the companies had no experience and no proper data.

Frequently insurance companies have been formed in this country and have started out, for example, as automobile insurance companies, and have made a complete success. They limited their activities to the one line. Then they became ambitious, and wanted to furnish coverage to something else, and the first thing they knew, while they had made a success of the one subject in which they specialized, they made a complete failure when they attempted to extend themselves, and the result was that the company folded up, and was unable to pay the losses which were sustained.

I do not want this governmental insurance operation to undergo that sort of an experience. It is only a matter of time, if we make a success of the first steps, before there will be a coverage of all kinds of crops. I am anxious that that time shall come as quickly as possible, but I do not want to endanger that possibility by having a failure because of too rapid extension at the present time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one further question?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has made an intimate study of this problem, and has a very well sustained opinion respecting it, and I have great respect for his opinion. Let me ask him, when the experiment was started in respect to wheat, did he anticipate that 1 year's experience would suffice to determine whether or not the venture was sound and practical, and susceptible of expansion, or did he anticipate within his own contemplation of the problem that a substantially more dependable experience than that would precede any extension of the system?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will have to answer the question in two ways. When I knew that there was to be a possible extension of the program to cotton this year, I felt that it was too soon. I felt that we should have 5 years' experience before extending the plan to other crops, and that during that period of time the basic studies would be made, so that the Department could extend rather rapidly into other fields. I will say, however, that the few men who are connected with the organization in charge of this activity, and who have made the studies, are as careful and as conservative men as I have seen during the time I have been here. As I stated a few moments ago, I never heard such satisfactory proof presented to a committee as was presented by this group when they presented the original wheat-crop-insurance proposition, and if they feel now that they can extend the plan to cotton, I am inclined to give credit to what they say; although I frankly confess that I thought it would take at least 3 years' experience with wheat before we extended it to any other crop.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his frankness and for his usual conservatism in dealing with a problem.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is very delightful for me at times to be on the conservative side in argument with my friends on the other side of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, for many years I have been deeply interested in the subject of crop insurance. The inauguration of such a plan is a "noble experiment." Anyone who approaches the subject for discussion must understand that it is not possible to work out a formula with an experience of only 1 year.

I have just reviewed the record and find that it was in 1922 that I offered a resolution for a study of the question of crop insurance. I was made chairman of the subcommittee to which the resolution was referred, and we gave nearly a year to the consideration of the matter. No action was taken on the resolution, because at that time we thought that the burden in the way of paying premiums was probably more than the farmers could bear. Our theory was that it should be a Government undertaking only so far as the Government aiding in the inauguration of the system was concerned. As I recall, the subcommittee did not at that time agree with the chairman of the committee, and the matter was dropped until 1937, when it was renewed on the floor of the Senate by Senator Pope, at which time I discussed the subject at length. I do not intend to review the statements I made at that time.

I am in hearty accord with any crop-insurance experiment which is based upon solid, substantial ground, and which can be sustained by reason and experience. I think we all realize that there is only one among all human activities which does not carry insurance to cover its risks, and that is the pursuit of farming. I cannot conceive of a manufacturer, or a banker, or a businessman, or a home owner, long continuing in his occupation if he did not carry insurance. The farmer is subjected to more risks than are faced by those engaged in any other occupation. I have had some practical experience in that line, having been chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for many years. I have heard testimony as to the many things which may happen to the farmer, and I have reached the conclusion that something must be done along the line of insuring the farmer against the risks he encounters.

I did not entirely favor this approach to the problem. I did submit to it, because I was in a position where I either must submit or fail in my effort to cooperate in the approach being made. I think that crop insurance, to be effective, must be based upon scientific data gathered through a period of years by the Department of Agriculture, and the application must be along the line of the philosophy and theory of the old insurance companies in issuing policies.

The pending bill, which is similar to a bill originally offered by Senator Pope, attempts to provide for the payment of a premium in kind on the commodity that is being insured, and I call attention to the point made by the able Senator from Michigan that the cost of operation is thrown upon the Treasury of the United States. That is a weakness, because in its nature it is a subsidy. I think the farmer who sustains a loss, and because of that loss receives a benefit payment, should pay the cost of administration. To me, the failure to put the burden upon the farmer is a weakness in the whole plan. I tolerate it only, in a mental sense, because I am unable to prescribe a different remedy.

I am willing to go along without complaint for a few years to see if a plan cannot be worked out whereby the insurance, whether it is paid in cash or commodities, shall pay the costs of administration, as costs of the administration of other insurance are paid by those who carry the insurance.

Mr. President, that is the general feeling I have, because I know that there should be something in the nature of recoupment for the losses the farmer suffers as a result of insect pests and plant diseases, changes in climatic conditions, the inability of the weatherman to prophesy what may occur, and other visitations which come suddenly upon him. That philosophy is one to which I am wholly and faithfully wedded.

I do not feel any comfort in attempting at this time, or at any time, to agree wholly with the proposal. I do not want to project the Government into the insurance business. I do not want to project the Treasury of the United States into carrying this load. I know from experience and from study and from some exploration into this subject that the farmer can well afford to employ a plan, through the aid of the Department of Agriculture, whereby he will carry all the load, and I am sure he is willing to do it.

Inasmuch as we have appropriated $20,000,000 out of the capital set-up of $100,000,000 for this noble experimentation, I am willing to go along, and I think the plan should be expanded so far as commodities are concerned.

I stated here a few years ago that one of the great objections I had to the A. A. A. Act was that it was limited to five so-called major crops. If one would study figures as to gross income, he would find that in none of the agricultural commodities given a preferential status does the gross income come anywhere near that of other major farm projects. We took wheat, cotton, corn, tobacco, and rice, and left out the large major farm projects, namely, the livestock industry, the dairy industry, the poultry industry, the fruit and vegetable industries, the gross income of each of which exceeds that of cotton and wheat many times. The income received from rice is insignificant by comparison.

So, Mr. President, this proposal should not be limited to wheat. We have done enough for the wheat farmer. It should not be limited to cotton. We have done enough for the cotton farmer. It should apply, like the A. A. A., without discrimination and without favoritism. I shall have something to say upon that in the future.

Mr. President, I think we have all been patient in dealing with the farm problem. This year, when the parity-payment question came up in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I did not like the sum that was provided for parity payments, but I did say that I should oppose parity payment unless there was an increase in the appropriation under section 32 to take care of the surplus commodities mentioned in the A. A. A. measure.

Mr. President, I do not wish to stray far from the pending proposition. I come to this statement, which I think is an answer to the statement made by the able Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], who has shown an interest in this question, and the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who is the author of the bill. The capital structure is $100,000,000. That should be increased if other agricultural commodities are to be included under the provisions of the law.

Mr. President, to my right is my friend and able colleague, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], a State which raises a superior quality of tobacco used, I think, for outer wrappers of cigars. The producers of tobacco in his State want to come within the provisions of the crop-insurance act, and they should be permitted to do so. There is nothing in the proposal, Mr. President, that would impair the capital stock if they came in. The Department of Agriculture is not compelled arbitrarily to act and to take risks upon tobacco unless after a consideration and exploration and study they believe that it is an insurable crop and should be covered by the provisions of the act.

I do not think the producers of any crop should take upon themselves to say that they exclusively should be insured. I do not think the cotton farmer should come in and share with the wheat farmer and then say, "No others should come in, because we do not think that they are suitable company." I think that is not a fair way of looking at the statute, in view of the fact that the premium is not wholly paid by the farmer, but the cost of operations is paid from the Treasury of the United States with money which belongs to everyone.

Mr. President, from experience that I have had as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, I have no doubt that there is ample data on file in the Department of Agriculture which would indicate to the Department and its experts in a very short time whether it is feasible to insure the tobacco producers. I know it was testified back in 1922 in the special committee of which I was chairman, that the Department of Agriculture had this data. How profound is this data? Acreage is to be considered, as well as the average yield over a period, we will say, of 10 years. Those two factors constitute the major factors in determining whether a crop is practically insurable.

There are side matters such as frost, drought, excessive moisture, plant and insect pests which are to be considered. Data are attainable for all those matters and are now in the possession of the Department of Agriculture, and I have no doubt that the experts in that Department would say in answer to my statement that they could in a very short time determine the feasibility of carrying coverage on tobacco.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I wanted to add briefly, if I might, to the Senator's able argument, that the tobacco growers in New England face one serious hazard against which they themselves cannot guard. Some precautionary measures might be taken against insects and some other forms of hazard, but we suffer a great deal of destruction of tobacco from hail in New England. I wish to suggest that consideration for attention of the able Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I may state my views on that, and it will only take a moment, if the Senate will bear with me.

A number of experiments were made, particularly in the Northwestern States of North and South Dakota, Kansas, and Nebraska, regarding farm insurance away back in what we call the eighties. Mutual companies undertook to issue insurance, and they all failed. They limited their coverage to losses by hail. Representatives of a New York insurance company, the name of which escapes me at the moment, came before our committee some time ago, and we found that they did not possess sufficient data to justify a continuance of that program.

At that time an expert in the Department of Agriculture stated that hail is an unusually difficult hazard to insure against, but I am happy to say that now there are three large insurance companies which are successfully carrying hail insurance. So even now, Mr. President, hazards of that form have been protected against by insurance.

Let me appeal to the very able Senator from Alabama, with whom we have all cooperated in his many efforts to aid the cotton producer. I think it would be fair of him to open up his heart and permit inclusion of this amendment in the bill. The Government could well afford to take care of the cost of administration of tobacco as well as corn and wheat. It would cause no impairment, in my opinion, of the capital structure of this corporation, and I can see no reason why anyone should attempt to close the gates against any agricultural product and keep it from entering this very hopeful field of experimentation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not know of any more far-reaching legislation than that of crop insurance, which was inaugurated with the insurance program for the wheat crop. I remember that the former able Senator from Idaho, Senator Pope, was a very strong proponent of that legislation, and the very able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who has just spoken so well, and I think in so timely a manner, has himself been an ardent advocate of crop insurance. In my own feeble way since I have had the privilege of being here I have taken advantage of every opportunity to give encouragement to such a proposal.

In my State, of course, we are primarily interested in fruits and vegetables, and in those crops particularly upon which the hazards of the weather fall with unusual severity. A good many years ago there occurred a freeze in Florida, which was unusual. It was a rather severe freeze, and meant a loss of millions of dollars to the citrus growers of that State. If there should be a repetition of that freeze, I venture to say that it would bankrupt a large part of the citrus industry of the State. The same thing may be said with respect to the vegetable crop.

Those engaged in it plant their crops, and, of course, anticipate that there will be, sometimes, as many as two or three crops a year. The man who is a large producer, who has adequate capital, can afford to lose one or even two crops if he succeeds in getting a third crop, because even then he may be able to pull out; but the little fellow who does not have very much capital upon which to operate cannot afford to lose even one crop without perhaps incurring an indebtedness which it is impossible for him to meet.

So, it seems to me that crops which are subject to particular hazards should be given the first consideration in a program of crop insurance.

I think we are all aware of the fact that the farmer may be said to be the greatest gambler in the country, perhaps the greatest gambler in the whole economy of the country, because he has all of his stock of goods, as it were, under the open sky, without any protection from the elements, and from the hazards particularly of inclement weather, and 99 out of 100 farmers do not have the capital to stand a loss. If they have a loss, it simply means that they go further and further and more hopelessly into debt. So if anything can be worked out that will make feasible a cooperative plan whereby, by spreading the risk, the potential loss upon each individual unit may be minimized, I know of nothing better that the Government could do.

No one is more friendly and more cordial than am I to the efforts of the able Senator from Alabama to include cotton in this program. But I have a very great sympathy for the point of view that has been expressed by the Senator from Connecticut. If we are to carry out this program I think we have now had sufficient experience to extend its scope and not even stop with tobacco. While some cotton and some tobacco are grown in my State, I do not think that the tobacco of Connecticut is more deserving of crop insurance than are the fruits and vegetables of Florida. So, as a matter of fact, it seems to me we should extend it to all crops, and make it a permissible coverage for all the farmers who are producing a given crop, perhaps upon some kind of referendum being taken whereby a minimum percentage of the farmers producing a given crop may apply for the benefits of the program. So I think I go far enough when I agree that the cotton crop should be included; but if we are to include the tobacco crop, then I should like to offer an amendment to include fruits and vegetables and a number of other commodities which are being produced in the various States of the country. What I should really prefer, Mr. President, is to see some kind of blanket proposal made, so that all crops of any sizable proportions might come under the benefits of the plan.

The Government pays only the supervision costs. It does not pay the insurance premium which is paid annually or periodically. It merely pays the cost of overhead for the operation of the plan. If the Congress is to help agriculture, it seems to me that instead of sinking money in the purchase of agricultural commodities, or even in subsidies or parities, we might better put into operation a plan of crop insurance of which the farmers themselves would bear the cost, with the exception of the overhead, which would be a relatively small contribution on the part of the Government. I dare say the total contribution for all the crops in the country would be much less than the agricultural benefits we are now paying to producers of various agricultural commodities. I dare say that in the long run the advantage to the individual farmer would be greater than the subsidies we are now paying, because if the farmer loses a crop he loses practically everything. He not only loses the prospective yield of the crop, but he loses the cost of its production. The mortgage is just a little larger, and the prospect of paying it off a little dimmer, than it otherwise would be.

So I ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] if he knows whether or not the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate is contemplating any legislation which would extend the benefits of the crop-insurance plan to other agricultural commodities as well as to wheat, and now to cotton, as he proposes to apply it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has no bill on that subject before it at this time. I have no authority to speak for the committee, because the matter has not been finally considered; but, so far as I am advised, it is well understood by those in touch with the situation that the Department of Agriculture is pursuing a course of investigation of various crops in the country looking to the possibility, step by step, of bringing them under the crop-insurance program. I think the Senator knows—I hope he does—that an active study of fruits and vegetables is being made by the Department.

A number of considerations are involved in this subject. The primary factor is the amount of premium to be charged. From an actuarial standpoint the premium must be fixed so as to cover the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the crops over a reasonable average period of years. In some cases it is rather difficult to obtain the necessary data. According to my information, the Department has been engaged in the study of a number of crops; and doubtless at the next session of Congress it will be prepared to proceed, and perhaps propose further crops to be brought under the program.

Of course, cotton is one of the basic commodities on which the Department naturally has records over a long period of years. With respect to wheat and cotton, the Department has the most accurate and dependable records on normal yields as well as crop losses.

The Senator from Oregon made a prejudicial statement to the effect that representatives of the cotton-producing States had no right to say who would be their associates. I am sure the Senator did not mean to imply that we had taken such a course. I did not hear anyone make the statement that representatives of the wheat-producing sections were choosing their associates. I will say to the Senator that I sat here during the debate and voted time after time to exclude everything but wheat. I even voted at that time to exclude cotton.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I have such affectionate regard for the able Senator from Alabama that I must make this observation: I did not agree with him when he wanted to cut out everything except wheat. I wanted to include cotton and all other commodities. I am of the same view today; I am for cotton; I am for tobacco; I am for vegetables; I am for citrus fruits; I am for everything which can properly be included in the bill. So I am not saying that the Senator is trying to exclude any one. I hope the Senator will help us get in.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator realizes that I will do so just as soon as the necessary information is available.

Mr. McNARY. I have always found the Senator to be fair, fine, and generous in every way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I appreciate the statement of the Senator.

The question is whether we shall unduly rush the Department of Agriculture, which, as has been pointed out, is proceeding with a broad, hopeful program which holds out the chance of beneficial results, and break down the program, or whether we shall go along in a deliberate way, in the way in which statesmen would be expected to approach a great new field of activity.

As everyone knows, it was agreed that we would try the experiment with wheat. The representatives of the cotton-producing States agreed to that plan, and supported it. The representatives of tobacco-producing States agreed to the plan, and supported it. I hope it will be well understood that the question is not a sectional question merely because the bill involves cotton; and it is not a sectional question merely because the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] has offered an amendment with respect to tobacco I am sure 60 percent of the tobacco produced in the country is produced in the cotton-producing States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Florida. So the question is not a sectional one. If it were, nearly all the representatives of cotton-producing States would be asking to have tobacco included.

Let us be fair with each other about this matter. Let us all understand that the opposition is not because the amendment comes from the Senator from Connecticut. That circumstance has no bearing on the question. I had hoped that in the interest of orderly procedure, looking to the probable early inclusion of tobacco in the insurance program, he would go along this time and wait until the Department comes to Congress at the next session with the information upon which it can determine, in a business-like way, the premiums which are necessary upon different commodities which are to be included in the program.

As soon as the information is available, I am ready to include tobacco. I think it ought to be included as soon as the Department is ready to administer the tobacco program. If we include tobacco, we ought to increase the appropriation. As every thoughtful man realizes, we must not merely slip it in, either to hamstring the cotton program or for other reasons. If we are to go along in an orderly way with crop-insurance legislation we can not hope to include other commodities, especially one as widespread as tobacco, covering a very large number of the States, without largely increasing the appropriation. So if the Senator wishes to include tobacco he ought to include a provision for the additional money necessary to administer the tobacco program.

I would have no objection to a tobacco program. I wish the Department were ready to include tobacco. I wish it were ready to include fruits and vegetables. However, as we all know, this is a large undertaking. Let us proceed with it in an orderly way. The representatives from cotton-producing States waited with respect to cotton. We did not start until the Department of Agriculture said it was ready with the data, information, and actuarial figures to undertake the administration of a cotton program. That is the reason why the bill is before us.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in my short experience in the Senate there is no Senator for whom I have formed a higher opinion, for his activity and loyalty to his State, than for the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER]. However, I come from a State which has had one form of crop insurance for wheat. That was hail insurance. Every company, cooperative, or corporate, engaged in the wheat crop insurance against hail went broke.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has correctly stated the situation. We have now embarked upon a plan promoted by the Government and administered by the Government for insuring the wheat crop. The plan is still in the experimental stage. The response to the program last year was very good. I should not want to say that it is bound to be successful; but I hope it will be, and I rather think it will be. I agree with the Senator from Alabama, this being an experimental matter, that we ought to go slowly and cautiously and proceed upon a sound basis. If we can make crop insurance of wheat a success, and then make it work successfully in the case of cotton, we can probably apply it successfully to tobacco, to fruits and vegetables, and to other crops.

I earnestly hope that the Senator from Connecticut will not press his amendment. I think it is premature. I have no objection, in principle, to insuring tobacco on the same basis as wheat or the same basis as cotton, but I think it is a scund and wise thing to proceed cautiously and carefully and break the ground in advance. I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, to add tobacco, will not prevail, and when the bill of the Senator from Alabama providing for an insurance upon cotton shall come to a vote, I hope the Senate will pass it. I say that without any prejudice to action at any proper time in the future with regard to insurance upon tobacco.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I want to thank those Senators who have given such earnest consideration to the problem which I have raised by my amendment. I am particularly grateful to the Senators from Washington and from Alabama for their good wishes with reference to including tobacco in the future.

Now, so that there may be no question on the particular point, I am going to offer a further amendment. With those thoughts in mind, Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Alabama to give his attention to section 2 of the bill. If he will read section 2, he will notice that it purports to strike out, and if adopted, it will strike out of section 506, subparagraph (h), of the act the words "for wheat and other agricultural commodities."

Mr. President, I am going to ask that the Senator from Alabama join with me in amending his bill by striking out section 2 of his bill so that section 506 (h) will be amended so as to read:

(h) May conduct researches, surveys, and investigations relating to crop insurance for wheat, tobacco, and other agricultural commodities.

In other words, Mr. President, I interpolate the word "tobacco" after the word "wheat" in the bill as drawn.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What does the Senator propose to do with cotton?

Mr. DANAHER. The amendment, if adopted, would include tobacco, cotton, wheat, and other agricultural commodities, whatever they may be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator restate his amendment, please?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes, sir. Suppose I step over to the Senator and indicate to him where the amendment would come in. If he will regard section 506, subparagraph (h), I simply propose to interpolate the word "tobacco" after the word "wheat." Does the Senator from Alabama agree to the language as proposed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but I desire it to cover cotton. I do not know why the researches are still to be made with reference to wheat, but, if they are to be made, I presume they should continue as to cotton.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Why does the Senator put in "tobacco" following "wheat" when the present wording includes "and other agricultural commodities"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the Senator from Connecticut to say "and other agricultural commodities."

Mr. DANAHER. In answer to the Senator from Illinois, I will say the reason is that section 2 of the bill before the Senate, Senate bill 2635, proposes to strike out all the words after the word "crop" in section 506 (h) of the original act.

Mr. LUCAS. Are we going to start to specify various crops? Why now mention tobacco specifically unless we are going into the entire group of agricultural commodities with respect to crop insurance?

Mr. DANAHER. Was the Senator present during the discussion which has been going on for the last hour?

Mr. LUCAS. I heard a part of it, and I was very much interested in the discussion, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, in answer to the Senator, let me point out that the reason Senators have given for opposing my amendment is that there are inadequate data and information available to the Department at the present time upon which to predicate rates. Because of such inadequacy, and since section 506 (h) directs that there shall be conducted researches, surveys, and investigations relating to crop insurance, I want to make sure that when next year comes around there will be such data available upon which to fix rates. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. LUCAS. It answers the question so far as the particular commodity is concerned, but if these investigations and studies are to be made, it strikes me that we should not select this one crop alone. If we are going into the crop-insurance field from every kind of angle and cover agricultural commodities generally, I do not see why tobacco should be given any preference over fruits and vegetables and, perhaps, corn and some other agricultural commodities, which are probably just as important as is tobacco.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, by way of interruption, may I point out to the Senator that the language of the existing law as now worded has been in it from the day the law was first enacted, and still we are told there is inadequate data. Consequently, it is perfectly obvious that the term "agricultural commodities" has not up to now led the Department to make the necessary investigations. That is the reason offered by Senators for rejecting the amendment proposed by me, and on that basis I want to make certain that the necessary investigations upon which to predicate rates shall be made. Therefore, I simply want to have section 506 (h) amended to include tobacco. I am willing that it be amended to include tobacco, and corn, if you like, to include tobacco and cotton, if you choose; I am willing to include tobacco and anything else, but, in any event, tobacco I want included.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I notice that in the bill now pending for discussion section 8 contemplates an increase in the existing appropriation because of the fact that cotton is to come under the law as well as wheat. Has the Senator gained any information as to how much additional appropriation would be necessary if tobacco were to be included under the act and covered?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut merely provides for a survey. On the basis of which they could come to Congress at the next session and the appropriation could then be made.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; I realize that.

Mr. DANAHER. In answer to the Senator from Florida, let me point out that my amendment in reference to the whole pending bill has been rejected, and I now seek a further amendment to make certain that we will be able to answer such questions as that of the Senator from Florida next year, for then we will have information available as to the extent of possible losses.

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad to say, in view of the fact that I did not mention tobacco awhile ago in my statement, that I am just as much in favor of crop insurance for tobacco as I am for fruits and vegetables. I am in hearty accord with the amendment the Senator from Connecticut has offered, and I join with him in the hope that by next session there will be adequate data to extend the plan to tobacco.

Mr. DANAHER. Then let me restate the situation as it is now. I have offered an amendment which will add to section 506 (h) the words "tobacco and cotton" after the word "wheat", and also to strike out section 2 from the pending bill. That is the amendment to which the Senator from Alabama has agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I beg the attention of the Senator from Florida. I was detained from the Chamber for a few moments, and I am wondering whether the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] made the same inquiry and developed the same situation in relation to fruits and vegetables as my friend, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, has made in relation to tobacco. My interest is just as keen as is the interest of the Senator from Florida in respect to bringing fruits and vegetables under the purview of this insurance plan.

I feel we are now at last moving at least in the right direction, for heretofore in the Northeastern section of the country we have felt that, so far as agriculture is concerned, we have been almost entirely forgotten. I realize that I cannot now suddenly precipitate the inclusion of a number of new commodities without probably upsetting the whole crop-insurance plan, but I do want to know before I vote for this bill, if I do, whether a really sincere move is to be made to bring vegetables and fruits and other agricultural crops or products within the scope of this insurance plan. I am anxious that fruits and vegetables shall be included, for if the plan is practical and sound financially it should not be confined only to wheat, cotton, and tobacco.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Alabama can answer more technically and accurately than can I but, as I have understood the law all along, there has been authority in the Department of Agriculture under the Wheat Crop Insurance Act to investigate other commodities as fast as they could get to it. I have been informed that they are in process of investigating at least the fruit industry, citrus fruits and perhaps apples and other commodities of that character. I have been pressing the Department of Agriculture to investigate vegetables also as rapidly as they possibly can.

The only effect of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, as I understand it, is actually to specify the word "tobacco," but the Department would be under, perhaps, no greater mandate than they previously may have been, except tobacco would be called to their attention. I agree with the Senator from New Jersey that all of us, I think, are deeply interested in this program because we feel it is so far reaching in its consequence.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator from Florida very much. I just wanted to be sure that he and I were showing the same interest and energy and forthrightness that the Senator from Connecticut is showing, because otherwise I myself should feel compelled to make a motion on behalf of other agricultural products similar to the one he has made in relation to tobacco. I am just as interested in agriculture and agricultural problems as is anyone from the South or Middle West, and New Jersey and the other States in the northeastern section of the United States are just as interested and just as important, if not more so.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, when this proposal originally came to the Senate concerning wheat, I was among those who resisted the bill. I did not think then, and I do not think now, it is a wise governmental undertaking. I am willing that the experiment shall proceed; but I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that premium payments in connection with cotton are to be made, as I understand, in cotton rather than in money. I have some doubt that the measure will be beneficial to the small farmer. I think that is equally true of tobacco. I think if this program could be beneficial to the tobacco grower, it would be to the large tobacco grower.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. MALONEY. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is in error in his understanding that premiums are necessarily to be made in kind. The law provides that they may be made either in kind or in money.

Mr. MALONEY. I wonder if the Senator can tell me whether or not any cash premiums have been paid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that the majority of the wheat payments have been made in cash.

Mr. MALONEY. I thank the Senator.

I understand that while the present law has been in effect for some time, a very small proportion of the wheat growers have taken advantage of the insurance feature. I think the same thing probably will be true of cotton. I have a fear that it may be true of tobacco; but I compliment my colleague [Mr. DANAHER] for his insistence that tobacco be included, and if the program is to go on I am hopeful that the tobacco growers of my State and our New England neighborhood will be afforded the same opportunity as is afforded the growers of other agricultural commodities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], which will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 7, 8, and 9 in their entirety and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. Section 506, subsection (h), is further amended by inserting the words "tobacco and cotton" after the word "wheat."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

CODIFICATION AND REVISION OF PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

During the delivery of Mr. DANAHER's speech,

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 2246 was passed yesterday.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think that ought to be done. The bill, which refers to the Post Office Department, was sent to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and it was reported by that committee and passed. The House has passed an identical bill, and the House bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which is proper. The Judiciary Committee should handle it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Arizona will be——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not conversant with the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill. I am merely trying to save some work. Senate bill 2246 is a bill to amend section 194 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," making more stringent the penalties for taking, concealing, or abstracting mail, by deception, fraud, or otherwise.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] will be entered.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senate Committee on the Judiciary will within a very short time report House bill 6037, which is identical with Senate bill 2246. Then the House bill can be passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I very much hope it may be.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

After the conclusion of Mr. DANAHER's speech,

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 162.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask to have the title of the bill stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I ask the Chair whether the bill is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is not before the Senate. The motion of the Senator from Wyoming that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 162 is the matter before the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand this is a motion to proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill. Is that correct?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; Senate bill 162.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it the purpose of the Senator to offer to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, or to substitute the text of the House bill in place of the text of the Senate bill?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; it is the purpose to proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the motion subject to debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. To my certain knowledge, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is interested in this bill. In fact, he called me by telephone since the Senate assembled today and asked to be advised when the bill came before the Senate. In obedience to that telephone call, I feel justified in stating that I have no objection to the Senate proceeding to consider the bill, provided it is not taken up for discussion this afternoon, in order to give the Senator from Virginia a chance to be present. Also I suggest that last year the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] made remarks at some length in relation to the bill; and I think likewise he should be present, or at least should have a chance to be present.

I have no objection to the bill being made the unfinished business if it can be put over until tomorrow for debate; but if it is to be proceeded with this afternoon, I think we should have a quorum call.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the Senator says he has no objection to the bill being made the unfinished business. That is my motion, and I should like to have a vote on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with amendments.

Mr. SCHWARTZ obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that Senators who are interested in the bill are not present, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	La Follette	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lee	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Logan	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

CORRECTIONS IN THE ENROLLMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I send to the desk a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, with the understanding that the Senator from Wyoming will not lose his right to the floor and that it will only temporarily displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, is authorized and directed to make the following changes:

(1) On page 2 of the conference report agreed to by the House on July 18, 1939, under the heading "Table of contents," in section 4 (a), strike out "resident", and in sections 4 (b) and 5 (c) strike out "and nonresident individuals";

(2) On page 7 of such conference report, in the heading of subsection (c) of section 5, strike out "and nonresident individuals"; and

(3) On page 18 of such conference report, in section 31, strike out "title VI" and insert in lieu thereof "title IX."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? The Chair hears none.

The concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I desire simply to make a brief explanation of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. The concurrent resolution has already been agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; I realize that it has been agreed to, but perhaps I had better make the explanation.

In the rather hurried preparation of the conference report there were three typographical errors, two of which I do not regard as being of any importance, but one of which I consider is rather important; that is the last one referred to in the concurrent resolution. Provision is made for an appeal by the taxpayer to the Board of Tax Appeals, and it refers to the act of May 16, 1938, and refers to title VI of that act. Title VI of that act gives no right of appeal. Title IX of the act gives the right of appeal. It is mainly to correct this error that the concurrent resolution has been prepared and has been acted upon by the Senate.

The other two matters are purely verbal corrections. One is on page 2 of the conference report. In the table of contents there is a subdivision providing for corporations and nonresident individuals to file returns of total income. Under the tax provisions of the bill nonresidents do not file income-tax returns.

The other is a similar error on page 7 of the conference report in the heading of subsection (c) of section 5. It refers to "and nonresident individuals," and the context shows that it does not apply in this regard to nonresident individuals.

EXPEDITIOUS SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on yesterday, when Senate bill 915, Calendar No. 475, was called, I was prepared to offer something for the RECORD in connection with the measure. On June 28, Mr. Harry Slattery, Acting Secretary of the Interior, addressed a letter to the Honorable HENRY F. ASHURST, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in which he protested against the passage of that bill and submitted an analysis of it. He states that the arguments offered are sufficient to justify the failure to pass the bill. I believe, however, that the reasons which he gives show conclusively why the bill should be passed.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter, as well as the analysis of the bill attached to the letter, be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. President, I also have some comments on Mr. Slattery's analysis from Col. O. R. McGuire, of the General Accounting Office, who, I believe, is as familiar with the workings of the various agencies of the Government as any other man in Washington. I desire also to have them included as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 28, 1939.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: On May 17 the Committee on the Judiciary submitted to the Senate a favorable report upon the bill (S. 915) entitled "A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes," together with an amendment in the form of a modified draft of the entire bill. The hindrances which this measure would place in the way of effective administration of the law by executive departments are such that its enactment would make extremely difficult, if not altogether impossible, the conduct of many of the activities which the Congress has assigned to the Department of the Interior. Because of this fact, I believe it my duty to place before you the objections which exist to S. 915 in its present form, with the request that you take whatever action you may deem appropriate to bring these objections to the attention of the committee and the Senate.

While no question can exist as to the desirability of the underlying objectives to which the pending bill is apparently directed, namely, the maintenance of certainty, uniformity, fairness, impartiality, openness, expedition, and efficiency in the administration of quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions by the executive branch of the Government, the provisions of the bill are so unsuited to the accomplishment of these ends and their adverse consequences and effects are so far reaching, as virtually to make the measure a bill for the frustration of administrative activity in the conduct of governmental functions. This is due in part to the ambiguities and uncertainties present in the language employed; in part to the cursory treatment accorded matters of major importance and ramification; in part to the unreasonable nature of certain of the substantive requirements imposed; and in part to the extension of substantive requirements to situations where they are distinctly inappropriate. Not only does the bill deal with subjects of vital importance and great complexity in a manner little better than superficial, but it also lays burdens of almost inestimable magnitude upon the executive branch of the Government. When the numerous and serious controversy-provoking flaws in the text of the bill, and the unreasonable and cumulative impediments which it places in the way of administrative action are summed together, I find the conclusion hard to escape that enactment of S. 915 would put an end to all effective prosecution of a large part of the duties imposed upon this Department by law.

The enclosed "analysis of S. 915" particularizes and describes the objections to that measure, both in its original and its present form, which I consider most serious and fundamental. No attempt has been made therein to suggest specific amendments for inclusion in the bill, as drastic revision of its whole structure would be necessary to remove these objections. At the direction of the President a study of the problem in its entirety, from which comprehensive recommendations may be expected, is now being carried on through two committees appointed by the Attorney General. Since S. 915 fails to accord essential protection to the public interest in sound administration, as indicated in this letter and the enclosed "analysis," I strongly recommend that it be not enacted.

I have been advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that, in view of the study now being conducted, this proposed legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY SLATTERY,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

ANALYSIS OF S. 915

The administrative law bill now pending before the Senate (S. 915), entitled "A bill to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes," prescribes certain rules to govern the conduct of administrative activities by the executive branch of the Government and to govern the review of these activities by the judicial branch. The bill does not in terms exempt from its operation the Department of the Interior or any of the major activities thereof, and has a reach that would bring most of these activities within its operation at one point or another. The principal provisions and effects of S. 915 will be considered in the ensuing paragraphs, with particular reference to their application in the administration of the duties committed by law to the Department of the Interior. The discussion will be based upon the provisions of the bill in the form in which they appear in the revised draft recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary in its report of May 17, 1939. As the modifications made by this draft relate, for the most part, to matters of detail, the substance of the following remarks, however, may be applied, with but minor variations, to the provisions of the bill in its original form.

Sections 2 and 3 of S. 915 are directed to the quasi-legislative activities of the executive departments and establishments—that is, to the promulgation under statutory authority of regulations having the force and effect of law. In endeavoring to appraise the substantive merits of the requirements for the issuance and review of administrative regulations proposed in these sections, a major difficulty encountered at the outset is that the types of regulations to which these requirements are intended to apply cannot be fairly determined from the text of the bill. Regulations issued by an administrator under statutory authority sometimes contain an interpretation of the statute implemented by them, but more frequently they merely supply a regulatory detail covering a matter entrusted to the discretion of the administrator. For example, the issuance of rules governing the use of the public lands presents in many cases merely the problem of choosing from several different possibilities, all plainly lawful, that particular one which is most practical and beneficial for those concerned. Further, while some administrative regulations clearly operate upon personal or property rights by defining or modifying legal rights existing independently of the action of the administrator, and while others just as clearly operate in ways which have no effect at all upon private rights, still others occupy an intermediate position in that they control the allowance of valuable privileges which, although no one is entitled to their allowance as a matter of vested right, do constitute legally protected property interests once they have been granted by the administrator. Licenses, easements, leases, and similar privileges presenting situations of the latter type are provided for in many of the public-land statutes. Administrative regulations which are of general application may also be either external or internal in their incidence; that is, they may deal with the relations between the agency issuing them and the public, or they may deal with the relations inter sese of the subordinate units and the personnel of the agency. But even regulations of an internal character may indirectly affect the personal or property rights of outsiders, as, for instance, by devolving upon particular officers or services within the agency the power to handle particular matters which do affect individual rights.

To what extent regulations falling within these various general categories are intended to be subject to all or some of the requirements imposed in S. 915 is a matter upon which the text of the bill affords little real guidance. The definition of "administrative rules" in section 1 specifically mentions only rules "of general application * * * interpreting the terms of statutes." On the other hand, in section 2 (a) the subject matter is defined as "administrative rules and all amendments or modifications or supplements of existing rules implementing or filling in the details of any statute affecting the rights of persons or property." In sections 2 (b), 2 (c), 2 (d), and 3, reference is made merely to "administrative rules," without further explanation. From these statements it is impossible to draw any positive conclusion upon such vital questions as the extent to which administrative regulations not involving an element of statutory interpretation are to be subject to the several provisions of sections 2 and 3, or the extent to which the scope of these provisions is intended to be qualified by the phrase "affecting the rights of persons or property" in section 2 (a), or the extent to which regulations pertaining to matters of internal administration are intended to be covered, or the extent to which the granting of property interests to applicants who have no prior vested right thereto would be a matter "affecting the rights of persons or property" within the meaning of section 2 (a). While the subject of administrative regulations covers a reach of such breadth as to make difficult the formulation of precise definitions and the drawing of exact lines of demarcation, the bill in its present form is open to the criticism that it leaves in entire uncertainty even the basic principles to be employed in determining the applicability of sections 2 and 3 to the various situations commonly encountered in practice.

Section 2 (a) of the bill provides that after its enactment all administrative regulations within the application of this section shall be issued only after the publication of notice and the holding of a public hearing. The holding of a public hearing upon a proposed measure affords a medium for the presentation of facts and arguments which might otherwise have escaped the attention of the administrator, and thus sometimes leads to a better regulation than might have been issued in the absence of a hearing. The same result may, however, be obtained through other procedures, as, for example, by the publication of a tentative draft of the proposed regulation with a request for written comments thereon, or by allowing interested persons an opportunity for informal consultation with the administrator or his subordinates. Under existing law the choice as to whether a public hearing shall be held or other means used to obtain information is left to the administrator, and a requirement that hearings be held in every case irrespective of the circumstances would, in reality, offer very little increased protection to any private parties concerned. When account is taken of the heavy burden, both from the standpoint of the time consumed and that of the expense incurred, which a mandatory hearing requirement would place upon the Government, the disadvantages to the public seem clearly to outweigh any advantages to private individuals which might be expected to ensue from such a requirement. The committees of the Congress in charge of proposed legislation possess the right to decide whether public hearings shall be held upon a particular measure, and exercise a firm control over the testimony to be received and the time to be consumed therein. A similar discretion should be entrusted to those officers in the executive branch who are charged with the duty of considering proposed regulations.

Under section 2 (a) of the bill, as now written, it might be possible for opponents of a proposed regulation to conduct a filibuster by prolonging the hearing to unreasonable lengths, since no express authority is conferred to terminate a hearing before everyone who wishes to appear has had his full say. Likewise, under this section no clear power is given to issue regulations without prior notice and hearing when an emergency exists which necessitates immediate action. The phrase "except when the President declares that a public emergency exists" at the end of section 2 (a) is, in terms, merely an exception to the requirement that regulations shall not become effective until they have been published in the Federal Register, and does not appear to modify the requirement in the preceding sentence that notice and hearing shall be accorded in every case. Furthermore, even if such modification were made clear, this provision would result in the placing of an unnecessary and onerous burden on the President.

Section 2 (b) of the bill requires that future statutes be implemented by administrative rules within 1 year after their enactment. This section contains a serious ambiguity in that the language used might be read either as conferring the power and the duty to implement all statutes, or as merely imposing the duty to implement those statutes with respect to which the power of issuing interpretative or supplementary regulations exists independently of the bill. A still more fundamental objection is that under either construction this provision would necessitate the issuance of a large number of entirely unneeded regulations, to the confusion of all concerned. The provisions of a particular statute are frequently so clear and comprehensive that their interpretation or supplementation by administrative action is unnecessary. Many of the laws, both general and special, administered by the Department of the Interior, are of this nature. A mandatory requirement that administrative regulations be issued under all these statutes, or even that administrative regulations be issued under those as to which the power of implementation otherwise exists, would result in the promulgation of a vast body of regulatory material adding nothing of real moment to the text of the laws involved. The task of finding the governing legal rule upon a particular situation would thereby be made more difficult for everyone affected, whether regulator or regulated.

Section 2 (c) provides that any presently existing administrative regulation within the application of this section shall, upon the petition of any person substantially interested in its effects, be reconsidered by the administrator after publication of notice and opportunity for a public hearing. What has been said above with respect to section 2 (a) is for the most part equally applicable to section 2 (c), but with these differences, that the burdens involved would be vastly greater due to the much larger number of matters to be considered, and that any benefits which might be derived would be materially less since the bulk of the regulations now outstanding have already passed the test of successful actual experience. If this provision were invoked to any considerable extent, as it undoubtedly would be, the reconsideration of existing regulations in the manner contemplated would entail so much additional work that very substantial increases in the administrative appropriations for the agencies concerned would probably become necessary. A further objection is that the language used in section 2 (c) is susceptible of being given the interpretation that an existing rule shall be reconsidered not once only, but as often as interested parties who have not been parties to a previous reconsideration may choose to file petitions therefor. Whatever need the vast body of outstanding regulations may present for revision, clarification, simplification, and codification, this task is one which calls for comprehensive treatment and scientific study, to which a procedure based upon the individual requests of particular persons for the reconsideration of separate provisions affecting their private interests would be poorly suited.

Section 3 of S. 915, in which provision is made for the review of administrative regulations by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, appears open to serious question on at least two scores. In the first place, the Court of Appeals seemingly would be obliged in many instances to pass upon the validity of the regulation in a factual vacuum, since no requirement is made that the case presented to the court embody an actual controversy based upon real facts, such as is requisite for the maintenance of suits under the judiciary article of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has repeatedly expressed the view that an informed and accurate judgment upon the validity of a particular measure cannot be arrived at independently of a consideration of its incidence in concrete situations, or in the absence of full factual data as to the circumstances in which it is to apply, and has consistently refused to pass upon the legality of legislative or executive acts in hypothetical cases or by advisory opinions. These same difficulties would beset the Court of Appeals in endeavoring to appraise the validity of quasi-legislative action under the procedure provided for in section 3, and would prevent the taking of appeals from its judgments to the Supreme Court. In the second place, a decision by the Court of Appeals that a particular regulation was invalid would be binding upon the Government, not only in the case at bar but also in all subsequent actions in any court, whereas a decision that the regulation was valid apparently would not be binding upon the opposite party to the suit, nor upon other persons affected by the regulation, in any subsequent proceeding. Thus the bill would confer upon the Court of Appeals a veto power over administrative regulations which, if viewed as executive in its nature, plainly violates the constitutional principle of separation of powers, and which, if viewed as judicial in its nature, clearly violates the fundamental maxim of justice that both parties to an adjudication should be bound thereby in like degree. These objections are intensified by the fact that the authority granted the Court of Appeals in the bill to pass upon the constitutionality of an administrative regulation is susceptible of being construed as including the power to pass upon the constitutionality of the statute under which the regulation is issued.

Sections 4 through 6 of S. 915 are directed to the quasi-judicial activities of the executive departments and establishments—that is, to the adjudication of specific controversies between the Government and private individuals. Insofar as the executive departments are concerned, the procedure proposed in the bill for the handling of all such controversies would involve, first, an initial decision by the officer in immediate charge of the matter out of which the controversy arises; second, a review of the decision of this officer by an intradepartmental board of three members selected by the head of the department from its regular staff; third, a review of the decision of this intradepartmental board by the department head or by a deputy designated by him; and fourth, a review of the action taken in the department by either an appellate Federal court or the Court of Claims. Before the intradepartmental board may render its decision upon the matter in controversy a full quasi-judicial hearing before the board must be accorded to the person who has demanded review of the initial administrative decision. Among the steps to be taken in connection with this hearing are the sending of notices to interested parties, the allowance of interventions, the filing of written pleadings, the issuance of subpenas for witnesses and documents, the taking of testimony in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable to quasi-judicial proceedings, the examination and cross-examination of witnesses before the board, the reduction of the testimony to writing, the making of formal findings of fact upon the evidence, and the preparation of a written decision by the board. One great difficulty with this proposed all-embracing procedure for the settlement of administrative controversies is that many matters of fundamental importance in its application are left to uncertainty by the provisions of the bill.

The scope of the review to be exercised by the intradepartmental board, which stands at the heart of the whole procedure, is nowhere clearly defined. Thus the text of the bill does not indicate whether in cases which turn upon an exercise of discretion by the officer making the initial decision it is the duty of the board to redetermine the merits of the matter and substitute its discretion for that of the officer deciding the matter originally, or merely to determine whether the decision of that officer was, in the circumstances, within the bounds of the discretion reposed in him by law. Similarly, the text of the bill does not indicate whether in cases which turn upon a disputed issue of fact it is the duty of the board to redecide the matter of fact and substitute its own independent conclusion thereon for that of the officer making the initial decision, or merely to determine whether in the light of the testimony the decision of the officer is supported by substantial evidence, and hence stands within the bounds of reasonableness. Further, notwithstanding the fact that there are a considerable number of situations where the officer charged with the duty of deciding initially is required before doing so to hear the evidence and prepare a written transcript, no exception covering these situations where existing law requires a full hearing to precede the original decision is contained in the bill. This raises the question whether in such instances the board must disregard the record made in connection with the initial decision and must build its own independent record through a trial de novo, thus saddling both the Government and the adverse party with the expense of twice introducing the same evidence and arguments.

The nature of the duties to be performed by the department head or his deputy when reviewing the decisions of an intradepartmental board is also left without adequate definition. Must the reviewing officer confine his consideration of the case to the evidence contained in the record made before the board, or may he take into account facts within his own knowledge, or appearing in departmental records, or brought to his attention by subordinates, which have not been formally offered in evidence? Must the reviewing officer sustain the decision of the board if he finds it based upon substantial evidence and a correct view of the law, or may he set it aside if for any reason he disagrees with the conclusion reached? Must the reviewing officer read the entire record before he may overrule a decision of the board? May the reviewing officer lawfully decline a request that he reexamine the matter decided by the board, and may the decision of the board be appealed directly to the courts in this event? In the absence of any clear answer to these and other questions pertaining to the conduct of the proceedings within the department, the effect of departmental adjudications rendered under the procedure prescribed in the bill would necessarily be extremely uncertain.

Compliance with this procedure would, moreover, necessitate extended delays in the conduct of the business and affairs of the several establishments while hearings were being held and the other steps requisite to the making of the final administrative determination were being taken. Not only would these delays greatly impede and embarrass the effective functioning of the Government at many points, but no protection is afforded against the quasi-judicial proceedings authorized in the bill being resorted to, upon an alleged claim of private grievance, solely for the purpose of delaying necessary public action. The bill imposes upon the Government the duty of paying damages to litigants who suffer injury through the taking or omission of administrative action during the pendency of the proceedings, in consequence of emergency conditions which render further delay contrary to the public interest; but it does not impose upon the litigant the reciprocal duty of paying damages to the Government for injury suffered by the public through the institution and maintenance of administrative proceedings for which no substantial basis exists apart from the desire of the litigant to evade or delay Government action affecting his interests.

Section 5 of S. 915 provides for judicial review of the final decision rendered in any administrative proceeding under the bill upon the filing of a petition therefor by any party to the proceeding who may claim to be aggrieved by the decision. This section makes it the duty of the reviewing court to set aside the decision of the intradepartmental board and the reviewing officer whenever it finds that any one of seven specified grounds exists for this action, of which the first is "that the findings of fact are clearly erroneous." The language here used would appear to impose upon the court the duty of reweighing the evidence and of formulating its own independent conclusion upon the correctness of the findings, rather than the duty of merely ascertaining whether there is any substantial evidence in the record upon which a reasonable person might have arrived at these findings. This conclusion seems almost inescapable in view of the fact that the second ground for setting aside an administrative decision listed in section 5 is "that the findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence." Enactment of the bill in its present form would thus apparently confer upon every person affected by an administrative decision the right to have the facts as well as the law completely retried in the courts, with the result that the decision reached by the administrative officers after a full hearing of the evidence, and under conditions approximating those of a court action, would be denied even the limited degree of conclusiveness attached to jury verdicts in civil suits. By this enlargement of the scope of the court review, the functions of the intradepartmental board and of the reviewing officer, in cases where court review was sought, would be restricted substantially to the collection of evidence, the formulation of tentative findings, and the making of an advisory decision for the information of the court.

This opening up of the facts to complete review on their merits by the reviewing court would reverse the policy laid down in many acts of the Congress and in numerous decisions of the Supreme Court, that findings of fact by administrative officers and boards upon matters committed by law to their decision are to be accepted as conclusive and binding if supported by substantial evidence. By this change in policy the benefits to be derived from the application of expert scientific and technical knowledge in the judging of administrative controversies which require specialized training and experience for their fair and accurate disposition would be largely lost. As these benefits constitute one of the chief reasons for the vesting of quasi-judicial powers in administrative officers, this loss would be a vital one. Further, the transfer of the power of ultimate decision upon factual matters to the courts would make to a large degree useless and ineffective the expensive machinery provided in the bill for the consideration and settlement of administrative controversies through intradepartmental proceedings; would impede to a most serious extent the conduct of the business and affairs committed by law to the executive establishment by taking away the essential power of conclusively determining, within the limits of a reasonable judgment, the facts upon which must rest the legality of the various actions which these establishments are daily required to perform; and would vastly increase the burdens of the courts without corresponding benefit to the public.

The extremely broad reach which S. 915 purports to give the procedure for the settlement of administrative controversies proposed therein throws into strong light the defects and ambiguities inhering in the provisions of the bill. The subject matter of the proposed administrative and judicial reviews, as delimited by the definition of a "controversy" in section 1, would extend to "any dispute or disagreement concerning any claim, right, or obligation for or against the United States and any refusal to grant any license, permit, or other privilege." Any person aggrieved by any affirmative or negative decision, order, or act "which determines the issue" involved in any "specific" dispute or disagreement of this character is to have the right to institute a quasi-judicial proceeding under the bill, and the further right to carry the controversy to the courts if dissatisfied with the final administrative decision. Even with the exceptions stated in section 7, the bill would apply to a great number of administrative actions which could not be handled under the rather elaborate procedure contemplated therein without so great a loss in time and efficiency, and so great an increase in expense, as completely to frustrate effective operation in the public interest. Of itself, this would constitute a very serious objection to the provisions of S. 915 in their present form, even were these to be clarified in the particulars previously mentioned.

Some random examples will be cited. The various establishments of the Government, including this Department, are engaged in operating a number of enterprises and furnishing a number of services of a general business character. The expedition and freedom from red tape essential to the efficient conduct of these activities would be greatly cut into by the provisions of the bill. Again the conduct of a Government establishment necessitates the handling of numerous personnel problems and other matters of internal administration. Since the bill contains no express exemption for controversies arising out of these matters except when they involve merely a failure to appoint or employ the person claiming to be aggrieved, the assumption may reasonably be made that the dismissal of incompetent or unnecessary employees, the allocation of positions to their respective classification grades, the fixing of individual salaries, and many other matters of internal administration might become the subject of quasi-judicial and court proceedings under the bill.

It is also to be noted that the definition of a "controversy" in section 1 extends in terms to any "claim" against the United States, including claims for the allowance of a "privilege," and is not on its face limited to claims founded upon an alleged invasion of a right or interest which, under the common or statute law, is recognized as entitled to protection by judicial process. As a general matter, claims for the allowance of a privilege, gratuity, or other bounty from the United States are not now open to enforcement by judicial process. This rule has been applied by the courts to many situations involving the disposition of the public lands or interests therein, on the ground that the nature of the transaction as a voluntary grant made at the public expense precludes the statutory authorization for the grant from being construed as vesting a judicially enforceable right to obtain the grant in persons claiming to come within the class to whom it is authorized to be made. The language used in S. 915 is, however, so unrestricted in its purport as to suggest that this established rule is intended to be overthrown by the bill, and that the right to maintain both administrative and judicial proceedings for the allowance of privileges, gratuities, and other bounties is intended to be conferred thereby.

Taking into account the numerous judicial remedies which are now available to the individual citizen for the protection of his legally recognized rights and interests against arbitrary official action, the additional measure of legitimate protection which he might be afforded in his dealings with the Government under the court- and administrative-review provisions of S. 915 would be so slight as to be far outweighed by the detriment to the public interest inherent in the burdens which these provisions impose upon effective administrative action.

The foregoing general survey of the provisions and effects of S. 915 leads inevitably to the conclusion that the enactment of this measure would altogether frustrate the conduct of many of the activities now committed by law to executive agencies, and would deny essential protection to the public interest in sound administration of the law. These adverse effects are particularly apparent in the case of the Department of the Interior on account of the large number of points at which the provisions of S. 915 would touch the activities of the Department.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE LAW,
July 10, 1939.

Re S. 915, Logan administrative law bill.
Hon. M. M. LOGAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LOGAN: As you have requested, I have given careful consideration to a letter of June 28, 1939, and accompanying memorandum from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, Harry Slattery, wherein he admits that "no question can exist as to the desirability of the underlying objectives to which the pending bill is apparently devoted—namely, the maintenance of certainty, uniformity, fairness, impartiality, openness, expedition, and efficiency in the administration of quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions of the executive branch of the Government." However, he further states that the bill will not accomplish such purposes and that it would "put an end to all effective prosecution of a large part of the duties imposed upon this Department by law."

This statement in the preceding sentence is a very serious one for an acting secretary of any department to make concerning a bill which has been unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary after the matter, in one form or another, has been pending in the Congress for approximately 11 years; after the bill has received the approval of the board of governors and the house of delegates of the American Bar Association; to date, of the State Bar Associations of California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Texas; to date, of the City Bar Associations of Boston, Chicago (in principle), Cleveland, Philadelphia, Phoenix, and St. Louis; to date, of a number of business organizations and of the American Federation of Labor.

Moreover, it is not without significance that among the able, learned, experienced, and patriotic men who have served on the committee was Hon. James R. Garfield. As you know, he was at one time Secretary of the Interior, and he not only approved the bill in substantially its present form, but he presented the report of this committee to the Cleveland meeting in 1938 of the American Bar Association—a report which was largely the work of former Dean Roscoe Pound, of the Harvard Law School. It is evident that former Secretary of the Interior Garfield and Dean Pound do not agree with Acting Secretary of the Interior Slattery.

But, waiving for the moment the greatest aggregation of support by legal, business, and labor organizations and by able, learned, and experienced men that was ever placed behind any proposed legislation in the history of America, I think we should examine the statements made by Mr. Slattery upon their merits.

First, he refers to "a study of the problem in its entirety now being carried on through two committees appointed by the Attorney General." I know of no two such committees. There is one such committee with a member of the Lawyers' Guild as its director, a member who agreed to a report of his committee on administrative law to the National Lawyers' Guild condemning the bill, and who made an address before the last convention of the guild likewise in opposition to the bill. This address was recently placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator MINTON. Does any one seriously believe that this lawyer guild director will be able to give impartial and unbiased study to this problem?

But in addition to that, I have in my possession an agenda or program of study of this problem for the Attorney General's committee which this lawyer guild director issued in the latter part of June 1939 to the members of the Attorney General's committee. This agenda would cover substantially the same ground that the American Bar Association has already covered—these studies being contained in six printed reports of my committee and in the working papers on administrative adjudication prepared under its supervision which was printed in 1938 by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

This problem has been growing acute for many years and the time for action has arrived. The fact that some members of the Attorney General's committee, such as its lawyer guild director, require time to acquaint themselves with the problem is not material. The fact is that some of the members of the American Bar Association's administrative law committee have been studying and administering Federal statutes for more than 20 years. The product of that study is contained in S. 915, Seventy-sixth Congress, and in the above-referred-to printed reports.

What is more, the Attorney General's committee could effect no reforms without legislation for that purpose and S. 915 would furnish the needed legislation to enable his committee to accomplish something in the way of uniform rules of procedure before the administrative agencies in the exercise of both their quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial work.

Running as a thread through the memorandum accompanying Mr. SLATTERY'S letter is a complaint as to the requirement of uniformity in the exercise of quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers of the administrative agencies. This argument has been met elsewhere, but it is answered by S. 915 itself and by a few fundamental considerations. The bill prescribes the barest minimum of procedure, and does not affect the substantive law administered by the various agencies of Government. In substance, these minima of rules of procedure go to the according of public hearings, written rules, written records, written findings of fact in the quasi-judicial process, and written decisions or orders. Also, as to the subpenaing of witnesses, documents, etc., and as to the scope of judicial review. Far less uniformity would be established by the bill for the administrative agencies than has been established by the uniform rules in law and equity cases for the trial courts which were recently issued by the Supreme Court of the United States.

It was objected for years that such uniform rules for the trial courts in law and equity cases was impracticable, and there was a time, as you know, when there were different writs for each form of common-law action. There is simply nothing to the argument that there cannot, or should not, be a minimum of uniformity of procedure before any and all administrative agencies of Government.

It is objected in the memorandum that the courts should not be given jurisdiction to reverse administrative decisions when the "findings of fact are clearly erroneous," as that would open up the administrative record to a retrial of the facts. Anyone at all familiar with the work of the courts must realize that this does not mean that every case will be retried on the facts in the reviewing courts. In substance, that has been the jurisdiction for more than a century in reviewing equity and admiralty cases. The appellate courts do not retry the facts in such cases unless it be shown by counsel that the facts found by the trial court are indeed "clearly erroneous." If a decision of a trial court or of an administrative agency is based upon "clearly erroneous" findings of fact, it should not stand, and the bill does not intend that it shall stand.

Further, the phrase "clearly erroneous" was taken from the new rules issued by the Supreme Court of the United States for the trial courts, and these rules have been in operation for nearly a year. An examination of the recent opinions of the appellate courts does not show that these courts are trying anew the record evidence and reversing the trial courts right and left, as the writer of this memorandum seems to fear.

We can trust the courts in these matters. If we cannot trust the courts, then our scheme of government is a failure.

It is argued that there should be no judicial review of the rules in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. It is stated that while the decision on the rules would be binding on the administrative agencies, they would not be binding on other individuals in other courts. This argument overlooks a number of things: First, a judgment of the courts is never controlling beyond the territorial jurisdiction of such courts and the territorial jurisdiction of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is that District. Second, a judgment of the courts is never binding beyond the territorial jurisdiction of such courts and particularly upon individuals which were not parties to the proceedings resulting in such judgment. Third, the agencies can, and should, go to the Congress for additional statutory authority when a rule is required which transcends the existing statutory jurisdiction of such agencies. Fourth, few individuals will avail themselves of the procedure to have the rule reviewed in the District of Columbia because of the necessary expense involved. This remedy will be used for the most part by business and labor organizations having memberships largely effected by such a rule. Fifth, no one can say at this time with certainty whether the Supreme Court of the United States would review a judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in such a case, but it is not without significance that the Supreme Court does review declaratory judgment cases. Even if the Supreme Court should refuse to review such a judgment as to an administrative rule, the United States Court of Appeals is a most able court. It is composed of judges fully qualified to serve on the Supreme Court of the United States and even if it should occur that there could be no review of its judgments in these cases much relief will be afforded to the people—not only by the learning and ability of such court brought to bear upon the question, but in the insurance that the administrative agencies will be more careful than they now are to see that their rules conform to the law.

It is to be remembered that in the exercise of quasi legislation power the administrative agencies are functioning as little congresses. They should be compelled to follow the open procedure of notice and hearing which the Congress has afforded through its committees for a century and a half. Some of the agencies have followed such procedure and they are generally conceded to be the best administered agencies in the Government. The American people are instinctively opposed to "star chamber" tactics.

As quasi-judicial bodies these administrative agencies are performing a part of the work which is normally that of a court and again these agencies should not be exempt from the minimum of court procedure—procedure which the experiences of centuries have demonstrated to be necessary to secure justice.

Complaint is made in the memorandum that the bill is not specific as to the class of rules which should be issued after notice and public hearing, if requested, or the procedure which should be followed in doing so. It was not intended to make the bill so specific that no element of judgment and discretion should be left to the administrative agency. Some agencies may find it to advantage to publish with their notices tentative rules to be the subject of hearings; others may find it to advantage to hold informal consultations preliminary to the public notice and hearings, etc., and the bill intends that there shall be the utmost leeway in these respects. Further, the agencies will not be required to do more than accord a general hearing preliminary to the issuance of rules, similar to those held by congressional committees. The bill does not contemplate that these hearings shall run along like Tennyson's brook, but they are to be closed when the subject matter reasonably has been covered. In fact, the administrative agencies are expected by the bill to be capable of using judgment and discretion in affording a reasonable hearing.

It is significant that the various State and the few Federal agencies which use the procedure of notice and public hearing, if requested, have been confronted in practice with no such bogeymen in this respect as the writer of this memorandum seems to think lurk in the hinterland.

The bill cannot leave the question of hearings to the discretion of the administrative officials. If it did that, it is safe to say that the present situation will continue of practically no public hearings. The matter will settle itself because no public hearings will be requested on rules which are not of public importance.

The other points in the memorandum are minor ones, and I am sure that all necessary answers thereto will occur to you. But if not, I should be glad to discuss them with you informally as this letter seems to have reached undue proportions.

In closing, I may say that I personally know many of the men in the Interior Department. They are high-grade, conscientious men, and I have no doubt that the writer of this memorandum is sincere in his views. I think he is in error and that none, or hardly none, of his fears will materialize after the bill becomes law and is placed in operation—assuming, of course, that these agencies, in good faith, carry out the statutes as enacted by the Congress. We intend that they shall have trouble if they do not.

Cordially and sincerely,

O. R. MCGUIRE, Chairman.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, Senate bill 162, to quote its title, is "A bill to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes."

To afford this protection the bill requires that all wool products entering or intended for entrance into interstate commerce shall carry a label showing the kind and percentage of fiber in each wool product. The label starts with the manufacturer of the cloth or yarn. The manufacturer, of course, knows the kinds and quantity of fibers he puts into his own product. He is allowed such variances as may arise by reason of uneven distribution of fibers in the process of manufacturing. Succeeding handlers of the product are protected by labeling in accordance with the original label. When, through procedure provided in the bill, it shall be found a label is false, the handler may substitute a correct label.

At the last session of Congress a bill similar to S. 162 and proposed amendments now adopted by the committee passed the Senate. Owing to the lateness in the session that bill did not come up for action in the House, although it received favorable action by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That House committee has now made favorable report on H. R. 944, introduced by Representative MARTIN of Colorado, which is companion bill to S. 162.

S. 162, as introduced this session, differed in some respects from the bill the Senate passed last session.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I understand that a companion bill has passed the House.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; it was reported by the committee of the House and is now before the Rules Committee. After extensive hearings by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, the committee adopted amendments which make S. 162 closely conform to the bill which passed the Senate last year; and the committee also adopted other amendments limiting criminal liability under the bill to violations committed "willfully" and "with intent to violate the provisions of the act."

Certain opponents of S. 162—principally representatives of ladies' cloak and suit manufacturers and corporations—were frankly opposed to labeling of any kind. These gentlemen also asserted for different reasons that labeling was not a practical possibility under the system of manufacture now used in that industry. These latter objections have been given careful study and investigation by the chairman of the subcommittee, and he is convinced most of them are wholly without merit and others may be readily overcome by the manufacturers themselves.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is the primary purpose of the bill to protect consumers or buyers of woolen and worsted material, or is it through the labeling process to encourage the use of more wool, which will have a tendency to improve the woolen business?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The primary purpose is to protect the general consuming public, and what effect it may have on the manufacturers of reworked wool or on the manufacturers of virgin wool is a matter which is in dispute and is controversial. But I may say that the principal outside support for this bill comes from consuming groups and farm groups and labor groups, and all the national farm organizations, and most of the consumers' leagues. And, of course, it is also true that the wool growers are in favor of this proposed legislation.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the Senator refers to labor groups, does he mean labor groups that are employed in factories which manufacture wool and worsteds, or is he speaking generally of labor?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I am speaking more particularly of representatives of one branch of the American Federation of Labor—I do not recall the technical name of it at the moment—and in addition to that separately laborers who are employed in the sorting of wool and work of that kind.

Mr. Arthur Besse, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers—and I am referring to Mr. Besse because he has been active in connection with this proposed wool legislation and has been active in ultimate opposition to any form of labeling bill we have been able to devise—is also in opposition to some features of S. 162. Appearing as a witness last year and this year, Mr. Besse has been on all sides of the labeling question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he has a prepared statement, but did I correctly understand the Senator to say that representatives of labor unions engaged in the woolen textile industry are in support of this bill?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; I said representatives of labor unions in the American Federation of Labor, in the labeling department, and also the laborers in the wool-sorting departments.

Mr. LODGE. Can the Senator furnish that information for the RECORD?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It is in the printed hearings; and before I have concluded—probably not this afternoon—I shall refer to the specific organizations.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I will say to the Senator now, for his information, that neither the textile workers' union nor the needleworkers appeared on one side or the other in connection with the proposed legislation because they were confronted by their employers—I need not say why they did not appear, but they did not appear.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. Besse favors labeling which will make a distinction between virgin wool and reclaimed wool, but he does not want the label to disclose how much virgin wool and how much reclaimed wool is in a wool product. This is the stock argument of the manufacturers who do not want the consuming public to know what it is buying from the retail dealers. However, it should be said that a very substantial number of the membership of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers are supporting Senate bill 162.

Returning to Mr. Besse's views, on March 8, 1938, appearing before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce considering Senate bill 3502, which also provided for a labeling distinction by quantity between virgin wool and reclaimed wool and was otherwise identical in many respects to Senate bill 162, now under consideration, Mr. Besse testified:

We are in favor of fiber identification. We believe that the consumer has a right to know what he or she is buying. We have ourselves supported labeling regulations, knowing that there was a very substantial amount of misrepresentation in the sale of so-called wool products which contain varying amounts of wool. We do not believe that mills are responsible for that misrepresentation; but in the absence of labeling regulations it is impossible to fix the responsibility, and for that reason we welcome labeling regulations of the right sort, so that there may be no opportunity for anyone who wants to misrepresent, be it a textile mill or anything else, to take advantage of any technicality or loopholes or any lack of diligence in telling the consumer exactly what he may be buying.

Then Mr. Besse continued to say—

We do not object to this present bill, S. 3502—

Which is the bill I introduced last year, and which passed the Senate—largely for one reason. We believe it is entirely practical and entirely reasonable to provide for a distinction between virgin wool and reworked wool. If the distinction goes to fabrics that are composed exclusively of virgin wool we think it is impractical and we think it is of no advantage to the consumer to try to show in a fabric that is composed of a blend of new wool and reworked wool the exact percentages that the type of fibers may bear to each other. If the fabric contains reworked wool, the consumer should, in my estimation, know that. But that is quite different from saying that the reworked wool is 40 percent or 50 percent of the total. There are so many other factors in connection with the construction of that fabric that are more important than the raw material that you place an undue emphasis on the material content itself.

We not only have no quarrel with the principle of fiber identification to indicate whether there is cotton or rayon or any other fiber present, but we welcome it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. In order that we may have a rather clear picture of how the bill would operate, will the Senator explain the physical method? I have read the bill, and am familiar with it. However, I should like to have the Senator explain just how the bill would operate with respect to labeling.

For example, a certain factory or mill may manufacture woolen or worsted goods and sell them to a dealer or jobber, who in turn may sell them to a tailor who buys the cloth by the bolt. The tailor may make up the goods into a suit and sell the suit to another wholesaler, who, in turn, may sell the suit to the retailer, who sells it to the consumer. How are the goods marked, and where does the responsibility lie?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That is a long story; and I shall be able to explain, detail by detail, the mechanism in the various processes, and the various manufacturers who handle it. However, I should prefer to make the explanation later, if the Senator is willing.

Mr. BRIDGES. I hope to be present when the Senator explains it. If I am not, I hope to read the explanation in the RECORD. Just who is responsible in each step, and who suffers the penalty for a failure to comply with the law?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I shall be glad to explain the situation, from the manufacturer down.

I will say to the Senator now that beginning with the manufacturer, after the goods pass out of his hands, if those who succeed him—7 or 8 or 10 in the course of the line—use the manufacturer's fiber identification in percentages, they will be protected, and no liability will come upon them if for any reason the manufacturer's label is false. However, I shall later explain the situation more in detail.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to take advantage of this interruption to express the hope that the Senator will give his view as to the effect which the bill would have on the price structure of wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I shall be glad to do so at some later time, when I discuss that question. Of course, it is a controversial question. The opponents of the bill say that the bill would raise the price of manufacture to the detriment of the consumer. They say also that the bill would reduce the consumption of wool, and reduce the price of wool to the producer. So the opponents of the bill claim that both the consumer and the producer would lose.

Mr. LODGE. What is the opinion of the Senator from Wyoming on that point?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. My opinion is that the bill would not result in any material increase in the prices of products generally. It might result in some small increase in the prices of certain forms of reworked wool which now come upon the market; but I am unable to tell how much that would be.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator does not believe that the bill would materially affect the prices of woolen clothing?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; I do not.

Mr. Besse said:

We not only have no quarrel with the principle of fiber identification to indicate whether there is cotton or rayon or any other fiber present, but we welcome it, and we will cooperate with your committee, or any one else, to bring about such legislation or such regulations under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. Besse further said:

We believe that there should be some definition of virgin wool * * *. We believe that it should be defined, and that if a purchaser wants virgin wool she should be entitled to know whether she is getting it or not. But that, in our estimation, is quite a different thing from giving the percentage in a blend. We believe that with reference to a blend, they are entitled to know if it is not a virgin wool; but the question of fixing the exact point where the blend may lie seems to us a grave mistake.

This year Mr. Besse prefers a bill, Senate bill 1496, in the preparation of which he collaborated, and which, as he states, makes no distinction between virgin wool and reclaimed wool. In other words, the shoddy manufacturers and fabricators have taken Mr. Besse into camp.

Incidentally, the Federal Trade Commission submitted an adverse report on Senate bill 1496, which report I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM RE S. 1496, SEVENTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION—WOOL LABELING

Complying with the Commission's request for comment and report, I wish to advise that I have examined the bill, S. 1496, which is entitled "A bill to protect producers, manufacturers, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in woven or knitted fabrics and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, and for other purposes." The measure, which as a short title is to be designated as the Fabric Labeling Act of 1939, relates to matters covered by the Schwartz bill, S. 162, as to which report has heretofore been made and in respect to which hearings have recently been held before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. The present bill differs in many respects from S. 162. To assist in understanding the measure, I shall point out the contrast between the two in some of the provisions which appear to be of material importance:

(1) In considering the subject matter, it should be borne in mind that one of the problems involved lies in the fact that non-woolen materials are made in simulation or imitation of woolen merchandise to such an extent that, it is alleged, they pass for and are purchased by the public as and for wool, even without specific oral or written representations to that effect. The bill does not specifically provide in term for the labeling of such merchandise. It seems to be common knowledge that synthetic and other imitation merchandise of this character are being placed on the market in increasing quantities, and any limitations in the bill which would exclude such simulated or purported wool fabrics from its provisions would leave untouched one of the principal sources of the evils claimed to exist in the situation.

(2) Unlike S. 162, the present measure, S. 1496, makes no provision for disclosure of shoddy or reclaimed wool where used in lieu of new or virgin wool or other fiber. I am informed that latest available statistics show an increasing use of shoddy or reclaimed wool as a substitute for virgin wool in new woolen fabrics, and that up to the year 1935 the use of such recovered wool fiber, rags, clippings, etc., by the wool-textile manufacturers in this country had risen to over 111,000,000 pounds; also, that the importation and use of rags from which shoddy or reclaimed wool is made has in recent months shown a decided increase.

Available figures also show that the amount of shoddy or reclaimed wool used by the wool-textile manufacturers is equal to about 50 percent of all virgin or new wool used annually in this country. I am further informed that it is not possible to use or substitute shoddy for virgin wool in worsted fabrics because such shoddy or reclaimed fiber cannot be made to withstand the necessary spinning and processing operations. Worsted fabrics constitute about 50 percent or more of our total annual production of woolens. Consequently the large amount of shoddy and reclaimed wool used annually in fabrics is to be found in about 50 percent or less of the total production of fabrics. It follows, from these figures, that the shoddy or reclaimed wool used in fabrics equals or exceeds in the aggregate the amount of virgin or new wool used in the same fabrics.

It is common knowledge that disclosure to the buying public of the presence of such materials in fabrics is almost never made, and that in the ordinary course of trade it is impossible for the consuming public to detect or ascertain the fact that such shoddy or reclaimed materials have been introduced into the fabric. Under the circumstances it would appear plain that in the purchasing of a large part of the wool-textile manufacturers' annual production of fabrics, consumers are receiving, without their knowledge, substantial quantities of shoddy or reclaimed wool instead of new or virgin wool.

The opposition to requiring such disclosure which has been voiced by certain trade associations of fabrics and clothing manufacturers or distributors is understandable and not unusual. However, available information on the subject indicates quite clearly that a large and substantial part of the consuming public, and numerous businessmen, including fabric manufacturers, clothing manufacturers, and others, as well as the representatives of the producing and farming elements, hold the view that such nondisclosure or concealment of shoddy or reclaimed wool is productive of harm to the public, to agriculture, and to business. The bill—S. 1496—makes no provision against such nondisclosure or concealment, which is viewed by many as a principal problem and source of evil involved in the premises. In fact, as presently worded, the measure would appear to sanction such nondisclosure and concealment, irrespective of the deception which might be involved in the respective transactions.

(3) In S. 162 provision is made for temporary injunction against misbranding to be issued by the district courts at the request of the enforcement agency where quick action is necessary to protect the public interest. Likewise, in S. 162, willful violations are penalized as a misdemeanor, and provision is made for the normal judicial procedure and authority in the courts to condemn misbranded or fraudulently labeled goods where necessary to protect the public interest. These provisions for enforcement are of the usual type found in labeling legislation of this character. Experience is deemed to have demonstrated their effectiveness in curbing willful violations and situations where the unscrupulous or fraudulent suddenly flood the market in different parts of the country with misbranded goods, and protection of the conscientious competitor and of the purchasing public requires that quick action be taken to prevent consummation of the fraud.

In S. 1496 these several enforcement provisions have been omitted, with the result that it appears the necessary means for economical and adequate enforcement are lacking. The measure makes no provision for speedy action where necessary to prevent fraud and irreparable injury to the public, and omits penal provisions against the willful perpetrator of the fraud. Undoubtedly these omissions would impair the effectiveness of the bill if passed in its present form.

(4) The bill—S. 1496—also exempts entirely such widely used wool fabrics or purported wool fabrics as carpets, rugs, draperies, and upholstery products. These products are used in the homes of the people and form a large item of household equipment of economic concern to men and women of all classes. Substitutes and imitations of the well-known mohair upholstery fabrics have been developed and are widely used. Carpets and rugs have long been made principally of wool and the wool therein has an important bearing and relationship to the value of the carpet or rug. However, rugs and carpets are now on the market which have every appearance of being wool, but, in fact, contain little or no wool at all. In the reversible or double-faced rug even the base material, usually jute or cotton, is not visible and the rug appears to be literally all-wool, which is not true. So-called synthetic wools or imitations are manufactured in simulation of wool and unless labeled will undoubtedly pass to many consumers as and for wool.

The fabric of rugs and carpets is usually made of a combination of two or more fibers, such as wool, jute, cotton, rayon, and sometimes other materials, including plastic compounds. These fibers are manipulated and mixed in a great variety of proportions or combinations and unless disclosure as to content is made the consumer has no practical means of ascertaining these facts to guide her in her purchases. The same is true with drapery fabrics and it seems clear in the situation that there is just as much reason for requiring the labeling of carpets, rugs, draperies, and upholstery fabrics as there is in the case of any other wool or imitation wool product. Their exemption from the inhibitions of the bill narrows the measure to such an extent as to leave untouched a large part of the field involved in the matter under consideration. I am unable to see any substantial reason for the exemption.

(5) I believe the foregoing will be sufficient as a general explanation of the measure and that therefore a more extended statement or discussion of other terms is unnecessary here. In my opinion the bill if passed in its present form would not be adequate to accomplish the purposes expressed in the title.

Respectfully submitted.

W. T. KELLEY,
Chief Counsel, Federal Trade Commission.

MARCH 16, 1939.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I now wish to make a few observations on the subject of virgin wool and shoddy or reworked wool, because that question seems to have become one of the major questions in the whole subject.

Considerable effort has been made to defend the undisclosed use of shoddy or reclaimed wool because the best grades of shoddy command a higher price than certain low grades of new wool.

There are two complete answers to this. One is that the amount of such higher priced shoddy is relatively small when the total volume of such grades of new wool and shoddy are considered. The more important answer is that no shoddy is equal in value, price, or wearing quality with the same grade of new wool from which the shoddy is later manufactured. I believe no one can dispute that statement. And, what is still more important, each particular kind of fabric requires a particular kind of grade of either virgin or reclaimed wool. In each case the virgin wool or reclaimed wool must be of the same original character in order to obtain a similar surface effect. I am reliably informed by men best qualified to speak on textile manufacturing processes that in every case, without any exception, the reclaimed wool which is always and solely used as a substitute or adulterant for virgin wool in any fabric must have been reclaimed from the same grade of virgin wool for which it is substituted. It is only possible, therefore, to compare products made of a particular grade of virgin wool and those made of reclaimed wool obtained from the same grade of virgin wool.

In the American Wool Handbook of 1938, written by two of the leading chemists and experts in wool technology, endorsed and issued under a foreword preface by Mr. Arthur Besse, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, there is given on page 193 the comparative average prices of better grades of wool and shoddy during January 1938. I quote from that work, which, of course, is standard:

> The average prices of shoddy derived from the five most used grades were as follows: White softs, 36 cents; light hoods, 25 cents; fine merino, 22 cents; coarse merino, 14 cents; and dark cloths, 9 cents, whereas the corresponding wool grades varied in prices from 65 to 85 cents per pound.

Quoting again from the American Wool Handbook, page 193, under the heading, "Difference Between Reclaimed and Virgin Wool," we read:

> Virgin wool, when examined under the microscope, most always exhibits the characteristic structure of the epidermis consisting of the variously formed scales. This scale layer is the protective covering for the cortical layer, which consists of a fibrous mass of individual cells. These very fine spindle-like cells are responsible for the strength and elasticity of the healthy fiber.
>
> The wool fiber is generally resistant to constant bending, strain, and pressure put on it by ordinary wear, but when the bending is often repeated, the outer layer suffers, and the whole fiber starts to break down in a manner similar to that in which a branch or twig is broken apart.

And again, page 194, we find:

> Since the reconverting process of picking and garnetting subjects the wool fiber to severe mechanical treatments, the protective covering is torn away and the fibrous cortical layer is splintered as well as broken. The three fibers shown opposite illustrate some of the numerous forms of torn and raveled ends as present in all reworked wools.

The publication there shows the wool fibers, both virgin and reworked, magnified a hundred times, and presents a very interesting picture.

> The extent of the actual breakage and shortening of the fibers is best disclosed by the comparative length curves of virgin wool and reclaimed wool. The length of the reclaimed wool fibers made from an undyed piece containing 100 percent virgin wool of 1.9 inches original length was found to be 0.7 inch, or approximately one-third of the original length. The length of the reclaimed wool made from a similar dyed piece was only 0.5 inch, or about one-quarter of the original length.

The elasticity of the reworked fibers is considerably lower than the virgin wool fibers because of the overstretching and pulling which occurred during the breaking operation. When such reclaimed wool is used as raw material in the manufacturing of new pieces it will contain a high number of highly damaged fibers.

An again, on page 196, appears the following:

Tensile strength and abrasion tests made on fabrics of identical construction and finish, made of virgin wool and reworked wool produced from the same virgin wool, gave the following results:

Tensile strength	Virgin wool fabric		Reclaimed wool fabric
	Original	Redyed	Original	Redyed
Grab test, A. S. T. M.:	Pounds	Pounds	Pounds	Pounds
Warp	31.1	30.6	9.8	6.6
Filling	31.3	29.9	9.7	7.3
Abrasion test, Wyzenbeek machine:	Number of rubs		Number of rubs
Cloth against cloth	40,000		2,600	2,300
Percentage of damaged fibers	1.2		11.7	----------

The authors of the book continue:

In cases where uncarbonized clippings and rags were used the following characteristics are positive indications of reclaimed wool:

A. Fibers with brush ends and lengthwise breaks.

B. Fibers of many colors.

C. The presence of cotton fibers in small percentages.

D. The presence of rayon fibers in various sizes and various kinds, such as dull and lustrous, viscose and acetate rayon.

The preceding photomicrograph is an excellent example of a cheap blend produced entirely from clippings.

Mr. President, I regret the necessity of further description of shoddy, but in view of the intensive propaganda to convince the Congress that shoddy, good shoddy, is as valuable as new wool, I feel constrained to quote further the American Wool Handbook, under the heading of "Reclaimed or reworked wool," at pages 189–190. I quote:

This class of material is produced by shoddy manufacturers, who may be independent enterprises or a part of woolen mills. The table at the beginning of the chapter shows that approximately 57,000,000 pounds of these materials were consumed in 1929 by American mills, which is approximately one-fifth of the total wool consumption. In 1935, according to the figures of the United States Tariff Commission, the amount increased to 111,400,000 pounds, representing 25 percent of the total fibers consumed in the industry in 1935. Reclaimed wool is almost entirely employed in the lower grades of woolen goods, and practically none enters worsted goods.

The sources of reclaimed wools in all cases are clippings, new and old woolen and worsted rags, and other wastes made in the manufacture of garments. They are obtained as a result of a highly organized system all over the world. The rag man in any community collects the rags and disposes of them to local dealers, who roughly classify them according to the materials of which they are composed. From the dealers they are purchased by the rag merchants, who re-sort them into bulk qualities, in which condition the rags are offered to the shoddy manufacturers or direct to mills.

According to the type of rags, the shoddy manufacturer is able to produce three main classes of reworked or reclaimed wools: (1) Shoddy, (2) mungo, (3) extract wool.

In producing all of the above the first process to which the rags are submitted is sorting. This is done with the following points in mind: (a) Clippings; (b) new and worn rags; (c) whether made of pure wool or mixtures of fibers; (d) kind of fabric, knitted, woven, fulled, or unfulled; (e) according to color of material.

In the sorting of rags women are employed. The work is done in a well-lighted and ventilated room. The bales of rags are opened and handfuls are picked from them, which are spread on a sorting table. The operation is not particularly arduous but requires a proper knowledge of the various kinds of materials in order to be able to sort them in accordance with the above classifications. The visual inspection as well as the hand or feel of these materials are the determining factors.

After the sorting, the buttons, hooks, iron, and the trimmings are removed, also the seam bits containing cotton, rayon, or other vegetable fibers in any form are grouped into a class by themselves and are subjected to carbonizing later to remove these vegetable fibers. Before the actual tearing-up process, the rags may be run through a shaker to remove the surface dirt and dust, and to soften their texture. With very dusty rags this dusting may be done even before sorting. The shaker consists of a feed and delivery, traveling lattice, placed in front of the machine, and of a large, spiked drum, which rotates at a speed of 300 to 450 revolutions per minute. For carrying off the dust a large fan is employed.

After these pretreatments, the rags are subjected to an oiling to facilitate the grinding or tearing-up process. For this purpose the rags are spread in layers and sprinkled with approximately 10 percent hot oil in the form of an emulsion. For better penetration the oiled lot is allowed to remain for at least 12 hours. Cheap mineral oil emulsions are employed. The oiled pile is vertically divided, securing an even mixture of the sorted rags and placed on the lattice feed apron of the rag picket, which is illustrated.

The feed tables carry the rags to strong, fluted rollers, which feed the material to a cylinder provided with flat or rounded teeth or spikes. For very hard goods there may be 52 teeth in a row, and 28 teeth per row for soft goods on a width of 36 inches. The production depends on the nature of the rags, which may run from 500 to 750 pounds per 10-hour day for mungo in a 36-inch-cylinder machine. After the rags leave the fluted rollers, they are attacked by the teeth of the cylinder and literally separated into smaller pieces, with the result that they are reduced to a partially fibrous condition. Any bits of rags insufficiently torn come into contact with the blade of a special roller which automatically throws them back to the feed table to be reentered into the machine.

In many instances one operation is not enough to reduce the cloth into a fibrous substance suitable for carding. It is, therefore, subjected to further processing known as garnetting as insufficient rag grinding is detrimental to carding. The resultant material compared with fleece wool is deficient in fiber strength and length because of the broken, bruised, and splintered fibers present. The material in this fibrous form is known as shoddy.

Certain representatives of corporations labeling their products as "virgin wool" testified in opposition to labeling. It will be interesting to read just what some corporations really think of shoddy and reworked wool, as set forth in their own widely circulated pamphlets and advertising addressed to the consuming public.

Mr. John Ashby is president of F. C. Huyck & Sons, and is a vice president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. He opposes compulsory labeling. His company, in advertising Kenwood blankets to the general public, issues a beautiful little booklet entitled "How to Enjoy One-third of Your Life—in Bed." The booklet states, in part—I quote:

Beware of blankets in which shoddy or reworked wool is combined with new wool. Such wool has lost its life and much of its warmth. It looks dull; it mats down and becomes hard and boardy after a few washings. But live, new, fleece wools, just as they come from the sheep's back, have a springy resilience that you can actually feel. Grasp a handful of blanket and squeeze it. If it is made of live, new wool, you will find it has a feeling of springy fullness in the hand.

Do you know what really makes wool warm? It is not the wool itself, but the tiny insulating air cells imprisoned in the clinging fibers. That is why a deep, soft nap is so important.

That is the gentleman's explanation of the merits of new wool and the demerits of reworked wool; but he is opposed to labeling to permit the public to know that fact.

We have already seen from the Wool Handbook that the shoddy manufacturing process destroys a considerable percentage of these insulating air cells.

Mr. Sylvan Stroock has frequently appeared as a witness against wool labeling on the basis that it would be misleading to say that a thing was virgin wool, or part virgin and part reclaimed wool, according to the testimony of Margaret Dana, merchandising counsel and director of the Consumers' Forum of the Atlantic Monthly. Yet in the Stroock Co.'s advertisement appearing in the January 15, 1939, issue of Vogue, we read about Cloud-Drift, which is the name of a fabric manufactured by Stroock Co., the following:

Cloud-Drift is a combination of the finest insulative virgin camel fibers with kid mohair and fine virgin wool.

Mr. C. E. Bishop, president of the Pendleton Woolen Mills, opposes labeling, and in lengthy letters and alleged arguments conjures up bogies and straw men to sustain his position. Yet all products sold by the Pendleton Woolen Mills carry the label "100 percent virgin wool." On tickets issued with sales this company advises, "Pendleton will not wrinkle and will not stretch—100 percent virgin wool."

The president of the National Coat and Suit Industry Recovery Board is also president of the Printz-Biederman

Co. In his advertisement in Womans Wear Daily, Mr. Printz says:

Now complete fiber identification on every Printzess fashion.

Mr. Saul Cohn, president of the Retail Dry Goods Association this year, said:

The 1938 platform of the National Retail Dry Goods Association calls for sound merchandise standards, the development of a universal dictionary of retail terms so that the retailer and his customer will speak one language; the use of informative labeling of goods so that the public will know what it is buying.

In the face of all this the National Coat and Suit Industry Recovery Board adopted a resolution June 17, 1938, reading:

Resolved, That the legislative committee be, and it is hereby, authorized to oppose any legislation or any administrative action by any Government agency which has for its objective laws, rules, or regulations which will have the effect of compelling members of the coat and suit industry to reveal the fiber content of the fabrics of which their products are made.

Mr. President, if I may paraphrase a well-known line from Hamlet, I could say "there is something rotten in the textile industry."

I conclude this subject of reclaimed wool, or shoddy, by quoting a paragraph from a letter, appearing on page 221 of the record of hearings, from Charles F. H. Johnson, president of the famous Botany Worsted Mills, of Passaic, N. J., in support of Senate bill 162. Mr. Johnson says:

It is most important in considering this phase of the question to recognize the fact that this mixture of other than wool, or, may I say, other than virgin wool, in the manufacture of cloth is particularly true of imports, which to a very large extent are mixtures. It is important, therefore, that there be proper guarding against the influx of large importations sold as woolen goods but largely containing reworked wools, shoddies, cottons, and other mixtures. There should be no fear on the part of a manufacturer who is making an honest mixture. The fact that there is a rayon content, silk or cotton, need not mean that the fabric is not a good-wearing fabric. It need not mean that it is an inferior fabric, and the public can easily be given such information as will make these things clear. Certainly, however, the public does not expect, when it buys a garment supposed to be made of wool, to find that it contains very little real honest virgin wool, and possibly many contain old rags that have been used before, and even though they may have been thoroughly sterilized and carbonized, and all the other "izings," they still are not what the buyers think they are buying. If the manufacturer of the product is honest he need have no fear of marking his goods for what they are, and if he is not honest and desires to trade under a misnomer, then there is all the more reason why such a bill as this should be passed and the policing powers given to the Federal Trade Commission, who have proven themselves thoroughly capable of enforcing such legislation.

Speaking for the Botany Worsted Mills, may I most heartily approve of this legislation.

CHAS. F. H. JOHNSON, President.

WHO IS ASKING FOR ENACTMENT OF S. 162?

Realizing the weakness of their case on the merits, Mr. Besse and those opposed to labeling of any kind have resorted to a flank attack. They have stated in testimony and have whispered about that the efforts to get a labeling law which will differentiate between virgin wool and shoddy or reclaimed wool originated with wool producers and the Forstmann Woolen Co. On page 46 of the hearings, Mr. Besse says S. 162's principal proponents are the wool growers' associations, except California, and the Forstmann Woolen Co. The view of the secretary of the California association will be given later.

At page 149, Mr. Dubow, executive director of the Merchants Ladies Garment Association, New York City, who opposes labeling of any kind, says that so far as woolen manufacturers are concerned only the Forstmann corporation gives unqualified support to S. 162.

At pages 199 and 200, Samuel Klein, executive director of the Industrial Council of Cloak and Suit Manufacturers, Inc., admits that many manufacturers have submitted letters in support of S. 162, but he is of the opinion these supporters thus write because they love Mr. Forstmann. Then he adds, "So do I love Forstmann."

These statements, and this whispering campaign, coming to the attention of the Forstmann Co., Mr. Curt E. Forstmann, president of the company, submitted a statement on the matter which appears on pages 267 and 268 of the hearings. That statement is well worth reading in its entirety, but I quote only two paragraphs, as follows:

In the fall of 1937, Mr. Irving Fox, representing the National Retail Dry Goods Association, asked for an interview with my father, Mr. Julius Forstmann, then president and now chairman of the board of the Forstmann Woolen Co. In the presence of my father's secretary, Mr. F. E. Ackerman, Mr. Fox said that in view of the ever-increasing consumer demand for proper fiber identification in fabrics he thought that the retailers should comply with this demand and that he would like to have our firm join his organization in furthering this movement. He particularly stressed the fact that this identification should go further than the labeling bill then sponsored by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers and should definitely differentiate between virgin wool as it comes from the sheep and reclaimed wool, or shoddy, which is used as a substitute.

About 10 days after Mr. Fox's unsolicited visit, Miss Julia K. Jaffray, of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, who have been prominently identified with the consumers' demand for the proper disclosure of rayon through Federal Trade Commission rulings, also approached my father to ask our advice and help on the problem of honest fiber identification in the wool industry. While our concern has always been in favor of the proper labeling of wool products and while my father had played a prominent part in the elimination of shoddy from the uniforms of our armed forces during the World War, he realized that only with organized consumer demand, such as forced the passage of the Pure Food and Drugs Act, could this legislation be made really effective. This straightforward request from both the representatives of the consumers and retailers brought my father to the decision to take an active part in this question.

Mr. Curt E. Forstmann then states that due to the illness of his father he has carried on in support of S. 162. Parenthetically it should be stated that while Mr. Klein may have a diluted platonic affection for the elder Mr. Forstmann there are shoddy sharks in New York using shoddy, who have imitated in weave, pattern, and color fabrics manufactured by the Forstmann Co. from virgin wool and have palmed such false substitutes off on the consumers as Forstmann products. Senators interested in the details of these reprehensible practices may read Mr. Forstmann's testimony on pages 128 and 129 of the record of the hearings.

Miss Julia K. Jaffray, chairman of the department of economic adjustment, New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, comprising over 200,000 women in the city of Greater New York, tells us on pages 99 and 100 of the hearings that she went to Mr. Forstmann seeking his cooperation in securing proper wool identification; that Mr. Forstmann was a stranger to her but she went to him because she knew his products carried a virgin-wool label. On page 97, Miss Jaffray inserts in the record the resolution of the Federated Women's Club of 1939 endorsing this bill and the like Martin House bill.

On page 103 of the hearings Mr. J. Byron Wilson, representing the National Wool Growers Association and the Wyoming Wool Growers Association, states:

So far as the National Wool Growers Association is concerned, I may say that the Forstmann Co. has been assisting us, at our request, as our technical advisers in our campaign to obtain the enactment of truth-in-fabric legislation, S. 162 (the Schwartz bill). The Forstmann Co. did not volunteer this assistance, but that cooperation was accorded at our request.

Mr. President, as to the support of S. 162 by the wool growers' associations of the several States and by the National Wool Growers Association, Mr. Besse invariably declares that the California Wool Growers Association does not favor separate identifications of virgin wool and reclaimed wool. He says the letter from the secretary of that association should appear in the record of the hearings. It appears at page 267. This letter addressed to the chairman of the subcommittee, dated February 24, 1939, reads:

Concerning S. 162. We strongly favor legislation providing for labeling of fabrics designating percentage of each fiber contained therein. Substitution of other fibers therein masquerading as wool is unfair competition. This is most important problem confronting marketing of wool today. We ask that this matter be straightened out and legislation enacting giving this needed protection before considering differentiation between virgin wool and other wools.

CALIFORNIA WOOL GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
By W. P. WING, Secretary.

So we see, Mr. President, that it is Mr. Wing's view, not that he opposes differentiation of virgin and reclaimed wool, but that the Congress should first pass a strong labeling act, designating the percentages of fibers other than wool before legislating against shoddy.

Evidently Mr. Wing is in agreement with all the other wool growers' associations, except on a matter of procedure. I am not advised that the California Wool Growers Association, as such, has ever endorsed Mr. Wing even on procedure.

Mr. President, during the course of the hearings several women representing various consumer organizations testified in support of S. 162. Later, in his own testimony, at page 45, Mr. Besse asked the subcommittee to furnish him with the names and post-office addresses of one group of 200,000 women. Just why the names and addresses of 200,000 would satisfy him when we could have asked for two million is yet a mystery. Undoubtedly his idea was that these great women's organizations spoke only through their officers, and that the membership did not know what this is all about. And it is fair to say that many supporters of S. 162 are not familiar with the language of the bill. But they are familiar with their own experiences as consumers—and women for themselves and families purchase at least 85 percent of textile products. They may not know shoddy when they buy it. But they certainly know it after they or their families wear or use something they thought was real wool but which in fact was shoddy. Mr. Besse's implied or facetious assumption that American women have not given earnest thought to fabric content is aptly answered by Mrs. Puncke, representing the farm women in 10 States, beginning on page 51 of the hearings, and particularly in a paragraph at the top of page 52; also by the letter of May Peake, on page 82. Mrs. Peake is president of the ladies' auxiliary of the International Association of Machinists.

Again, Mr. President, we are assured by opponents of this bill that the wool growers themselves are suffering from a pathetic delusion that this bill will decrease the demand for wool, and thus lower the price they receive. So our opponents tell us this bill will increase the price of wool to the hurt of the consumer and decrease the price of wool to the hurt of the producers. Mr. President, the farmers and flockmasters of America are an intelligent, clear-thinking group of citizens. And let it be remembered that they, their families, and their employees are also consumers. It is true they may not possess the finesse and aptitude displayed by Jacob in his dealings with the astute Assyrian Laban. Today the wool business still attracts bright minds and good traders—but most of them have abandoned the prosaic farms and ranges and moved into the metropolitan centers where some 266 corporations have, in self-protection, each from the other, organized a conciliation board which functions in that capacity at a cost of over $280,000 a year.

Mr. President, the supporters and proponents of the Schwartz and Martin bills seek properly to appreciate and evaluate the advice and solicitude our opponents have shown and offered us. We are compelled to dissent when we are told that neither producers, consumers, nor labor organizations know what they want, nor why, nor what is best for them. We regret our opponents ask us to have faith in their assurances of deep interest in our welfare. James advises that "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Some cynic of a later day added that faith may also be killed by works of a king. The trouble with our protesting friends is that they ask the consumer to accept on faith without exposure of the works.

As Loring A. Schuler, editor of the Ladies Home Journal, said in an editorial dealing with all shoddy manufacturers:

> She (woman) is learning that she cannot trust anonymity, for while all anonymous goods are not necessarily shoddy, all shoddy is always anonymous.

So we ask for legislation which will make that which is now anonymous manifest; legislation which will protect the public, and add strength tc the efforts of the textile industry to protect itself from the crucifying competition from which it now suffers.

Mr. President, let it be said here, and said emphatically, that we who support this legislation realize and know that the vast majority of the men and corporations engaged in the textile industry and merchandising are upright, honest, and reliable men and organizations. Some of these men believe this legislation unnecessary, that it will be difficult of enforcement, and in some cases may work individual hardship on some of them. Those objections have all been considered, and we are convinced that any temporary hardship will be far outweighed by the major good to be accomplished, and most of the objections are without merit.

DETECTING SHODDY

One of the principal contentions of our opponents in the past has been that it is impossible to detect shoddy or reworked wool in a cloth after it has been manufactured. Can shoddy be detected and its percentage determined by examination of a fabric? Our opponents say it cannot, and hence that enforcement officers must rely upon the records of the manufacturer of the fabric.

Early in 1938 it was the consensus of the textile opinion that analysis of cloth would not detect the presence of shoddy or reclaimed wool, or that the percentage of shoddy could not be determined. Mr. Werner von Bergen, chief chemist of the Forstmann Woolen Co., writing early in 1938, declared that in many cases it was difficult or impossible to do so. In May 1938 Mr. Besse sent a questionnaire to the principal private testing laboratories asking whether the presence of shoddy could be identified in fabric. Most of the replies state that reclaimed wool cannot be identified; others say the percentage cannot be determined. The National Bureau of Standards advised it was not equipped to make such tests and that so far as it knew accepted methods had not been developed elsewhere. That was the picture over a year ago. It is not the fact today.

Because of the pending legislation and the widespread interest in the matter, the experts in the Department of Agriculture have made continued study of the subject, as have wool technologists employed in private industry. From these sources we are assured that virgin wool and reclaimed wool cannot only be separately identified in the manufactured cloth, but the respective percentages determined with close accuracy.

In a letter of date February 21, 1939 (p. 37 of hearings) addressed to the chairman of the Senate subcommittee, Mr. J. R. Mohler, Chief of Bureau, Department of Agriculture, advises:

> First. The presence of reclaimed wool fiber of any grade in a wool product can be determined scientifically.
> Second. The relative contents of virgin wool and reclaimed wool fibers in a fabric containing only these two kinds of fibers can, according to recent investigations, be determined within 10 percent of the actual content of these fibers.

This second answer is limited to fabrics containing only virgin and reclaimed wool because that was the exact form of the question submitted by the subcommittee to the Department of Agriculture. It is, of course, well known that old established methods will determine the presence of fibers other than wool.

The Department of Agriculture continued its studies, and later, on March 18, in reply to a letter from the House Committee on Foreign and Interstate Commerce, the following letter was received from the Department of Agriculture:

> UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
> BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
> Washington, D. C., March 18, 1939.
> Mr. F. R. RANDOLPH,
> Assistant Committee Clerk, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of March 11 with reference to H. R. 944—

That is the companion to Senate bill 162—> and stating that the subcommittee would appreciate at its hearings the appearance of a representative from this Bureau to give testimony concerning fiber analysis. The Bureau will be glad to send a representative to such hearings as you may designate.

The questions you asked are listed and answered below:

1. Can your Department determine the presence of reworked wool (or shoddy) in fabrics and garments? Yes.

2. Can you detect the percentage of reworked wool in a fabric composed of virgin wool and reclaimed wool, and can you detect the percentage of virgin wool in such fabrics? The percentage of virgin wool and reworked wool in a fabric may be determined. Based upon the Bureau's research with microscopical methods upon fabrics of known fiber content in which only new and reworked wool are present, the content of reworked wool or virgin wool may be detected within 10 percent.

3. Can you detect the presence and percentage of rayon or other synthetic fibers, silk, or cotton in fabrics or garments? Yes.

Very truly yours,

J. R. MOHLER, Chief of Bureau.

In February of this year, Mr. Werner Von Bergen, chief chemist and technical expert of the Forstmann Woolen Co., who had continued his experimentation and study for a scientific method of determining the percentage of reclaimed wool, tested his work by the examination of a group of six fabrics containing virgin and reclaimed wool.

Lest some may question these results because of the attack made on Mr. Forstmann, I quote the following appraisal of Mr. Von Bergen and his associate author of the American Wool Handbook given by Mr. Besse in his preface to that technical work. He says:

The authors deserve much credit for their painstaking efforts in compiling and editing this volume. Mr. Werner Von Bergen is one of the leading experts of the industry. He is the chief chemist of Forstmann Woolen Co., of Passaic, N. J., and a teacher of wool manufacture at Columbia University.

Mr. Herbert R. Mauersberger, technically trained at Lowell Textile Institute, is technical editor of one of the leading trade publications and has for many years been in charge of the evening textile courses at Columbia University. Both men have made valuable contributions to standardization and research in the industry.

At the time Mr. Von Bergen made his tests neither he, Mr. Forstmann, nor any of his employees knew the virgin or reclaimed wool content of any of these fabrics. The fabrics had been supplied by other manufacturers. After Von Bergen had completed his examination and submitted his report, the actual virgin-wool and reclaimed-wool content in each fabric was received from these outside sources. Von Bergen's report, No. G 89a, and a full statement of the results, will be found on page 269 of the Senate hearings. Mr. Von Bergen has demonstrated that by use of microphotography and other used scientific methods the actual virgin and reclaimed wool content of fabric can be determined within close percentage.

RESORT TO MILL RECORDS

I refer to these matters, Mr. President, because it has been stated so often that if we should pass the bill it could not be enforced. Last year, as stated by some of the testimony and letters in the hearings, I laid particular stress upon the fact that the actual fiber content of any fabric can always be determined by mill records, allowing for slight variances in the process of manufacture due to stretching of certain fibers in the spinning of the threads. With the close approximations of actual content in wool products now capable of scientific demonstration by experts in the Department of Agriculture and by private testing laboratories where supplied with proper equipment and trained experts, it can be ascertained whether the label is widely at variance with facts, and the Federal Trade Commission can determine whether the particular case warrants recourse to the mill's records for corroborative proof.

As against resort to the mill records, it was contended in the Senate last session when this subject was under debate that examination of mill records would entail the expense and use of an army of inspectors. The facts are just the reverse. The Federal Trade Commission is of record, stating S. 162 and H. R. 944 will in fact reduce the number of needed investigators now employed by that Commission. The Commission's letter reads:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 27, 1939.

Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN LEA: Your letter of March 10, 1939, in reference to the Martin bill, H. R. 944, respecting the labeling of wool products, was duly received. Consideration has been given to your statement that your committee would appreciate information as to the number of additional personnel, if any, the Federal Trade Commission would require to administer the provisions of the bill if enacted; and the additional cost, if any, which would be involved in the administration and enforcement of the law.

After examination of the various factors entering into the question, and with due regard to the prospective needs so far as they may be predicted at this time, it would appear that no addition to the appropriations and personnel which Congress has provided for the Commission for the next fiscal year will be required in the premises. Therefore, answering specifically, the Commission states on present conditions that, in its opinion, no additional personnel or additional costs over what are now required in this field will be needed for the administration or enforcement of the provisions of the bill.

By way of partial explanation I may point out that matters covered by the measure are the source of many complaints coming to the Commission from the public and from businessmen; and a substantial part of our regular personnel and funds is necessarily required for handling these matters in the work of effecting as much relief as is possible under existing law. It appears that the bill, if enacted, would so clarify the situation in respect to destructive or harmful practices in the marketing of wool products as to simplify and facilitate the administration of the laws relating to transactions in interstate commerce. A larger proportion of voluntary compliance may also be expected, and a consequent diminution of the types of complaints now required to be handled by the Commission would probably result. A more effective utilization of the Commission's present facilities for protecting the public interest could no doubt be accomplished.

The savings in administrative and enforcement cost thus effected would be an offset to whatever additional administrative costs the measure might entail in other respects. These savings in certain directions, which it appears may be made possible, would be a material factor in reducing the proportion of administrative costs in relation to the protection afforded the public.

We appreciate the opportunity to be of service to the committee, and I trust this fully supplies the information desired.

Yours very sincerely,

R. E. FREER, Chairman.

It was and is also complained that it will be impossible to secure protection from imports from foreign countries. By tying in labeling with the custom laws and with cooperation from the Treasury Department the difficulties surmised will be overcome under the terms of Senate bill 162 and House bill 944. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter to the House committee, specifies the number and official character of employees needed at our ports and abroad to perform the duties required. The total added cost to the Treasury Department he places at $53,000 per year. In view of the large and increasing volume of foreign imports and fiber substitution and adulteration, plus the fact that protection will be afforded not only to the consumer but to American competitors and labor, this added cost is nominal indeed.

The Secretary's letter reads:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 29, 1939.

Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA,
Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I refer to your letter dated March 10, 1939, in which you request further information with regard to the additional customs personnel necessary and an estimate of the additional cost if the bill (H. R. 944) "to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes, is enacted into law.

It is the Department's estimate that four examiners of merchandise and four clerks at a total cost of $23,200 will be required in the offices of the respective appraisers of merchandise. It is also estimated that three junior analysts and five assistant analysts will be required in the respective laboratories at a total cost of $19,000, and that two additional investigative officers will be required to make investigations abroad. The salaries, housing allowances, and travel and subsistence expenses for such latter officers will total, it is estimated, $13,000.

The total estimated additional cost to the customs service if the bill in question is enacted into law will, therefore, amount to $53,200.

Very truly yours,

JOHN W. HANES,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

There is yet another substantial aid to enforcement. Reputable manufacturers of wool products, whether all virgin or mixed virgin and better grade reworked wool, will speedily spot the "chiselers" and cheaters, conscious that there is a Federal law and an effective enforcing agency to put out of business those who resort to false labeling, or at least compel them to use correct labels and fair competition.

Mr. President, that is as far as I had planned to go with the preliminary statement this evening. I notice that it is now about 5 o'clock.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 322 OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1938

During the delivery of Mr. SCHWARTZ's speech,

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, in order that I may make a brief request in connection with two bills?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed Senate bill 2694, amending section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Immediately following the passage of the bill the Senate received from the House House Joint Resolution 342, which is a companion measure to Senate bill 2694. The two measures, while slightly different in phraseology, meet the same objective. In view of the fact that the Senate bill has not been transmitted to the House and the fact that House Joint Resolution 342 has been read twice and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I first ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 342, in order that the Senate may immediately consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. I now ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the Senate immediately consider House Joint Resolution 342.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, what is the measure?

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that House Joint Resolution 342, which was passed by the House, is a companion measure to Senate bill 2694, which we passed yesterday. The phraseology is a little different, and all I am asking is that we accept the House joint resolution as a substitute.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the measure?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Illinois kindly reexplain?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it makes little difference. Perhaps I had better act in the abstract. I am constrained to object, during the consideration of another bill, and without a quorum call, to taking up any bill of any kind, of great or little importance, in this manner.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator from Vermont withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator that the measure which came over from the House, affecting section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, is identical with the bill which we passed yesterday, with the exception of a little phraseology. All I was hoping to do was to get the bill to the Department of Agriculture as quickly as possible, because, if we are going to pass this kind of a bill, in order to give them an opportunity to perfect the mechanics of its administration, they need it as soon as possible. That is the only reason I am asking for its consideration at the present time. I assure the Senator from Vermont there is absolutely nothing in the bill that is contrary to what the Senate did yesterday, with the exception of a slight change in phraseology involving two or three words.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator if he would not feel just as well pleased with the expedition of this proposed legislation if it should go over until tomorrow morning immediately after the meeting of the Senate?

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from Vermont has any objection to this method of procedure, of course, I will have to comply with his request and let the joint resolution go over, but the change is so simple that I did not think there would be any objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am moved to believe what the Senator from Illinois says, but I think the rule ought to be observed in the closing days of the session not to pass measures without opportunity for all who may be interested to know of the action proposed to be taken. There are very few Senators now present.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to assure the Senator from Vermont that I am not attempting to do anything in connection with this proposed legislation which has not already been done by the Senate. I was merely attempting to expedite the passage of this measure in order that the Department of Agriculture may receive it as soon as possible and may have as much time as possible to perfect the mechanics and details incident to working out the program that is contemplated under the bill which the Senate passed yesterday, at which time there was considerable debate in which several Members of the Senate participated.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield for a comment?

Mr. LUCAS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want the Senator to understand that there is not any special occasion that causes me to make this objection. It is a rule that I have come to find necessary under the circumstances. It applies generally and does not apply only to this bill.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that, and, under those circumstances, I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that this colloquy appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ].

Mr. AUSTIN. In view of the statement of the Presiding Officer, I should like to have the RECORD show that the request was made during the address of the Senator from Wyoming, and to have the request recorded as preceding the colloquy.

GAMBLING IN COMMODITY FUTURES MARKETS

After the conclusion of the speech of Mr. SCHWARTZ,

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the Nation has been shocked, and I hope somewhat edified, by the recent revelations concerning the president of Louisiana State University.

The Associated Press reports that according to a preliminary survey by a grand jury at Baton Rouge, Dr. Smith possessed some $1,209,000 of university bonds, of which he used about half in wheat speculations.

It is not my intention to go into affairs in the sovereign State of Louisiana or to go into the history of Dr. Smith's handling of public funds.

What I wish to call attention to is the statement in all the newspapers that half of the $1,209,000 of university bonds went into wheat speculation, or into "trading in grain futures," that being the more dignified term. Gambling in the grain market was the main cause of his downfall.

In this connection I offer to the Senate an editorial published a few days ago by W. D. Jamieson, former Representative from Iowa, in his weekly newspaper, the Window Seat, a column nearly always worth reading. I ask that Mr. Jamieson's remarks in the Window Seat be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT, BE CONSISTENT

You know, Mr. Franklin D., I speak to you as a devoted friend. I want to help.

I'm with you 100 percent in wanting to keep the Wall Street fat boys from juggling the foreign exchange to the hurt of our people and of our foreign trade. Yes; I'm with you a 1,000 percent.

But look here. Don't you know the Chicago Board of Trade and cotton exchanges are juggling the farm producers' markets all the time, bringing ruin to millions of our best people and keeping the depression right here, constantly, eating our vitals?

With only a quarter of an eye you can see plainly that this grain futures gambling is a thousand times worse than foreign exchange juggling ever was, in its effect on farm prices and business.

Please be consistent. Go after the grain futures gamblers as well as the Wall Street foreign exchange gamblers.

KNOCK OUT OUR BIGGEST GAMBLERS

Do you know, Mr. President, that this grain futures gambling amounted to thirteen and one-half billions—billions—in 1938—that it has been running twenty-five billions annually before last year—and probably less than one-tenth of 1 percent of trades carried actual deliveries of the grain? It was almost entirely gambling.

Now, your enemies in Congress may prevent your keeping the Wall Street gamblers from being able to juggle foreign exchange, but I believe there are enough votes in both Houses of Congress to pass a cost-of-production bill for the farmers on their home consumed big crops if you will help.

Come on, Mr. President, let's all shove together to put this farm plan over. Then we'll knock out these really big grain gamblers, we'll have the farmers making good money when they have good crops, and you'll be consistent.

TERRIBLE GRAIN FUTURES TRAGEDY

Dr. Smith built the Louisiana State University up splendidly—a man of great ability—he gambled on wheat futures—lost—is short some $500,000—a disgrace to a wonder learning place for youngsters—overnight a fugitive from justice—can't be found—suffering torments.

Of course, he must be punished—but we also pity.

President Roosevelt, aren't you and the balance of us to blame in part? Haven't we permitted this futures gambling to keep on?

Mr. CAPPER. Publicity, a weekly newspaper published at Wichita, Kans., by E. J. Garner, contained a pertinent editorial in its last issue. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Here is another sample of the damnable speculative board-of-trade gambling that Publicity has frequently and persistently condemned. The president of the Louisiana State University resigned and dropped out of sight. A check-up shows he was in the red $100,000, and it is chargeable to playing the wheat market. The operators of these "designated markets" allegedly knew this ignorant educator was squandering public funds, and they should be compelled to refund every dollar thus stolen, and the doors of these dens of iniquity should be securely padlocked against a repetition of such a crime by dupable stool pigeons.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, as I see it, and as I have seen and labeled it for years, the commodity futures market is undeniably a gambling racket. Yet, strange as this may seem, it appears to wear the garments of respectability. Ultra-respectable people, men and women who move in the highest circles of business society and who frequent the most exclusive clubs and churches, play the futures market without compunction, without a qualm of conscience.

And why not, Mr. President? In the schools and colleges it is regularly taught, thanks to the effective propaganda of the commodity gamblers, that futures trading is perfectly legal—as I am sorry to say it is—and legitimate, and that it serves a fine economic purpose. Professors of agricultural economics regularly teach their pupils as facts things which, if said in a court by a witness, might well be called perjury.

Many wheat growers in Kansas and other States have written me that the futures market is not a fair market at all. It is a gambling game, in which the cards are stacked against the consumer and against the producer. So far as the wheat grower and the cotton grower are concerned, and so far as the consumers are concerned, it is "Heads you win; tails I lose."

The 1938 report of the Commodity Exchange Administration shows that only thirteen one-hundredths of 1 percent of the volume of wheat futures trading for the fiscal year resulted in delivery of actual wheat. The other 99.87 percent of trading was in "paper wheat"—wheat that never was sown; wheat that never was harvested; wheat that never went to market; wheat that never was ground into flour; wheat that never became bread; wheat that never was at all.

Mr. President, it is time the Congress recognized futures trading in the necessities of life for just what it is—gambling with the welfare, with the very life of producers and consumers—and it is high time that we put a stop to this gambling. I say that Editor Jamieson and Editor Garner are correct in their contention that the Government should put an end to this kind of gambling and should not longer delay in the doing, but do it now.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6984) to provide a feasible and comprehensive plan for the variable payment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects to protect the investment of the United States in such projects, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. HILL, and Mr. HAWKS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28) authorizing certain changes in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

LOANS FOR SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have in my hand an article from the Boston Evening Transcript of July 18 entitled "Morgenthau Hails Lending Plan as Way to Balance United States Budget."

That is something new in finance so far as I am concerned and so far as New England is concerned, the territory from which I come, and so far as this country is concerned, judging from my knowledge of history. It is proposed to spend $3,800,000,000, and that is said to be the way to balance the Budget!

I ask that the article be inserted in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Boston Evening Transcript of July 18, 1939]

MORGENTHAU HAILS LENDING PLAN AS WAY TO BALANCE UNITED STATES BUDGET—SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS PRAISED BY TREASURY HEAD—"TRANSITION POINT IN PUBLIC FINANCES" SEEN RESULT OF BOOT-STRAP LOANS TO BUSINESS

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Secretary Morgenthau praised the President's $2,800,000,000 lending bill today as a "real advance toward the goal of bringing our governmental expenditures within our receipts."

Testifying before the Senate Banking Committee, the Treasury head said he liked the idea of lending billions of dollars for self-liquidating projects.

"It may well turn out to mark a transition point in the public finances," he declared, adding:

"If we can substitute self-liquidating investments in place of cutright Government expenditures, we shall have made a great step toward bridging the gap between revenue and expenditures.

"This distinction between self-liquidating investments and nonrecoverable expenditures is not merely a bookkeeping one but is very soundly based.

INTEREST OUT OF EARNINGS

"In the case of nonrecoverable expenditures, the servicing of the debts created to finance them must be met out of general tax revenues. However, in the case of self-liquidating loans such as are proposed in this bill, the interest and amortization payments are met out of the earnings on the investment."

The Secretary's formal statement made no mention of the administration's desire to pass the bill at this session, instead of waiting until next year, as some legislators have proposed, but yesterday he told reporters he favored immediate action.

Morgenthau reviewed major provisions of the bill. These included items which over the period of a few years would provide $750,000,000 for highway projects; $350,000,000 for loans to municipalities; $500,000,000 for leasing railroad equipment; $460,000,000 additional for rural electrification projects; $500,000,000 additional loans to farm tenants, to enable them to buy their own land; and an additional $100,000,000 for export-import-bank credits, to finance foreign purchases of American merchandise.

REPAYMENT PROBABLE

Another feature of the program, doubling the present $800,000,000 borrowing power of the United States Housing Authority, is in separate legislation.

Morgenthau told the committee he did not "wish to predict that the Government will suffer no loss on any of the various features" of the program, but said the projects had been selected because of "a high probability of repayments."

Mentioning huge sums of idle money in the banks and low interest rates, Morgenthau said:

"In times like the present it therefore becomes the Government's function to act as a catalytic agent to bring together investors who are willing to lend their savings at rates of interest low enough and borrowers who are able and willing to employ funds for productive purposes.

"A low rate of interest, if effectively utilized, constitutes one of the most potent weapons our economic system has developed for stimulating business activity * * *.

FUNDS MEET BORROWERS

"It is this principle of low interest rates which is utilized in the bill before you. The Government is bringing together idle funds and borrowers who are unable to borrow under existing circumstances. It does more than that. It creates the additional incentive for lenders to lend and for the borrowers to borrow by giving the stamp of approval and administrative assistance to useful and paying enterprises which otherwise would not be undertaken at this time. Thus men and capital now unemployed are put to work.

"It is an economic loss to permit investment funds to lie unused when they could be used in productive effort. But that loss is trivial in comparison with the permanent and irreparable economic loss of allowing men of many skills to be idle when there is useful work that they could be doing."

Mr. BRIDGES. Today I addressed a letter to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, asking him whether it was his intention to call Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes as witnesses on the bill. I may say, for the information of the Senate, that the reason why I asked the question is because Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes are the greatest spenders of all time. Each of them has spent billions and billions and billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money. They are the greatest experts on spending we have in this country. They know, better than anybody else, how to get rid of money and get rid of it fast. I understand that the committee has called Mr. Wallace, Mr. Eccles, and a number of other witnesses, but has not called Ickes and has not called Hopkins. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if it is the intention of the committee to call Ickes and Hopkins; and if not, why not, if the Senator cares to answer?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the committee has invited as witnesses those who are to have charge of the administration of the different provisions of the bill introduced by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I am guided entirely by the author of the bill and the committee itself. No suggestion has been made by members of the committee that Mr. Ickes or Mr. Hopkins be called to testify, because they are not concerned in the administration of the bill.

The hearings on the bill were concluded today. I received the Senator's letter about 10 minutes ago. I did not hear from the Senator until after the hearings had been concluded.

So far as I am concerned, I should be delighted to have the advice and guidance of the gentlemen the Senator has named, because I think they have been unusually efficient administrators in their various activities during this administration. They have done well, and I think the country believes they have done well. But there was no particular reason for calling them as witnesses at this hearing.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator. I may point out that it is my understanding that perhaps a little bird has whispered in somebody's ear that Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes should not be called, for the reason that I understand that in spite of being the big spending experts of the country they are opposed to this spending program.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that he has information which has not come to me. I have not heard that. I doubt whether the Senator has been well informed on that question. I have not communicated with either of the gentlemen and, therefore, am not in a position to deny what the Senator says. I do, however, want to express my doubt as to the accuracy of the Senator's information.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator perhaps qualify his remarks when he says the country has come to have confidence in Mr. Ickes and Mr. Hopkins as effective and efficient administrators, in view of the fact that the country has come to know them as the most prolific and effective spenders? That is the reputation I have understood from the country as the one by which they would be best known today.

At this time I merely want to bring out the fact that we have before the country at present this program for spending $3,800,000,000 under the guise of a self-liquidating project, and Mr. Morgenthau says that is a great way to balance the Budget. I do not know what Mr. Ickes or Mr. Hopkins would have said, but I recognize them as authorities on spending. They certainly have spent enough billions of the money of the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that many of his colleagues voted for the legislation which entrusted the spending of these funds to the distinguished public officials the Senator has named. I have heard no proof presented on this floor that the funds were not properly expended, or that they did not greatly benefit the country.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has never heard, then, about any impropriety in connection with the spending of the funds, or any questions raised in that connection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know who wrote the headlines of the article to which the Senator has referred, and which he has inserted in the RECORD; but if the Senator will read the statement of Secretary Morgenthau before the committee on yesterday I think he will find that it is a very constructive, level-headed, conservative statement of his reasons for believing that the program contained in the bill is a wise one. Certainly there is nothing in it which would justify the flaming headlines to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Kentucky has said that the program is a conservative one. Does the Senator consider a program for spending $3,800,000,000 a conservative spending program?

Mr. BARKLEY. That depends on what it is spent for. I think the program outlined in the bill is a conservative program. I will say to the Senator that it will not carry $3,800,000,000. It carries approximately $2,700,000,000, of which $140,000,000 is already appropriated; so the net authorization in addition to the present authorization will be about $2,560,000,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator, then, considers a program for spending between two and three billion dollars a conservative spending program?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; for the type of projects and activities intended to be carried on through the program, I think it is a constructive, sound, and conservative program.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should hate to hear the Senator make a statement in regard to what he would consider to be a liberal spending program.

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably the Senator would hate to hear me make a statement of that sort, and he no doubt hates to hear me describe even this one as a conservative program. I cannot imagine that the Senator would be very much enamored of any statement I might make on the subject, so I am not enthusiastic about enlisting his enthusiasm over my bill.

Mr. BRIDGES. I always like to listen to the Senator from Kentucky. Particularly it is rather appealing to me when the leader of the Democratic Party in the United States Senate stands up and calls a program for spending between two and three billion dollars a conservative spending program.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator and I will not quibble over definitions. I hope he is going to support the bill when it comes on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will say to the Senator, so that there will be no worry on his part—he probably cares very little whether I support the bill or not—that there will be no danger of my supporting it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope there will be no danger even without the Senator's support.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire one question?

Mr. BRIDGES. Surely.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator studied the bill?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not know that I am a student of the bill. I have read the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator is expressing the idea that this is simply a spending program without any restrictions or qualifications, I desire to state that as a matter of fact the money can only be disbursed—as I am sure the Senator will agree—for self-liquidating projects, so that all the money which is to be disbursed will return to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator down in his heart does not for a moment think all this money is going to be returned to the Treasury, does he?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I do, absolutely; and I rely on the experience the Federal Government thus far has had in lending money for self-liquidating projects. Mr. Jones, of the R. F. C., came before our committee and testified that in the case of the loans made for self-liquidating projects under his administration, he is confident that every dollar of the money will be returned, and his experience so far confirms that prediction. As a matter of fact, if I may inform the Senator of some matters which undoubtedly he has not had an opportunity to look up, the experience has been so favorable that the R. F. C. was able to sell to the public the bonds which it took as collateral for certain of these self-liquidating loans, at a profit to the R. F. C. In other words, the bonds were sold at a premium. That has been the experience with self-liquidating projects. If the Senator will permit, I should like to refer to the origin of this authorization to lend money for self-liquidating projects. It so happened that I was one of the sponsors of a bill during the administration of President Hoover——

Mr. BRIDGES. I am glad the Senator brought that out. It was in a Republican administration that this lending for self-liquidating projects began. It was not under Roosevelt.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator just said it was under Hoover.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator can get any gratification out of that, very well; in fact, the Hoover administration sabotaged the program. But no matter under what administration the money was loaned to these different agencies, the actual loan experience has been extraordinarily favorable. I am confident that every dollar which is authorized under the bill now being discussed will be returned to the Treasury, and in the meantime will be of great benefit to the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created in 1932, under Mr. Hoover. Its authority to lend money at that time, however, was very largely limited and restricted to great corporations—railroads, for instance. Its authority has been very greatly liberalized since that, so as to make it possible for it to lend money to business generally, large and small. If the Senator gets any particular glee out of the fact that it was under the Hoover administration that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created, he is welcome to it. It was created under Mr. Hoover; but its facilities for lending money were not broadened so as to apply to ordinary business and industry, except in a limited way, until the law was liberalized by the present administration.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 19, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we pray that Thy countless mercies may soften our hearts and lead us to repentance; forgive us in the plentitude of Thy love, and may we henceforth walk in the way of Thy commandments in accordance with the voice of our Saviour. Give us the passion that loses itself in knowing that mercy is greater than sacrifice; that truth is more enduring than fiction; and that goodness is far above greatness. O God, may our complainings and our discontent be silent, and let the peace of God that passeth all understanding fall alike upon those who lose and those who win in the struggle of life. Give to all the final victory of faith, and bless the hushed voices of all hearts. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE FIRST WOMAN'S RIGHTS CONVENTION

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, just 91 years ago today the first woman's rights convention was held in Seneca Falls, N. Y., the State which I have the honor in part to represent. So I feel a certain pride in calling the attention of my colleagues to this anniversary.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton was the one who had the daring to call such an unheard-of convention. About 100 people attended, to the great horror and indignation of the press and the clergy of the country. The women who sponsored that convention were denounced as being immodest, unwomanly, and shameless, and one clergyman went so far as to say that they were subversive of all the laws of man, of nature, and of God. Well, you see what has happened. You see the lengths to which we have been led since that convention. Here are women sitting in the halls of Congress side by side with you men.

I feel that Elizabeth Cady Stanton is the spiritual godmother of all women who enter Congress, and I trust that each one of them will be inspired by memory of this truly great woman to give the best that is in her to the service of her country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter appearing in the New York Herald Tribune by the noted educator Katharine Devereux Blake.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein an editorial which points out the difference in the way in which Governor Murphy and Governor Dickinson handle a strike.

Mr. HOOK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a press release from the Department of Commerce relative to the French lace industry.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to call the attention of the House leader over there to the fact that if we do not get a little discipline from that side on these objections I will have to defend myself.

Mr. HOOK. We do not have a bunch of rubber stamps over here like you have on that side of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 367 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ACCEPTANCE OF EASEMENT IN CERTAIN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1558) to provide for the acceptance of an easement with respect to certain lands in New Mexico, and for other purposes, insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DEROUEN, ROBINSON of Utah, HILL, ENGLEBRIGHT, and WADSWORTH.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a brief statement from the Lawyers Guild.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman from Washington whether he has been consulting with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] on the propriety of making objections to such requests?

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I have not been consulting with anyone at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Raymond Clapper which appeared in the Washington Daily News of Monday, July 17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] whether he has been consulting with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] on the propriety of making objection to requests to insert speeches in the RECORD.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] comes from the same State as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is in better position to consult him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief editorial from a newspaper in my district on a very good subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech delivered by Colonel Gorrell at the Air Transportation Association of America meeting held at Dallas yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the majority leader whether he has noticed the size of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the last month or so. It is the largest CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that I have seen published in 10 years, and it is because of the fact that everything outside of the happenings in Congress is filling up the RECORD. If the majority leader wants the RECORD as large as it is now, then I say that everybody should put in these speeches from people not Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object to the request?

Mr. RICH. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a copy of a letter by a constituent of mine addressed to the White House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOREIGN DEBTS MUST BE PAID

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to show the Speaker and the Members of the House where they can get some money. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement showing what various countries owe us money for post- and pre-war debts. It amounts to more than $12,500,000,000. If Secretary Hull will stop making reciprocal-trade agreements permitting all kinds of foodstuffs and manufactured articles to come into this country in competition with the products of our farmers, labor, and our manufacturers, we will be able to sell our goods to our own people, the best markets in the world; and if the State Department will take the time to send these countries who owe us a statement of the amount they owe us, we ought to get in $12,500,000,000. That is where we can get a little money of this great debt this administration is creating, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the Speaker will assist me in getting the Secretary of State to do that. It is your duty and the duty of every Member of Congress to insist that these bills be paid.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is now complaining about these statements being inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that all in the world it costs to print these extra pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the ink and the paper. We already have the machinery, we have the type, we have the men employed; they are on the pay roll and are going to stay there. These extra pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD cost only the price of the ink and the paper it takes to print them. Therefore, I hope no one will object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, that shows all the gentleman knows about business and the cost of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The ink and paper is a very small item of the cost.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The war and post-war debts as they stood on June 15 of this year were:

Belgium	$454,178,478
Estonia	20,766,730
Finland	8,173,505
France	4,237,649,725
Germany	193,384,575
Great Britain	5,427,315,134
Greece	34,111,553
Hungary	2,330,683
Italy	2,038,681,997
Latvia	8,558,591
Lithuania	7,710,878
Poland	259,877,333
Rumania	66,230,864
Yugoslavia	62,190,546

Of these nations, only Finland paid the $160,693 installment due on the 15th. The Finnish debt was not a war debt, but a post-war loan for grain and foodstuffs. Of the total loans, $7,000,000,000 were made to 7 allied countries before the armistice and $3,000,000,000 after the war to 20 countries, 13 of whom had not borrowed anything before the armistice.

COTTON IMPORTS

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PACE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, on May 15, immediately after President Roosevelt ordered the United States Navy to buy Argentine beef because it was "both cheaper and infinitely better," I introduced a bill into this House identified as H. R. 6329, the Buy American Farm Products in America Act. I have here some additional evidence as to the reasons why it is mighty important that this Congress pass this bill or some similar legislation to protect the American farmer, whose taxes after all go a long way toward supporting this Government.

I have in my hand a can of Argentine corned beef, and I am sure you will all be interested in the sales slip which is attached to it. My colleagues, I purchased this beef from the store in the basement of the United States Department of Agriculture and this slip reads, "Welfare Store, room 22, Administration Building, Department of Agriculture, July 19, 20 cents" and is my receipt for this purchase. With Secretary Wallace's department buying beef from Argentina while he is urging American farmers to raise and produce less to cut down an alleged surplus, it is no wonder our farmers are in the worst plight they have been in for over 20 years, while the New Deal trade pacts continue to provide real farm relief for the foreign farmer. [Applause.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, supplementing what my colleague from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] has stated to you with reference to Argentine beef, I wish to call attention to the fact that during the first 5 months of this year this country imported more than $103,000,000 worth of animal and animal products that have been dumped upon the American market, depressing the price and taking the market away from the farmers of this country.

In addition to that, more than $198,000,000 worth of grain and vegetable products have been dumped upon our market, produced by cheap foreign labor, taking the market away from the people of this country, and causing further unemployment and distress in the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SANDAGER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a report of the Department of Justice in regard to Communist activities in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a speech made by myself on last Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INFLATION AND REPUDIATION

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, when I find anything of interest I pass it on to you. I have been hearing rumors around the corridors that we might be asked to authorize and spend $3,500,000,000 more.

I picked from the Washington Post this morning an A. P. dispatch which read as follows:

UNITED STATES FACES DEBT REPUDIATION, CRUM DECLARES

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, CALIF., July 18.—Inflation and repudiation of the public debt lie ahead of the United States, W. L. Crum, professor of economics and consulting expert of the United States Treasury, told the Stanford Business Conference today.

If this man is a consultant of the United States Treasury and he has warned them of this, I suggest that they get rid of him and pay his salary and expenses. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object; we have two very important rules to be considered today. I trust that no other gentleman will ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute. I am not going to object at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are just a few others.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not going to object. I am just making a suggestion. I am going to be compelled to object some time between now and 2 o'clock, however.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GRANT of Indiana addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE FARM SITUATION

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Labor Committee has refused to listen to the pleas of agriculture, I am asking somebody in this House or in the administration to tell me what the farmers of this country have done to get themselves into such bad grace with the administration. With this Argentine beef coming in as it is, every one of us cattle feeders are losing money daily, when the prices of farm commodities are going down and down, and with it the morale of the country as a whole. I would like the administration to explain what we farmers have done that we are in such bad grace with the administration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason to get so excited about beef. I happen to be a producer of beef cattle, and I buy some; I pay 8.75 cents a pound for little steers on the hoof. The price of beef cattle and steers in this country is satisfactory to most of the people who have to sell.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I will not yield.

These gentlemen will find if they have to buy steers, as my good friend from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and I do once in a while, that the price is plenty high for poor steers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

TRUST INDENTURE BILL OF 1939

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 248.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 248

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2065, an act to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] whether he desires time on the rule?

Mr. MAPES. That depends upon the gentleman from Illinois. If he will agree to take no time, I will agree to take none.

Mr. SABATH. This being a pet measure of mine, and the bill made in order by the rule being important, I think the House is entitled to know something about it.

Mr. MAPES. Then I shall have to ask the gentleman for the privilege of using the usual half hour.

Mr. SABATH. That being the case, I yield with pleasure 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the rule before us makes in order the trust indenture bill of 1939, a very important piece of legislation. It was introduced after a careful and comprehenstve study and report made by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Their objective is to make provision for a more rigid control to serve as an aid to the thousands of small investors in notes, bonds, indentures, certificates of interest, and the like.

I take pleasure in calling up the rule to make in order consideration of this bill, as it relates to a subject with which I have had wide experience. Some years ago the House unanimously voted for a committee to investigate bondholders' reorganizations and the so-called protective committees, and I had the honor of being named chairman of that committee.

The result of our investigations all over the country may be found in 20 volumes of open hearings. They show how protective committees were formed by the employees or dummies of houses of issue, guaranty trust companies and title companies, which then solicited deposits of bonds under so-called deposit agreements whereby the bondholders virtually forfeited all claims to their bonds and thereafter saw the properties dissipated and run down, all income used up by the protective committees, and the properties eventually falling into their hands.

This select committee of the House worked for nearly 3 years, Mr. Speaker, and right here I want to extend my sincere appreciation to the members of that committee who worked with me. Two of the gentlemen who served on the committee are no longer Members of the House, but we still have with us two Republican members of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] as well as a Democratic member from New York [Mr. KENNEDY]. I extend to them, particularly the Republican members, my thanks and acknowledgment of the real work they did and the fine service they rendered to the Nation.

Last session the Chandler bill was passed, and I want to also thank the author of that bill, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER], who was chairman of the subcommittee that considered it. After a year and a half of diligent study and strenuous work this committee reported out and succeeded in having passed the amendment to the Bankruptcy Act that to a great extent has eliminated many of the abuses theretofore existing. It did not, unfortunately, give the relief to the judges to which the committee thought they were entitled. My good friend Mr. CHANDLER did a splendid job, and his bill has really been a real benefit to bondholders; but I do believe that the bill made in order by this rule will accomplish even more.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] is to be congratulated upon the bill we shall shortly consider. I can appreciate the trials and tribulations that beset a committee such as his in the consideration of this type of legislation. However, I will say that there are in the bill certain provisions that I do not think it should contain, and on these I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] was compelled to yield to other Members. I had the same situation in preparing the bill introduced by the select committee.

Mr. Speaker, the present bill is designed to cure many of the defects prevailing in the security market in this country. The bill is essential because it enables the hundreds of investors as security holders of a single issue who cannot singularly or individually successfully prosecute its claims on default because of the disproportionate expense involved in prosecuting such claims or rights as may accrue to such security holders. It helps to eliminate the geographical difficulties because of the wide dispersion here and abroad of many security holders on a single issue, and makes available names and addresses of their fellow investors of such issues which heretofore was not readily available. It indicates a forward step in the proper direction for relief to small investors, and I honestly believe it will release millions and millions of dollars now frozen.

The people of our country have grown fearful and timid of investing money, whatever little they may have accumulated since the Republican crash. They remember too well the high-powered salesmen who sold them watered stocks and bonds, and unless they are assured of proper protection, such as this bill gives, the security market of the country will vanish.

Conditions have improved since this administration came into power, and with proper protection money will flow into the channels of trade. Of course, I know that there are still eight or nine million men out of work, but almost that many have been placed back into employment in the past 5 years. I do not think this is the proper time to dwell upon that particular subject, but I will point out that if the Republican Party had cooperated with us additional millions of men could have been reemployed, and conditions would have been very much improved. Mr. Speaker, the Chase National Bank of New York and other national banks disclose that industries are making more money today than they ever made, even in 1928 and 1929. We find that the percentage of net profits is greater even considering the high taxes they complain of.

Businessmen and farmers of the country, and millions of workers as well, have accumulated and saved a great deal of money in the last 6 years. Reports show that our banks hold more money today than ever in history. Where did that money come from? Not from the Republican campaign committee. I am sure of that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield. This is important.

Mr. Speaker, this money is available for investment. It is not being invested because the people are afraid to take another chance and have the same thing happen to them that happened under President Hoover, when no one in his administration cared one way or another what happened to the investor. The pending bill will give them the security they are seeking, because it provides that before any securities may be placed on the market those who issue them must submit an honest report of the properties behind the securities. In years gone by false statements were not unusual, even on the big exchanges, by numerous of the crooked corporations who had their stocks listed and then unloaded them on the people of the country. Nine million American citizens held that type of worthless or depreciated security. Today, Mr. Speaker, there are close to $20,000,000,000 of securities that have been in default for a number of years. Reorganizations have taken place, but the courts have prevented the reorganizations from being handled by protective committees and they have been made voting trustees. The rights of these investors in reorganized properties are not protected. This bill will bring them that protection, and it will aid recovery generally. Within a short space of time hundreds of millions of dollars of idle money will be placed in the banks to be taken out and invested in new industries. Whether we are Democrats or Republicans, Mr. Speaker, this is legislation that should be endorsed and its early enactment assured.

As I understand it, there is no opposition on the part of the members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to the bill. There should be no opposition. The ranking member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is a true gentleman. He is a legislator, he is honest and sincere, and I have found him supporting bills whenever they were in the interest of the people, although he is a Republican. [Applause.] I am sure that if inquiry is made of the chairman of the subcommittee as to whether cooperation has been had it will be found that there was cooperation; and I hope that we have that gentleman with us for many years to come to aid in enacting legislation such as this. I refer to the gentleman from Michigan, a member of the Rules Committee and the ranking member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. You see, I am not always so harsh with Republicans; and I am only too pleased to say a good word about my colleagues on the other side when they warrant it, and this is not the first time I have done so.

Mr. Speaker, when matters of this kind are considered, politics should be eliminated. I hope that in the future when important matters affecting the welfare of the Nation are being considered we may have this cooperation which I feel should be forthcoming if we as Members are honest, sincere, and well-meaning.

The gentleman from Michigan stated that if I would not use my time he would not use his. Had it not been that I desired to familiarize the House with the importance of this bill, I would not have taken the time. However, I will not use up any more time.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me announce that I have here the final report of the Select Committee to Investigate Bondholders' Reorganizations. It has taken me over two and a half years to prepare it. We have tried to be fair to everyone, to shield no one, and to be unjust to none. Those who deserved praise were given it, and criticism has not been withheld where it was merited. Typical of the flagrant abuses we uncovered, let me quote herewith from the report as regards the case of the Missouri State Life Insurance Co.:

EFFECTS OF THE SCHEME

By reason of acts and manipulations of officers of General American described, it is indicated:

1. That Messrs. Milton and Head were in collusion with Superintendent O'Malley—before and after he was appointed to office, and before Missouri State was adjudged insolvent—to bring about a private sale of its assets in favor of General American at false undervaluation. Had the court gone into the matter more fully and thoroughly, the court could not have been imposed upon. It was unfair; policyholders whose policies were unnecessarily encumbered with excessive liens by a rigged-up impairment created through carefully planned testimony. From all this the Milton group and Head made large profit.

2. Messrs. Souers and McHaney were accessories to this scheme to induce sale of Missouri State assets to advantage of Milton, Head, and others.

3. McHaney admitted he knew the sale was improper, and believed the contract of sale invalid. Nonetheless he assisted in effectuating it.

4. In reward for that duplicity McAney was appointed attorney for, a director of, and a voting trustee of General American almost instantaneously upon resigning his counselship to the superintendent of insurance.

5. Head made no objection to the sale by the Equity group of its stock in General American. On the contrary, he cooperated in it by contributing 1,225 of his own shares, the transaction earning him a profit and other rewards. The sale was in violation of the agreement that the stock of General American was to constitute a permanent investment. It was injurious to Missouri State policyholders because it gave control of the voting trust arising from that sale to the Southwestern Life Insurance Co. (the controlling stock of which was in the Missouri State assets, which were in keeping of General American as a trust fund for policyholders) which theretofore was controlled by Missouri State, instead. That shift of trusteeships was a violation of the fiduciary obligation of General American to policyholders of Missouri State. Furthermore, the sale depleted capital and surplus of both the Southwestern and the General American. And in each of those the Missouri State fund owned either a direct or indirect interest; in the net worth of Southwestern Life, by reason of ownership of stock in it, a 52½ percent direct interest; and an indirect interest in the capital and surplus of General American Life through covenants in the purchase agreement.

The sale of General American shares to the Southwestern companies constitutes an improper withdrawal of capital and surplus from two life insurance companies in furtherance of a plan to liquidate holdings of the Equity group, and others, at large profit to themselves. By reason of the long-term option to sell 30,000 shares of Southwestern Life, given at an undervaluation, control of that company was lost to the Missouri State fund.

The financial maneuverings to raise money for the purchase of General American stock, by Head, Milton, and others, was in violation of the laws of the State of Texas. The source from which these moneys were to come was known to Head, but unhesitatingly he became party to the fraud on the State of Texas, and participated in wrongdoings of Southwestern Life Insurance Co. whose stock was under his partial control.

6. The real purpose of the voting trusts for General American and Southwestern Life stock was to put Head, Souers, and McHaney in control of the General American Life, and O'Donnell, Coburn, and their fellow voting trustee in control of Southwestern Life. These positions of trust and confidence put them in dual and conflicting positions with their obligations to Missouri State policyholders; and opened to them an avenue to perpetuate themselves in office through control of elections of directors who would sustain them in office of their respective companies.

Since control of Missouri State fund was obtained by these men harmful and indefensible acts have been committed against it, and large and unnecessary losses have been imposed on it by the executive management of General American Life in violation of its numerous fiduciary and trust obligations.

The last report was filed on May 16, but as I could not secure any help I was obliged to do this work at my own expense. I do not regret the time involved nor the expense, as it has to some extent resulted in the type of bill now before us. I am grateful for the privilege I had to investigate such conditions, and I submit the report in the knowledge that it will draw the attention of the Members to prevalent abuses and help in drafting legislation to prevent a repetition.

I hope the present rule will be adopted, and that some of the amendments which I feel should be accepted by the chairman of the subcommittee will meet with the approval of the majority of the Members.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, before yielding any of my 30 minutes, let me express my appreciation to the gentleman from Illinois for the generous references he made to me.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, it is often customary when one addresses himself to a matter in which he has an abiding interest to refer to it as the most important piece of legislation that will have received the attention of this Congress. I am not persuaded that this is especially the most important piece of legislation that is before the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, but I am persuaded that if we ever encounter another so-called dislocation or depression the bill now pending will probably go further than any other legislative enactment in my four terms in this body to stave off the cataclysmic effect of such an economic dislocation.

The bill seeks to refine, of course, the provisions that may go and that shall go into a trust indenture, and to denominate the duties and responsibilities of a trustee who bears a fiduciary relationship to the security holders, bondholders, and note holders, who cannot in hours of economic stress protect themselves.

It is futile, of course, to moralize upon the beginnings of the last depression, but on the basis of the experience that was mine in respect of the select committee to investigate real-estate reorganizations I would say that if I were asked for a single outstanding cause that contributed to the continuance of the depression I would answer that it was the destruction of purchasing and consuming power that resulted from the washing out of values in industries, in real-estate projects, and so forth, and thereby prolonged the hours of agony; and most of that came about as the result of this ingenious device known as the trust indenture. I think of it, and then I think of Nobel, the great Scandinavian inventor, who invented dynamite. It was hailed and acclaimed far and wide for a great scientific and constructive contribution to the well-being of the world. Then it developed that dynamite, that could be put to so many constructive uses, could also be put to uses that were not constructive, namely, the destruction of human life and property.

The trust indenture, which is not a very old legalism, is a great power for good and a great instrumentality for keeping this country moving and for the development of projects that mean jobs and the creation of national wealth; but a trust indenture when abused can also be a device that brings hardship, that brings agony, that brings hunger, and that brings distress not to thousands, not to hundreds of thousands, but to millions of our people. This has been a demonstrated fact ever since 1932.

The procedure under a trust indenture is very simple. You decide to build a $1,000,000 apartment building and the first thing you do is go and get a lot. Then you perfect plans through an architect to erect a building. Meanwhile you have gone to a security house and made arrangements to issue securities against that property, call them debentures, call them notes, call them real-estate bonds, call them what you will. The house of issue on a $1,000,000 property may give you $600,000 or it may give you $650,000, representing 65 percent of the value. In those rather lush and halcyon days back in 1926, 1927, 1928, and 1929 it was often customary to write up the values of lots and write up the values of buildings, so that finally the promoter or developer of the piece of property oftentimes had not 60 or 65 percent but had a note issue of 100 percent against the actual property. We found instances where they had issued bonds against the properties in excess of 100 percent, so that there was money enough to pay all fees and pay all commissions and have a little left over for those vagarious extras that often creep into promotion properties.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Is that not also true of industrial bonds and stocks?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Quite true; it is not limited to real-estate organizations. It was at the bottom of the Kreuger & Toll matter and it was at the bottom of the Paramount-Publix trouble. It was not the entire cause of the depression, but the books are literally full of such instances, and the Securities and Exchange Commission has for years conducted investigations and filled whole volumes with the results of its investigations relative to industrial as well as real-estate reorganizations to show the abuses that crept in.

To get back to my illustration for a moment, here is a $1,000,000 property. The house of issue has issued $600,000 or $1,000,000 in securities against this property. It sells those securities on the market. Here are people living in all the States of the Union, having a little money in the bank. It is very tempting to invest money in one of these securities with a return rate of 5 percent, 6 percent, 7 percent—yes; it went to 8 percent in many instances that came within the purview of our committee. Those bondholders and security holders, who live all over the country, have to have some legal protection, so there was set up the trust indenture to go with the securities, and that trust indenture recited a trustee, gave to him certain duties and certain responsibilities, and imposed on him certain obligations. If, for instance, it was found that the rents or the emoluments of a property were insufficient to pay the interest or pay the serial installments on the principal when they became due, obviously the bond issue went into default.

There began at that point the responsibility and the duty of the trustee to conserve the property, to see that the taxes were paid, to rebut any liens that might be attached, and to be a fiduciary agent for the bondholders who could not protect themselves, first, because they were scattered among all the States of the Union and, secondly, they were innocent purchasers for value and often did not know how to proceed legally to protect themselves. Here then was this device known as a trust indenture or a mortgage with a denominated trustee who had certain solemn and, in my judgment, sacred responsibilities and obligations that he owed to the millions of people who were holding mortgage paper on industries, business enterprises, apartments, hotels, theaters, and projects of all kinds everywhere.

Those were the lush days, of course, but the trouble came when the properties went into default. We were living in a rather peculiar and unreal world back in those days. Prices were high, salaries and wages were high, and people thought nothing of paying $100 a month for an apartment, $200 a month or $500 a month, and, obviously, they put on all the traffic could bear; but in October 1929 there came the crash, and then something happened. The long queues of unemployment began to lengthen out and the sinister shadow of the depression began to sneak over the country, and so people everywhere living in apartments for which they were paying one hundred or two hundred dollars or more per month, moved from them summarily overnight. Some of them moved in with fathers, mothers, sisters, or brothers in order to get help and reduce expenses. Meanwhile, the income of these properties was going down. As purchasing power went down the returns from business and from theaters and from other enterprises went down and so it was only natural after a recession from these high economic levels that there should be a default on the bond issues that had been issued against thousands and thousands of properties that were capitalized anywhere from $100,000 to millions of dollars.

When there was default on the interest and they could not pay it at the end of the first year, or when there was default in meeting the first installment on the principal, that was when the law expected the trustee to step in under the powers conferred on him in the trust indenture to conserve the property and to look after the interests of the bondholders, but, unfortunately, that is not what always happened. What really happened was this. The same trustees were often under the influence and under the control and under the domination of the house of issue.

Let me read just briefly from the findings of the Security and Exchange Commission on this subject in a rather exhaustive volume which is a series of volumes it has published. This will be found on page 436 of page 1 of their report, dated May 10, 1937, under the caption of "Banker Management and Control Over Lists of Security Holders." They talk about the strategic value that went to the trustees or to the houses of issue, because they had control over so many of these listed securities, and here is what they say about the control of the indenture trustee:

> Under the reorganization system which has been in vogue, control over the indenture trustee has meant a large measure of control over the whole reorganization process. By and large, for purposes of reorganization, the indenture trustee has been controlled by the management and the bankers. This control has resulted from a variety of circumstances.
> In the case of real-estate issues the trustee has been commonly controlled by the house of issue, as a result of the common practice of designating an officer or affiliate of the house of issue as trustee.

That was the trouble. When thousands of issues of securities which were issued by hundreds of issuing houses in the country went into default, too often they selected somebody to represent them before this default ever eventuated, as a trustee, upon whom they could depend, and when the trustee sought to report on those matters and petitioned the court for a receivership, instead of doing it so as to help the bondholders' protective committee, the members of the committee were usually hand picked. There was no secret about it, and in the thousands and thousands of pages of testimony which we took in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, San Francisco, and New York, everywhere in the country, the practice was almost universally the same. There was a relationship between the trustee, the bondholders' protective committee, and the original house of issue. Then the abuses started in. They managed the properties, they took down the rents, the bondholders could not find out what was going on, they did not know what collections were made or how they were apportioned, they could not find out who their cocreditors were, and as a result there was set up one of the greatest abuses that this country has ever seen, and I measure my words when I say that those abuses contributed more to a continuation of the depression than any other single factor of which I am aware.

That has to be corrected. Something has to be done to more clearly define the duties of trustees and impose penalties when necessary. Something has to be done about placing limitations on trustees. We must set up some kind of a trust indenture that should have certain provisions contained therein before the registration statement can be qualified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And so there comes here a rather voluminous bill, which in large measure is devoted to defining the responsibilities and powers of the trustees and placing on them those limitations that, on the basis of experience since 1932, are absolutely essential if we are going to avert another crash in the future similar to the one we went through when the market crashed in October 1929.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. HARNESS. I am very much interested in the discussion of this thing, in that the protective committees acquired control of these properties; and is it not a fact that many of these protective committees that were formed froze out the common-stock holders and acquired the property for a mere fraction of the preferred investment, and the houses of issue actually acquired the property?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is quite correct. They developed a very ingenious kind of action. For instance, the house of issue, in the first place, had a list of the bondholders for a given property. They would hire their own salesmen and give them these lists and give them a dollar a hundred to go out and secure the deposit of bonds with the bondholders' protective committee. Once they had most of the bonds deposited, they were placed in a trust under a depository agreement, and then the bondholders' committee operated under that agreement, whereby they could take the bonds to a bank and pledge them for attorneys' fees or any kind of fees and expenses that came up, and virtually sell the bondholders down the river. They had nothing to say about it. If a few of them got together and retained counsel and went into court, they flashed on them a 40-page document known as a depositary agreement, and when they examined it, including the fine print and the large print, they found they had by their own signatures surrendered virtually every right, every interest, and every hope they ever had. It was just a part of this whole business that resulted from the crash of 1929, when the properties went into default and the trustees too often failed to exercise their proper responsibility.

Now, there are two sides to the story. I appreciate the fact that trustees could not always come in and foreclose, and then throw this property on the market, for if they did it would have shattered the real-estate-value structure in the country; and, secondly, they could not realize perhaps as much as they otherwise might if they held on a little while in the hope that there would be an appreciation in security values, and in the intrinsic value of the property; and so, while something may be said in behalf of a great many trustees, on the other hand, you must see there were laches, there was neglect on their part, and so billions in property values were summarily washed out. As we took testimony in the various cities, it was common in the Federal courtroom to have a thousand people crowd into the room and in the corridors, filled with hope, beating themselves on their breasts, and saying to this committee, "What are you going to do about getting our money back?"

We, as an instrumentality of the Congress of the United States, could not return their money. We were not set up for that purpose. We were seeking to get at the bottom of the abuses, in the hope that we could finally establish a kind of bottom value, run some of these sharp dealers to cover, and then set in motion a train of circumstances that would make values go up, whereby, if they held on long enough, their bonds might finally resume a normal value. In many instances that was done.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. How does this bill seek to remedy the situation which you describe?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In a word, I will say that it places legal restrictions, statutory restrictions upon the trustees. It tells what trustees must enter into the indenture picture. It defines certain limits of value. It gives power to the Securities and Exchange Commission. It requires a registration system. It provides the qualifications of indentures for registration. That is the substance of the bill, going on page after page setting out what these duties may be.

I call to the attention of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] a provision that has disturbed me. I believe I shall offer an amendment. It will be found on page 102. It provides that when three bona fide holders of securities, for instance, go to a trustee in order to get the name of other security holders, in the hope that they can get together and develop a kind of constructive action for their own welfare, the trustee has one of two alternatives. He can either afford to such applicants access to all information so furnished to or received by such trustee or inform such applicants as to the approximate number of indenture security holders according to the most recent information so furnished to or received by such trustee, and as to the approximate cost of mailing to such indenture security holders the form of proxy or other communication, if any, specified in such application, which must first have been submitted.

I submit to the members of the committee that in my judgment that provision does not go far enough. I am not insensible to the fact that if you permit three bona fide holders of securities to get lists so that they can get together with the others to submit a plan of action, abuses may creep in. They may hire an unscrupulous attorney who may take the job for no other purpose than to get himself into court, in the hope of getting his hands on the property. I recognize there is that danger, but in all the experiences that we have had with respect to this identical provision, I will say to you that the abuses on the side of nondisclosure of the names of security holders is infinitely greater than it would be if they fell into the hands of an unscrupulous attorney.

Let me tell you what the Securities and Exchange Commission says about this list, reading again from their report:

> In the real-estate field, control over the lists has unquestionably been in the hands of the houses of issue. And the real-estate houses of issue have used to the fullest extent the strategic advantage which this control gave them.
> Particularly in the real-estate field, houses of issue possessed a special advantage in this respect. Not only were the holdings unusually small and the holders exceptionally depressed, but the lists were unusually complete. This resulted from the many roles which the real-estate bond houses occupied as originator, as paying agent, as sales organization, and as those making the market.

They did not want the security holders to get together. We have observed that fact so often, because if all of them were concentrated within the confines of a single State or two States, they might have gotten together and they might have met with the equity holder of the property, and they might have submitted a plan or reorganization to the court, and finally saved the value of their securities. But where they are scattered in four or five States, where the house of issue has the only lists and where those lists were put on the auction block for sale and sold for as high as $25,000 a list, my notion is that this bill will not be complete unless you say to a given number of bona fide holders of securities that they can come in and make a 5-day application to the trustees and demand as a matter of right that they know who the other security holders are in a piece of property, and if they want to get together to save their values and save their investments, under the dome of heaven and the law of this country they should not be deprived of what I regard to be that elemental and essential right.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It seems to me that a committee of three is entirely too small in an enterprise of any magnitude. It seems to me it should require a larger committee. It seems to me there would be many committees of three running after the lists, and somebody could get the jump on the thing, and that would be just as bad as the original situation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This does not refer to any constituted committee. This simply says that if three or more indenture security holders state that the applicants desire to communicate with other indenture security holders with reference to their rights in such indenture or such indenture security and accompanied by the forms of proxy, then on the basis of that application the trustee can do two things.

He can say to them when they come into his office: "I will give you a list under subsection 1," or he can say: "I can inform you as to the number and tell you what it will cost to send a proxy." This is not enough by any means, in my judgment, in order to preserve that interest and to safeguard against the abuses that we saw on every hand.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It looks to me as though a committee of three was not large enough.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the gentleman from Michigan for having taken so much of his time. I feel that I have had far more than my share of the time.

I think you will find that if a man invests $1,000 in the purchase of a security of a real-estate property and then finds two or three co-creditors who are not satisfied with the way the trustees administer the matter after it has gone into default, as a matter of right irrespective of maladministration or abuses that may creep in he ought to have access to the names of the rest of the people who are creditors in the hope that they will get together. Where a group of creditors get together they are not likely to let the property go on the bargain block or permit unusual fees to be allowed. A continuance of the abuses sought to be corrected by this bill will have a depressing effect upon the whole economy of this country.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It looks to me as though the house of issue could have those three fellows framed up.

Mr. DIRKSEN. On the other hand there are abuses that are of even greater magnitude on the other side and the surest and most certain method of correcting that abuse is to permit bona fide holders for value to have a full and free opportunity to cooperate with other security holders in the interest of conserving and rehabilitating the property.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I know of no opposition to the rule.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCLAUGHLIN). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

AMENDMENT OF THE CLAYTON ACT

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] desire recognition?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill S. 2150, an act to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act, insist upon the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CELLER, WEAVER, and GUYER of Kansas.

TRUST INDENTURE BILL OF 1939

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2065) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce now in the bill, that such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill, and that any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2065, the trust indenture bill of 1939, with Mr. WALTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] is recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to consume very much time, although an hour is available to each side for debate. This is a very important bill; it is a lengthy bill; but to conserve time we shall not use the entire hour. When the bill is read for amendment under the 5-minute rule, I understand some amendments will be offered, and in this way the provisions of the bill will be possibly more intimately discussed than they could be in general debate.

Before proceeding to a discussion of the bill, I want to thank my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] for his very kind reference to my work in this matter. Alone I could not have presented this problem. As it is, working with a subcommittee composed of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE], all of whom have given much of their valuable time, we have, I believe, brought to you as fair a translation of what has been recommended is needed in this important field as it is possible to do. Our main committee, presided over so efficiently by Chairman LEA, of California, gave full and adequate thought to the bill before reporting it to the House.

During the important and at times rather hectic days when we were considering the holding-company legislation and the securities and exchange legislation, especially in 1934 when we passed the Securities and Exchange Act, Congress provided in section 211 of that act that the Securities and Exchange Commission be authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the work, activities, personnel, and functions of protective and reorganization committees in connection with the reorganization, readjustment, rehabilitation, liquidation, or consolidation of persons and properties, and to report the result of this study and investigation and its recommendations to the Congress on or before January 3, 1936. That study, a very intensive and complete one, was conducted by the Securities and Exchange Commission. At the same time the so-called Sabath committee of this House, the activities of which were referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], covered to some extent the field covered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Volume 6 of the Commission report deals entirely with indentures. At the time Mr. Landis was Chairman of the Commission, following the regime of Mr. Kennedy, there came into the employment of the Securities and Exchange Commission Mr. William O. Douglas, now Mr. Justice Douglas, of the Supreme Court of the United States. He was assigned this task, and it was his particular job. In the hearings of 1938 held by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. Douglas appeared as the main proponent of this legislation.

Since Mr. Douglas was appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and our former colleague, Congressman Eicher, of Iowa, became a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, much of the detail associated with this problem has been handled very efficiently by Mr. Edmund Burke, Jr., Mr. Robert McKellar, and Mr. Paul Branin, of the staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission. They have been most fair in their contacts with the committee and indescribably helpful in working out this intricate problem. Along with this association the committee has had the benefit of the invaluable services of the legislative counsel, Mr. Allan H. Perley, whose work on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House is reflected in all of the important measures which have been reported by that committee in the past 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include numerous extracts from the hearings and correspondence on this subject, as well as extracts from the report of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I quote now from the testimony of Mr. William O. Douglas, now Mr. Justice Douglas, of the Supreme Court of the United States:

> The Commission made a study and investigation pursuant to section 211 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, and the enumeration of the defects contained in section 1 of the bill is based upon the records of the public hearings conducted by the Commission in that investigation and upon an examination by the Commission of more than 400 trust indentures of issuers of all types, most of them made after 1920.
> The Commission submitted to the Congress a report on trustees under indentures in June of 1936. Following that time the Commission assisted in the preparation of legislation to recommend to the Congress, and the bill which was worked out was, as you know, introduced by Senator BARKLEY in the Senate.

With Mr. Justice Douglas' statement is found a letter from Mr. Blaine B. Coles, vice president of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., to which I will refer because of certain language. This letter was discussed in the hearings conducted by the subcommittee on this bill during the present session. That letter in part reads as follows:

> I should like to say to you that while I do not now speak as an official of the American Bankers' Association, yet I know that for the most part the bill has the approval of the great majority of trust institutions in the country, especially those located in cities west of the Mississippi River. Most trust men who have given serious consideration to the bill are in accord with the aims and objectives of the bill. Most of us also feel that the bill as now drafted is entirely workable and that regulations can easily be prepared that will provide for a simple, speedy, and direct administration.
> If it should prove in practice that amendments are necessary, you may count upon my assistance in helping to work out such changes as experience indicates will be desirable. Speaking personally and at the same time reflecting what I believe is the attitude of trust men in the West and Middle West, may I say that I hope the bill will pass in nearly as possible its present form.

I may state again that this letter was criticized in our hearings held this year. I refer to it, although I am not in sympathy with the criticism.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. On what page was that quotation?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Douglas' statement is found on pages 16 and 17 of the hearings of last year, the hearings held on H. R. 10292, and, in connection with this year's hearings, I refer to the testimony of Mr. Amberg.

Mr. DARDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. DARDEN. What does the gentleman estimate will be the cost of the administration of this bill on the part of the Securities and Exchange Commission?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I think the additional cost will be very, very small, because the administration of this particular bill dovetails naturally into the work already being done by the Commission's staff. Under the Securities Act of 1933 copies of indentures must now be filed with and examined by the Commission in connection with registration statements filed under that act. I have no estimate myself. I think that is a matter for the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. DARDEN. Has the gentleman any estimate as to whether additional personnel or people will be required to administer this?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. No. I have no estimate, I am sorry to say, but I will be very much surprised if much additional personnel is required.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been considered, as originally introduced, by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The Federal Reserve Board felt that there might well be some delay in the consideration of such legislation, but nevertheless stated that they recognized that there have existed in the past abuses in connection with corporate trust indentures, which this bill is designed to remedy. The Board also felt that the interests of investors would be better served if the responsibilities of corporate trustees were more clearly defined, if they were required to exercise a greater degree of diligence than has been exercised at times in the past, and if they were not permitted to occupy positions conflicting with their fiduciary responsibilities.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation endorsed the bill in the strongest possible language, and I read in part from their letter:

> In harmony with the general policy evidenced by the Securities Act of 1933 and Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, the bill under consideration undertakes to extend protection to investors by requiring that trust indentures exact from the trustee the same high standard of conduct now observed by the leaders in the corporate trust field. We believe that the bill accomplishes its aims without unduly adding to the liability of the trustee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this letter concludes with the following statement:

> In my opinion, the passage of this bill would have a beneficial effect in promoting the financing of business. The confidence of investors would be promoted, and consequently the flow of funds into investment channels would be encouraged.

Mr. Chairman, I read those statements in conclusion, with the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD for the benefit of the Members of the House, to show that the great bulk of the indenture financing takes place in our large cities, New York and Chicago, those cities having by far the larger percentage of the business. That is to be expected. The following table is taken from the hearings on the bill before the House subcommittee this year:

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF TRUSTEESHIPS UNDER SECURITIES ACT REGISTRATIONS FOR 2 YEARS AND 8 MONTHS ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1938

The appended table presents the results of an examination of the geographical distribution of trusteeships for bonds, debentures, and notes registered under the Securities Act during the period from May 1, 1936, to December 31, 1938. In view of the increase of the maximum exemption from $250,000 to $1,000,000, issues of $1,000,000 or less are excluded.

The significant fact demonstrated by these tables is the extent to which trusteeships for issues which would be affected by the bill are concentrated in institutions located in the larger financial centers, particularly New York and Chicago.

For example, New York and Chicago institutions were awarded trusteeships under 80.2 percent in dollar amount of all issues of more than $1,000,000. The addition of institutions located in Boston, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and San Francisco brings the percentage up to 95.0 percent in dollar amount, leaving only 5 percent for all the rest of the country.

If we take as our basis of comparison the number of issues rather than the dollar amount, the figures are almost as impressive. New York and Chicago institutions get 65.8 percent of the issues, and the addition of institutions in the other seven cities mentioned brings the percentage up to 86.5 percent.

As might be expected, an even greater proportion of the larger issues goes to institutions in these nine cities: Of issues over $5,000,000, New York and Chicago institutions became trustees under 76.3 percent; and together with institutions in the other seven cities, became trustees under 91.4 percent.

Issues over $1,000,000

	Issues		Principal amount
	Number	Percent of total	Dollars	Percent of total
New York	122	51.5	2,723,206,977	64.7
Chicago	34	14.3	660,496,045	15.5
Together	156	65.8	3,383,703,022	80.2
Boston, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Francisco	49	20.7	627,136,300	14.8
All others	32	13.5	231,042,170	5
Total	237	100	4,241,881,492	100

In this bill we provide for an exemption for issues not in excess of $1,000,000 because of the disproportionate expense. The bankers of the country criticized the original bill quite severely as being expensive and troublesome, and we found from our investigation there was no necessity for bringing the smaller issues under this legislation.

The committee report is a lengthy one and deals with the subject in detail. It presents a further step, following the debacle of 1929, in the determination on the part of Congress to legislate on the important subject of regulating our stock exchanges and the issuance of securities. It is a worth-while step in assuring to the investing public of this country that they are going to be treated fairly. In my experience from this investigation, I believe that the bankers of this country, in the main, sense the need for such a responsibility on their part.

In 1934, under the Rayburn bill, when we did not feel that sufficient information was then available to legislate on this important topic, we directed an investigation. After the hardest kind of work the Commission brings recommendations to us. This bill translates into legislation, in the fairest way I believe we can possibly accomplish it, the recommendations of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the common-sense criticisms of the committees of investment bankers and the American Bankers Association. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this bill, possibly for the first time, is an effort on the part of the Securities and Exchange Commission, sitting around the table in a common effort with the bankers of the United States, to deal with their problems and look ultimately to the protection of the investing public. There was not unanimity of opinion, but I say again that for the first time there was a happy association between Government and business, an association we want to encourage. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to delay the consideration of this bill. I am in favor of its passage. It is a sort of supplement to two pieces of legislation which have been passed by Congress in the last few years, the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. I supported both those measures, and I am supporting this one. In its present form I believe this is a reasonable bill both from the standpoint of protection to investors and from the standpoint of bankers and promoters of capital securities. It is not extreme in its provisions. When the legislation was first introduced in the last Congress, there was considerable opposition to it. This opposition has very largely faded away now. The bill which is presented to the Committee today is a very different bill from the one that was introduced originally in the last Congress and quite different from the one that was passed by the Senate in this Congress. I believe it is fair to say that the investment and commercial bankers of the country, while not affirmatively urging the passage of it, are not finding any particular fault with the provisions of it as presented here today, if legislation on the subject in any form is to be passed.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I note in the hearings, on pages 101 and thereafter, a statement made on April 5, 1939, by a gentleman I have known very well and very favorably for a long time, Mr. John J. Sullivan, of Denver, a man of the highest character, who I know deplores the evils this bill is supposed to rectify. I notice Mr. Sullivan very strongly criticizes the bill, which at that time was under consideration. I wish to ask the gentleman if there has been any change in the scope of the bill or the terms of it from what were then under consideration? I refer particularly to page 105 of the hearings and to Mr. Sullivan's entire statement at pages 101 to 106 of the printed hearings.

Mr. MAPES. I do not for the moment recall the criticism which Mr. Sullivan made. However, the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were had upon the bill as passed by the Senate. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that the subcommittee has materially changed that bill. In fact, it has entirely rewritten it and reported the committee draft as a substitute to the Senate bill. If the gentleman has in mind Mr. Sullivan's particular criticism, perhaps I can answer his question more definitely.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The cost of the registration of the securities is one point raised by Mr. SULLIVAN. As the gentleman well knows, there has been a tendency to do away with public offerings and to sell securities at private sale because of the tremendous expense in time and money which has been involved in connection with the registration of offerings of securities. This bill would seem to tend materially to increase that expense.

Mr. MAPES. There is a good deal of expense involved in complying with the provisions of the law, that is true. Personally, I hope that the expense may be reduced. However, I believe it is fair to say that a good deal of the expense incurred in the flotation of new issues would have to be incurred if there were no Securities and Exchange Commission, such as the expense of underwriters and the fees of lawyers, engineers, and accountants, and so on. The tendency now is to charge all this cost to the securities and exchange legislation, when, as a matter of fact, only a part of it is due to such legislation.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That is not my information. My information is that very considerable additional expense in both time and money will be caused by this bill.

Mr. MAPES. Let me say to the gentleman from Colorado that the additional expense is material. Personally, I hope it may be reduced, but it is not the largest part of the expense.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman that is not the information I have received from men of the highest character in the banking and investment-banking business and in business concerns seeking to raise money in the open market for legitimate enterprises.

Mr. MAPES. I believe if the gentleman will investigate that matter carefully himself he will reach the conclusion I have stated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. My informants' statements are further to the effect that this bill will greatly increase the cost of registration and will accelerate the present tendency either to abandon the idea of offering securities at all or to sell them at private sale. I wish to say for myself that I was in favor of and voted for the original securities bill and the securities and exchange bill when they were under consideration here, and I most heartily concurred in the necessity to correct those evils which were sought to be corrected. But sometimes I believe that in our anxiety to correct evils we bring upon ourselves, and upon business as well, other evils that are almost comparable with those which are sought to be corrected.

Mr. MAPES. I believe the gentleman from Colorado has rather concisely stated almost the entire argument against the passage of this legislation. I would not feel justified in saying that there is no ground for the criticism which the gentleman's question implies. There is bound to be some additional expense, of course, because of this legislation. Perhaps the tendency to seek capital without going through the requirements of complying with the law administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission will also be increased some by the passage of this measure; on the other hand, I believe there is very little in this bill to which legitimate objection can be made.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I wish to say for the further benefit of the gentleman from Colorado that on pages 27 and 28 of the report of the committee he will find quite a detailed break-down and summary of the expense involved in the flotation of issues. This summary shows what a small percentage of the cost is actually attributable to what I believe the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. MAPES. I had those figures in mind in the colloquy with the gentleman from Colorado, although I did not recall the exact percentages.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one further observation?

Mr. MAPES. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I want to say in all courtesy to this splendid Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and to the subcommittee that has brought in this bill, I think it is most unfortunate to bring in, during what is rumored at least to be the closing days of this session, a highly complicated and technical bill which, it is manifest, at least vitally affects the business of this country and within 2 hours to take it up, consider it, and pass it. As we look around the House here we see a very, very small membership present. I say that in all courtesy, but I think it is most unfortunate to bring up a most important bill of this sort at this time and in this manner.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Colorado that, as he knows, it has often been said that the greatest compliment that can be paid important legislation or the committee reporting it is to have a small attendance in the House when such legislation is brought up, because it shows confidence in the committee that reports it and that there is very little controversy over the legislation itself. Bring in a piece of legislation that is controversial and there will be a large attendance of the House, but bring in an important piece of legislation that has been very carefully prepared and worked out, which is not controversial, and you will have an attendance such as we have here this afternoon.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Let me say to the gentleman further that sometimes that is due to the fact that in the rush of the closing days of the session the membership has not considered or cannot find the time to study and carefully to consider a complicated bill. However, I wish to emphasize that the confidence of the House in this great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman is a distinguished and able member, is fully justified. But there is scarcely ample opportunity during these crowded days to go into the complicated provisions of a long bill of 62 pages within the time allotted and at this stage of the session.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a brief observation?

Mr. MAPES. I yield, although I am taking more time than I had any idea of taking.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I have not had time to give this bill careful study, but I am willing to take it on faith in the wisdom of this Committee, and, of course, shall support it. I just want to call attention to the fact that the necessity which compels us to safeguard the interests of the investing public has brought on to the statute books quite a bit of legislation in recent years, and this, I take it, is another step in that direction. I heartily approve of such protective laws, but regret the need of them. I want to point out just one thing, and that is that certain industries have been cramped a bit, especially if they be of a speculative nature, such as mining, by the rigid requirements of the Security and Exchange Commission and the legislation backing it. While this is not the place to find it, for this does not deal with stocks and that sort of investment, I do wish we might find some way to permit capital to go into this hazardous, speculative industry of mining with a little more freedom than is permitted in other lines of business. Of course, such investors must know they take a chance. I would not tear down our blue-sky laws or open up the way for swindling the public, you understand, but simply to make a little more suitable to the nature of the business the possibilities of investing in the mining business.

Mr. MAPES. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. Chairman, let me say very briefly that this is the kind of legislation I believe in. I supported the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and, as I have said, I am supporting this legislation. There are two questions, however, which arise in my mind in regard to this legislation at the present time. One is whether this is an opportune time to pass it, and the other is whether we are loading the Securities and Exchange Commission with more work than it is possible for it to handle properly.

The capital market now is extremely sensitive, and we must be careful, even in the passage of desirable legislation, not to do anything to retard business recovery or the flotation of new capital issues that are legitimate and good. I am also impressed with the fact that the Securities and Exchange Commission has a tremendous job on its hands already, and the friends of the Commission should give attention to the question of how much more work it can handle to advantage. As far as the Commissioners themselves are concerned, I hear good reports of them. They have the reputation of being willing to sit down and discuss registration statements and other questions with those interested; but, of course, physical limitations make it impossible for them to see very many, and probably the big fellows for the most part are the only ones who are able to see the Commissioners personally. Others must do business with subordinates.

The criticism which I hear of the work of the Commission is that it has not enough people with experience in its organization to handle the work which it must necessarily pass upon, and this bill of course is going to add to its work. I think the Commission should give attention to these two matters and try, as far as it can, to perfect its organization and encourage legitimate business all it can.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. HAWKS. Will this legislation tend to cut down the interpretation and the making of new rules and regulations by the Commission?

Mr. MAPES. This bill as originally introduced left a great deal to the discretion of the Commission. The substitute as reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce eliminates very largely the discretionary features and incorporates into the legislation itself what shall be put into these trust indentures. Of course, it is left to the Commission to determine whether the law is complied with but I think it may be said that the bill eliminates as far as it is practical to do so the discretionary power of the Commission.

Mr. HAWKS. I spent many years in the investment business, and I know that one of the major criticisms of the Commission by legitimate houses has been the laxity in the law itself. It is always left to the interpretation of individuals of the Commission.

Mr. MAPES. On that point I think it is fair to say that the representative of the investment bankers who has been in consultation with the members of the subcommittee endorses that feature of the bill, and makes no criticism of it, but commends the subcommittee for having eliminated the discretionary power to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I was indeed surprised to listen to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], who criticizes the committee for bringing out this bill at this late hour without giving the membership ample opportunity to familiarize itself with the bill and consider it. This bill was originally introduced 3 years ago. I introduced the first bill on the subject 3 years ago, and this bill was taken up on May 3, and reported on June 30. Many days have passed since the reporting of the bill. The gentleman is fearful that it will cost a little to the investment bankers, or those who handle these securities. I assure the gentleman that the additional $2 it will cost to investigate will be an insurance to the investor, and in addition to that it will help these very institutions to market the securities, because if the people are satisfied that they are founded on facts, that there is value behind the securities, they will buy them. So the gentleman need not be alarmed and he should not criticize the committee or the House. The bill will be taken up under the 5-minute rule. The gentleman will have ample opportunity to offer any amendments he desires and to speak on those amendments and generally do as he pleases. The gentleman helped to bring in the rule, which is a very liberal one, and which permits each Member to offer amendments and speak on the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I say to my friend from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, on which committee I have the honor and pleasure of serving under him, that I was not criticizing either the committee or the House of Representatives. I was deploring the situation in which a complicated, far-reaching bill such as this is brought up in this manner at this time late in the session. Further, I am not seeking protection merely for the investment bankers, which is, however, a legitimate business. What gives me most concern is that it may perhaps retard what we have hoped is a growing recovery in business.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, this will help it. If the gentleman had listened to the explanation I made of this, he would see that it will help business. This will bring about confidence in these securities. When people know the securities have been properly examined and passed on, they will come forward and invest their money, which they have now in the banks, and, therefore, it will help business.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Possibly the gentleman from Colorado does not appreciate that this bill is not reported from the Committee on Banking but from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I am wondering if that accounts for the gentleman's confusion.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Oh, if I miscalled the name of the gentleman's committee, that was a mere slip of the tongue, which I regret. I understand fully which great committee has brought the bill in.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman, as a rule, is very well informed on what is transpiring in the House and I give him credit for knowing, but I think he is unduly alarmed and does not realize how much good this will do. I think he and everyone else who were instrumental in bringing about the consideration of this bill is entitled to the thanks of the country, because I know it will help business and conditions in general.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I say to the gentleman from Illinois that I voted for the special investigating committee of which he was the head and appreciate the immense amount of work it did in its investigation of these reorganizations. But I question whether this particular bill meets that situation. I am a little bit dubious about whether, in seeking to bring about the excellent results which we all know should be brought about, we are not going a little too far and thereby will defeat the very results which we are seeking.

Mr. SABATH. I am satisfied that the bill as it is is excellently drafted. There will be a few amendments I will offer that will make it even stronger.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Herewith I insert part of the statement made by Mr. John J. Sullivan, of Denver, which appears on page 105 of the hearings, to which statement I referred a few minutes ago:

"It appears to us that H. R. 5220 is undesirable in many respects, even though some of the purposes attempted to be obtained thereby are meritorious. In general, the bill seems to us to be especially objectionable for the following reasons:

"1. Throughout, it confers upon an administrative body practically complete power to write the indenture or contract for the parties to the contract, and also the power to make its own rules on technical subjects and to interpret the rules so made by it.

"2. The enactment of the bill would unquestionably greatly increase the cost of borrowing and thus would curtail financing of this character. By reason of such increased cost, the enactment of the bill would tend to increase 'private placement' which, in our opinion, is undesirable from the standpoint of public policy in that it prevents small investors, both private and institutional, from participating in sound security issues and in that it further tends to concentrate wealth in a few metropolitan centers. Furthermore, the enactment of the bill would tend to concentrate corporate trusteeships in the hands of the banks in the large metropolitan areas, which is objectionable for many reasons, one of the most important of which is that a sound corporate institution situate in the locality of the property subject to the indenture can more effectively administer the trust than can a trustee situate many miles distant.

"3. The bill, both by general and specific language, imposes such burdensome duties, responsibilities, and restrictions on the trustee that responsible trustees would probably not act under such an indenture. Or, if they were willing to accept the responsibility, their charges would have to be commensurate with the responsibilities and duties and thus make the operation prohibitive from the standpoint of cost to the borrower.

"4. The bill attempts to define in detail what is a conflicting interest, and most of the relationships so defined are not conflicting interests and in most cases only represent a remote possibility of a conflicting interest ever arising. If the bill were to be enacted, it means in many instances, and more so in the small localities, that a bank would have to refuse or relinquish business, with no benefit conferred upon the bondholders by so doing. Also, under the definitions now contained in the act a relationship which is so-called conflicting may be only temporary in character but still the trustee would have to relinquish one of the relationships even though its acting in both capacities would not be prejudicial to the bondholders. For example, assume that the trustee under the corporate indenture were also named as executor of the will of a stockholder who holds stock in an amount of 25 percent or more of the voting securities then the trustee would have to relinquish either one of the two offices even though the stock might be specifically bequeathed by the will and the holding of the stock by the executor was simply a temporary situation during the period of administration. The way the bill is now drawn if 5 percent of the voting stock of the trustee is beneficially owned by a director of the obligor then the bill prevents the trustee from acting under the indenture and it is submitted that such an interest cannot be seriously considered as being a conflicting interest.

"5. The so-called rescue loan provision of the act is objectionable from many angles, but more particularly from the angle that it condemns loans of this character even though such loans are made in good faith, and that provision would prevent, in many instances, an obligor from obtaining needed short-term credit.

"It is our opinion that the bill will not accomplish the purposes for which it is aimed and that its enactment will increase the difficulty and expense of obtaining funds for the expansion and operation of business and will work to the special disadvantage of the smaller corporations, banks, and investors. If it is necessary to adopt some regulation in order to prevent certain abuses heretofore practiced in connection with this type of financing and to exert some control over the trustee, we submit that such regulation can better be accomplished through rules promulgated by the Federal bank-examining agencies."

In conclusion, let me say that at the present time the investment business is the quietest that I have seen it in my 20 years' experience. The last thing the business needs is more legislation, which will further complicate matters. What the business does need, and what the country needs, if we are to have any lasting prosperity, is for the capital markets to be reopened. The enactment into law of the Cole bill would, in our opinion, place a serious obstacle in the way of this much-to-be-desired event.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has no further requests for time. We have no further requests on this side, and I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I did not hear the statement of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I have just made the statement that there were no further requests for time and that the Clerk might read the bill.

Mr. CULKIN. I wonder if the gentleman will yield me a couple of minutes to ask him a question?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I withdraw my request that the Clerk read the bill, Mr. Chairman, and I yield the gentleman from New York 2 minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, the Sabath Investigating Committee developed the fact that these trust indentures were so much waste paper. Does this legislation require a standardized form of indentures?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Do you mean uniform form?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. No. I think it standardizes what shall go into all of them. I imagine lawyers all over the country will construe it in different language. We are not drawing an indenture in this bill.

Mr. CULKIN. As a result of this bill the Securities and Exchange Commission may require an indenture that may be something more than mere waste paper?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Oh, undoubtedly. I will say to the gentleman that while he was off the floor the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] referred to the fine work of the committee of which the distinguished gentleman from New York was a member.

Mr. CULKIN.. I do not wish to admit that, because I was a member of the committee.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I will admit it for the gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request that the Clerk read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1933, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"NECESSITY FOR REGULATION

"SEC. 302. (a) Upon the basis of facts disclosed by the reports of the Securities and Exchange Commission made to the Congress pursuant to section 211 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and otherwise disclosed and ascertained, it is hereby declared that the national public interest and the interest of investors in notes, bonds, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, and certificates of interest or participation therein, which are offered to the public, are adversely affected—

"(1) when the obligor fails to provide a trustee to protect and enforce the rights and to represent the interests of such investors, notwithstanding the fact that (A) individual action by such investors for the purpose of protecting and enforcing their rights is rendered impracticable by reason of the disproportionate expense of taking such action, and (B) concerted action by such investors in their common interest through representatives of their own selection is impeded by reason of the widespread dispersion of such investors through many States, and by reason of the fact that information as to the names and addresses of such investors generally is not available to such investors;

"(2) when the trustee does not have adequate rights and powers, or adequate duties and responsibilities, in connection with matters relating to the protection and enforcement of the rights of such investors; when, notwithstanding the obstacles to concerted action by such investors, and the general and reasonable assumption by such investors that the trustee is under an affirmative duty to take action for the protection and enforcement of their rights, trust indentures (A) generally provide that the trustee shall be under no duty to take any such action, even in the event of default, unless it receives notice of default, demand for action, and indemnity, from the holders of substantial percentages of the securities outstanding thereunder, and (B) generally relieve the trustee from liability even for its own negligent action or failure to act;

"(3) when the trustee does not have resources commensurate with its responsibilities, or has any relationship to or connection with the obligor or any underwriter of any securities of the obligor, or holds, beneficially or otherwise, any interest in the obligor or any such underwriter, which relationship, connection, or interest involves a material conflict with the interests of such investors;

"(4) when the obligor is not obligated to furnish to the trustee under the indenture and to such investors adequate current information as to its financial condition, and as to the performance of its obligations with respect to the securities outstanding under such indenture; or when the communication of such information to such investors is impeded by the fact that information as to the names and addresses of such investors generally is not available to the trustee and to such investors;

"(5) when the indenture contains provisions which are misleading or deceptive, or when full and fair disclosure is not made to prospective investors of the effect of important indenture provisions; or

"(6) when, by reason of the fact that trust indentures are commonly prepared by the obligor or underwriter in advance of the public offering of the securities to be issued thereunder, such investors are unable to participate in the preparation thereof, and, by reason of their lack of understanding of the situation, such investors would in any event be unable to procure the correction of the defects enumerated in this subsection.

"(b) Practices of the character above enumerated have existed to such an extent that, unless regulated, the public offering of notes, bonds, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, and certificates of interest or participation therein, by the use of means and instruments of transportation and communication in interstate commerce and of the mails, is injurious to the capital markets, to investors, and to the general public; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this title, in accordance with which policy all the provisions of this title shall be interpreted, to meet the problems and eliminate the practices, enumerated in this section, connected with such public offerings.

"DEFINITIONS

Mr. COLE of Maryland (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the bill is of such length and the Clerk is reading the committee amendment, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with, with the understanding that amendments to the bill may be offered to any section thereof.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, may I suggest that the gentleman dispense with the reading by sections rather than the whole bill. I have no objection to dispensing with the reading if we will do it section by section.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of section 302 be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman from Maryland ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to simply read the section number in each instance?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in lieu of reading the sections in full the Clerk may read simply the numerical section number.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 302.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: On page 63, line 9, after the comma, insert "inclusive of voting trust certificates, liquidation trust certificates, and certificates of beneficial interest."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I will address myself to the chairman of the subcommittee.

I have endeavored to explain hurriedly to him the purport of this amendment. I did not have time to fully explain the necessity for the amendment.

When reorganizations have taken place, and they have taken place by and through the so-called protective committees, self-appointed committees, they have been placed in a position as trustees of these very properties which they have mismanaged, as members of the protective committee. We have hundreds upon hundreds of pieces of property that have been reorganized, where the trustees have been appointed, and these trustees are the same men who were the protective committees and who were originally members of the house of issue or their law firms. Now, for years and years the bondholders or security owners do not receive a single dollar of interest on their investment, notwithstanding the fact that the properties are paying. The money is being consumed in fees and expenditures; not even the taxes have been paid. I know of hundreds of pieces of property—hotels and apartment buildings—where the taxes have not been paid for 8 or 9 years while they were in control of these committees, and they are not paid now. I am satisfied that unless we adopt this amendment, those gentlemen who have no money invested, who have no interest in these properties, but who are milking them day in and day out, will have the privilege to continue to rob the widows and orphans and thousands of American citizens who, in good faith, purchased these bonds and securities. In fact, none of those men should have been made trustees by any of the judges, but unfortunately they have been.

I think this amendment will give the Securities and Exchange Commission jurisdiction over the securities that have been reissued upon the very property on which they originally purchased these bonds. Therefore I ask the chairman of the subcommittee to agree to accept this amendment. I assure him it is necessary. It is needed. If he had the facts that I have, I feel he would not hesitate one second to accept the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has been very gracious in his attitude toward this bill, but the committee cannot accept the amendment for several reasons. In the first place, it is offered as part of the declared policy, or statement as to the necessity for the legislation, which declaration is founded upon the report of the Securities and Exchange Commission. I recall no place in that report where voting-trust certificates, liquidation-trust certificates, or certificates of beneficial interest were specifically named as reasons for the conclusions formed by the Commission. Very likely there is a field for legislation along the lines the gentleman from Illinois suggests, but should this amendment be adopted, it carries the administration of this bill into the realm of stock as distinguished from bonds, debentures, and the like; it calls for many substantial changes in other provisions of the bill. In other words, it deals with the same problems the bill deals with in other sections which are interwoven, and one leans upon the other in such a complicated way that the committee in discussing this amendment, knowing it was to be presented, feels very pointedly that the bill at this stage of the game should be passed as presented by the committee. It is unfortunate, as we see it, that the gentleman from Illinois did not appear before the committee and give us the benefit of the arguments he is presenting here today.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I notified the chairman of the committee last year and pleaded with him to notify me when hearings were to be had. I never received that courtesy, never was notified, and until the bill was reported I did not know that the committee was ready to report the bill. That is the reason I did not appear, and I regret that I did not. The gentleman knows I am interested, the gentleman knows that I have devoted a great deal of time and study to this thing and that I am sincere in my efforts to protect the investors in this class of securities.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman will permit me to say this, the gentleman knows that if I had had any advance notice that he wanted to appear before the committee, he would have been notified.

Mr. SABATH. I mean the chairman of the full committee.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The chairman of this subcommittee last year was the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Eicher, who is now a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission. I am sure that in the absence of the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], I can apologize for him in not bringing to the special attention of the gentleman from Illinois the fact that we were taking testimony.

Mr. Chairman, if legislation is presented along this line, which is foreign to the mechanics of this bill, I have little doubt that the gentleman will be given a hearing by the committee, but I know of no such legislation pending before the committee at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to obtain some information.

Do I understand that unless we adopt the amendment offered by the distinguished New Deal leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], that we shall have no effective regulation of stocks which are peddled?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman knows, I am sure, that the peddling of stocks was pretty well broken up under the Rayburn bill of 1934.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I understood that the gentleman from Illinois maintained that unless his amendment was incorporated in the bill there would be no real regulation of stock peddling. I am very interested in this matter, because many of my friends and constituents lost thousands and thousands of dollars as the result of the purchase of stock which turned out to be worthless, or almost worthless. Many bought Camco slot-machine watered stock which was peddled by President Roosevelt before he entered the White House. Those who purchased this stock were certainly taken for a ride in the Camco machine by our President and were stripped of many millions of dollars. After the President is retired from public life at the 1940 election he may return again to the stock-promotion and selling game, as well as the business of speculating in inflation currencies of foreign nations. I do not want to have innocent American investors lose their savings, as many did lose them when they purchased watered wildcat Camco slot-machine stock.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I believe the gentleman can rest assured that the existing laws are adequate to take care of a situation of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

"EXEMPTED SECURITIES AND TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 304. (a) The provisions of this title shall not apply to any of the following securities:

"(1) any security other than (A) a note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness, whether or not secured, or (B) a certificate of interest or participation in any such note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness, or (C) a temporary certificate for, or guaranty of, any such note, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, or certificate;

"(2) any certificate of interest or participation in two or more securities having substantially different rights and privileges, or a temporary certificate for any such certificate;

"(3) any security which, prior to or within 6 months after the enactment of this title, has been sold or disposed of by the issuer or bona fide offered to the public, but this exemption shall not apply to any new offering of any such security by an issuer subsequent to such 6 months;

"(4) any security exempted from the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, as heretofore amended, by paragraph (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), or (11) of subsection 3 (a) thereof;

"(5) any security issued under a mortgage indenture as to which a contract of insurance under the National Housing Act is in effect; and any such security shall be deemed to be exempt from the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 to the same extent as though such security were specifically enumerated in section 3 (a) (2) of such act;

"(6) any note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness issued or guaranteed by a foreign government or by a subdivision, department, municipality, agency, or instrumentality thereof;

"(7) and guaranty of any security which is exempted by this subsection;

"(8) any security which has been or is to be issued otherwise than under an indenture, but this exemption shall not be applied within a period of 12 consecutive months to more than $250,000 aggregate principal amount of any securities of the same issuer; or

"(9) any security which has been or is to be issued under an indenture which limits the aggregate principal amount of securities at any time outstanding thereunder to $1,000,000 or less, but this exemption shall not be applied within a period of 36 consecutive months to more than $1,000,000 aggregate principal amount of securities of the same issuer."

In computing the aggregate principal amount of securities to which the exemptions provided by paragraphs (8) and (9) may be applied, securities to which the provisions of sections 305 and 306 would not have applied, irrespective of the provisions of those paragraphs, shall be disregarded.

"(b) The provisions of sections 305 and 306 shall not apply (1) to any of the transactions exempted from the provisions of section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933 by section 4 thereof, as heretofore amended, or (2) to any transaction which would be so exempted but for the last sentence of paragraph (11) of section 2 of such act.

"(c) The Commission shall, on application by the issuer and after opportunity for hearing thereon, by order exempt from any one or more provisions of this title any security issued or proposed to be issued under any indenture under which, at the time such application is filed, securities referred to in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this section are outstanding, if and to the extent that the Commission finds that compliance with such provision or provisions, through the execution of a supplemental indenture or otherwise—

"(1) would require, by reason of the provisions of such indenture, or the provisions of any other indenture or agreement made prior to the enactment of this title, or the provisions of any applicable law, the consent of the holders of securities outstanding under any such indenture or agreement; or

"(2) would impose an undue burden on the issuer, having due regard to the public interest and the interests of investors.

"(d) The Commission may, on application by the issuer and after opportunity for hearing thereon, by order exempt from any one or more of the provisions of this title any security issued or proposed to be issued by a person organized and existing under the laws of a foreign government or a political subdivision thereof, if and to the extent that the Commission finds that compliance with such provision or provisions is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors.

"SECURITIES REQUIRED TO BE REGISTERED UNDER SECURITIES ACT

"SEC. 305. (a) Subject to the provisions of section 304, a registration statement relating to a security shall include the following information and documents, as though such inclusion were required by the provisions of section 7 of the Securities Act of 1933—

"(1) such information and documents as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe in order to enable the Commission to determine whether any person designated to act as trustee under the indenture under which such security has been or is to be issued is eligible to act as such under subsection (a) of section 310 or has a conflicting interest as defined in subsection (b) of section 310; and

"(2) an analysis of any provisions of such indenture with respect to (A) the definition of what shall constitute a default under such indenture, and the withholding of notice to the indenture security holders of any such default, (B) the authentication and delivery of the indenture securities and the application of the proceeds thereof, (C) the release or the release and substitution of any property subject to the lien of the indenture, (D) the satisfaction and discharge of the indenture, and (E) the evidence required to be furnished by the obligor upon the indenture securities to the trustee as to compliance with the conditions and covenants provided for in such indenture."

The information and documents required by paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to the person designated to act as indenture trustee shall be contained in a separate part of such registration statement, which part shall be signed by such person. Such part of the registration statement shall be deemed to be a document filed pursuant to this title, and the provisions of sections 11, 12, 17, and 24 of the Securities Act of 1933 shall not apply to statements therein or omissions therefrom.

"(b) The Commission shall issue an order prior to the effective date of registration refusing to permit such a registration statement to become effective, if it finds that—

"(1) the security to which such registration statement relates has not been or is not to be issued under an indenture;

"(2) such indenture does not conform to the requirements of sections 310 to 318, inclusive; or

"(3) any person designated as trustee under such indenture is not eligible to act as such under subsection (a) of section 310 or has any conflicting interest as defined in subsection (b) of section 310;

but no such order shall be issued except after notice and opportunity for hearing within the periods and in the manner required with respect to refusal orders pursuant to section 8 (b) of the Securities Act of 1933. If and when the Commission deems that the objections on which such order was based have been met, the Commission shall enter an order rescinding such refusal order, and the registration shall become effective at the time provided in section 8 (a) of the Securities Act of 1933, or upon the date of such rescission, whichever shall be the later.

"(c) A prospectus relating to any such security shall include, as though such inclusion were required by section 10 of the Securities Act of 1933, a written statement containing the analysis, set forth in the registration statement, of any indenture provisions with respect to the matters specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section, together with a supplementary analysis, prepared by the Commission, of such provisions and of the effect thereof, if, in the opinion of the Commission, the inclusion of such supplementary analysis is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, and the Commission so declares by order after notice and, if demanded by the issuer, opportunity for hearing thereon. Such order shall be entered prior to the effective date of registration, except that if opportunity for hearing thereon is demanded by the issuer such order shall be entered within a reasonable time after such opportunity for hearing.

"(d) The provisions of sections 11, 12, 17, and 24 of the Securities Act of 1933, and the provisions of sections 323 and 325 of this title, shall not apply to statements in or omissions from any analysis required under the provisions of this section or section 306 or 307.

"SECURITIES NOT REGISTERED UNDER SECURITIES ACT

"SEC. 306. (a) In the case of any security which is not registered under the Securities Act of 1933 and to which this subsection is applicable notwithstanding the provisions of section 304, unless such security has been or is to be issued under an indenture and an application for qualification is effective as to such indenture, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or

"(2) to carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale.

"(b) In the case of any security which is not registered under the Securities Act of 1933, but which has been or is to be issued under an indenture as to which an application for qualification is effective, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to carry or transmit any prospectus relating to any such security, unless such prospectus includes or is accompanied by a written statement that meets the requirements of subsection (c) of section 305; or

"(2) to carry or to cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale, unless accompanied or preceded by a written statement that meets the requirements of subsection (c) of section 305.

"QUALIFICATION OF INDENTURES COVERING SECURITIES NOT REQUIRED TO BE REGISTERED

"SEC. 307. (a) In the case of any security which is not required to be registered under the Securities Act of 1933 and to which subsection (a) of section 306 is applicable notwithstanding the provisions of section 304, an application for qualification of the indenture under which such security has been or is to be issued shall be filed with the Commission by the issuer of such security. Each such application shall be in such form, and shall be signed in such manner, as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Each such application shall include the information and documents required by subsection (a) of section 305. The information and documents required by paragraph (1) of such subsection with respect to the person designated to act as indenture trustee shall be contained in a separate part of such application, which part shall be signed by such person. Each such application shall also include such of the other information and documents which would be required to be filed in order to register such indenture security under the Securities Act of 1933 as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. An application may be withdrawn by the applicant at any time prior to the effective date thereof. Subject to the provisions of section 321, the information and documents contained in or filed with any application shall be made available to the public under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and copies thereof, photostatic or otherwise, shall be furnished to every applicant therefor at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe.

"(b) The filing with the Commission of an application, or of an amendment to an application, shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof by the Commission, but, in the case of an application, only if it is accompanied or preceded by payment to the Commission of a filing fee in the amount of $100, such payment to be made in cash or by United States postal money order or certified or bank check, or in such other medium of payment as the Commission may authorize by rule and regulation.

"(c) The provisions of section 8 of the Securities Act of 1933 and the provisions of subsection (b) of section 305 of this title shall apply with respect to every such application, as though such application were a registration statement filed pursuant to the provisions of such act.

"INTEGRATION OF PROCEDURE WITH SECURITIES ACT AND OTHER ACTS

"SEC. 308. (a) The Commission, by such rules and regulations or orders as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, shall authorize the filing of any information or documents required to be filed with the Commission under this title, or under the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, by incorporating by reference any information or documents on file with the Commission under this title or under any such act.

"(b) The Commission, by such rules and regulations or orders as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, shall provide for the consolidation of applications, reports, and proceedings under this title with registration statements, applications, reports, and proceedings under the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.

"WHEN QUALIFICATION BECOMES EFFECTIVE; EFFECT OF QUALIFICATION

"SEC. 309. (a) The indenture under which a security has been or is to be issued shall be deemed to have been qualified under this title—

"(1) when registration becomes effective as to such security; or

"(2) when an application for the qualification of such indenture becomes effective, pursuant to section 307.

"(b) After qualification has become effective as to the indenture under which a security has been or is to be issued, no stop order shall be issued pursuant to section 8 (d) of the Securities Act of 1933, suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement relating to such security or of the application for qualification of such indenture, except on one or more of the grounds specified in section 8 of such act.

"(c) The making, amendment, or rescission of a rule, regulation, or order under the provisions of this title (except to the extent authorized by subsection (a) of section 314 with respect to rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to such subsection) shall not affect the qualification, form, or interpretation of any indenture as to which qualification became effective prior to the making, amendment, or rescission of such rule, regulation, or order.

"(d) No trustee under an indenture which has been qualified under this title shall be subject to any liability because of any failure of such indenture to comply with any of the provisions of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"(e) Nothing in this title shall be construed as empowering the Commission to conduct an investigation or other proceeding for the purpose of determining whether the provisions of an indenture which has been qualified under this title are being complied with, or to enforce such provisions."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 73, lines 4 and 6, strike out the figures "$1,000,000" and insert the figures "$99,000."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am indeed gratified that the House has so much confidence in this committee; but I am satisfied that if I had a chance and opportunity to appear before the committee, notwithstanding that I am extremely busy as the gentleman from Maryland knows, I could have convinced the committee that this was a meritorious amendment. I am interested in the matter and have been for years; in fact, long before the Securities and Exchange Commission was created.

Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment reduces the $1,000,000 to $99,000. I believe that the small investor is entitled to the same protection as the large one. On big issues the wealthy man buys the bonds and the stocks, but on the small issues the less wealthy man buys. He has no firm of lawyers to protect him, inform him, or advise him; consequently I feel it is our duty to give him the same protection that we are giving to the large investors. All this does is give additional power to the Securities and Exchange Commission, not only on issues of $1,000,000 or over but on issues of $100,000 and above.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that this amendment should be agreed to; but if in the wisdom of the Members of the House they feel that the small investor is not entitled to the same protection that the large one is, that is up to the House. I have done my duty to the best of my ability. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Chairman, I want to make one thing clear. There is no purpose on my part to criticize the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] for not appearing before our committee. I appreciate that he is one of the busiest Members of this House. My remarks were made because in a bill of this importance necessarily one section must rely upon another and all tie together into one common approach to a very intricate subject. If the committee sees at the time these amendments are offered that unfortunate complications will follow their adoption, I hope the gentleman will not expect us to do other than oppose them.

I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will not be adopted, because this was one phase of the bill which the committee discussed at considerable length. There are small bankers all over the country. The bankers of the smaller cities of the Nation complained about the possibility of having to come to Washington every time there was a small indenture issue. They stated that the expense and the time consumed is such that they could not afford it, and that particular provision aroused more protest to the bill than anything else. The big cities do not mind it so much.

During the last 2 years and 8 months we had a total of four and one-fourth billion dollars in indentures which would have been regulated if this bill had been in effect. According to the testimony given before our committee, there was a total of 344 issues during that period of time, which made up the four and one-fourth billion dollars. When we split the sample at $1,000,000 we found that the total number of issues of $1,000,000 or less in 2 years was 103, but that was only 1.19 percent, not even 1.25 percent, of the total dollar amount of such issues during the last 2 years and 8 months. So that I say to the gentleman from Illinois that the facts and statistics show that a very, very nominal percentage of the total investment in this field comes under the $1,000,000 exemption. The following tables indicate clearly that while the expense of registration is only a small portion of the total expense of flotation, the impact is somewhat more severe in the case of smaller issues.

EXPENSES OF FLOTATION OF INDENTURE SECURITIES

The appended schedule presents the results of an analysis (the figures are taken from the registrants' own estimates) of the expenses of flotation of issues of indenture securities registered under the Securities Act during the 2½-year period from January 1, 1936, to June 30, 1938.

The significant fact demonstrated by these figures is that the expense of registration represents a comparatively small proportion of the total expense of publicly distributing such securities. They provide a clear answer to the suggestion that expense of registration (and, inferentially, the expense of complying with the present bill) has, or will have, a materially retarding influence on financing through the public distribution of indenture securities, and a clear indication that we must look elsewhere for the cause of the alleged trend toward private rather than public sale of indenture securities. In fact, for issues of $1,000,000 or more, underwriters' commission and discount was from four to nine times as important a factor in total cost as was registration expense. It is to be noted that the item of registration expense did not prevent the registration of a total of $9,363,597,000 of securities of all types during the 2 years ended June 30, 1937.

To summarize, on indenture security issues from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000, total expense of flotation constituted 4.7 percent of the gross offering price. But almost three-fourths of this total (3.57 percent of offering price) represented expenses wholly unrelated to the necessity of registration, including 3.3 percent for underwriters' commission and discount. And of the remaining 1.16 percent for printing, legal, accounting, engineering, miscellaneous, and registration fees, it is only fair to assume that a substantial proportion (from one-third to one-half) would have been incurred even if no registration were necessary.

This trend is even more marked in the case of the larger issues. On issues from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000, of total flotation expenses of 3.1 percent, more than two-thirds was for underwriters' commission and discount, and only one-fifth for expenses even partially attributable to registration; and for issues of $25,000,000 or more, more than three-fourths of the total expenses were for underwriters' commission and discount, and only about one-seventh for expenses even partially attributable to registration. In either case, in considering expenses partially attributable to registration, allowance must, of course, be made for the one-third to one-half of such expenses which would have been incurred even if no registration were necessary.

As pointed out elsewhere, the provisions of section 307 for incorporation by reference and for consolidation of proceedings with those under the Securities Act insure against any substantial increase in registration costs, and by exercising the privilege of commencing its proceedings for qualification of the indenture before filing its formal registration statement for the bonds themselves the issuer can guard against delay.

[1] Figures cover 192 issues for which comparable data were available, out of a total of 402 issues registered excluding 10 debenture issues registered by investment companies, percent figures represent percent of gross offering price.

[2] From ⅓ to ½ of these expenses are probably not attributable to the necessity of registration.

Answering the appeals of the representatives of the smaller cities, we felt without any hesitancy that this exemption of a million dollars under any indenture was fair. They cannot pyramid this. It is limited to $1,000,000 in a period of 3 years, and we feel that altogether it is a safe, sound provision of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, we hope that the amendment will be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

"ELIGIBILITY AND DISQUALIFICATION OF TRUSTEE

"Persons Eligible for Appointment as Trustee

"SEC. 310. (a) (1) The indenture to be qualified shall require that there shall at all times be one or more trustees thereunder, at least one of whom shall at all times be a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia (referred to in this title as the institutional trustee), which (A) is authorized under such laws to exercise corporate trust powers, and (B) is subject to supervision or examination by Federal, State, Territorial, or District of Columbia authority.

"(2) The indenture to be qualified shall require that such institutional trustee shall have at all times a combined capital and surplus of a specified minimum amount, which shall not be less than $150,000. If such institutional trustee publishes reports of condition at least annually, pursuant to law or to the requirements of said supervising or examining authority, the indenture may provide that, for the purposes of this paragraph, the combined capital and surplus of such trustee shall be deemed to be its combined capital and surplus as set forth in its most recent report of condition so published.

"(3) If the indenture to be qualified requires or permits the appointment of one or more co-trustees in addition to such institutional trustee, such indenture shall provide that the rights, powers, duties, and obligations conferred or imposed upon the trustees or any of them shall be conferred or imposed upon and exercised or performed by such institutional trustee, or such institutional trustee and such co-trustees jointly, except to the extent that under any law of any jurisdiction in which any particular act or acts are to be performed, such institutional trustee shall be incompetent or unqualified to perform such act or acts, in which event such rights, powers, duties, and obligations shall be exercised and performed by such co-trustees.

"(4) In the case of certificates of interest or participation, the indenture to be qualified shall require that the indenture trustee or trustees have the legal power to exercise all of the rights, powers, and privileges of a holder of the security or securities in which such certificates evidence an interest or participation.

"Disqualification of Trustee

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that if any indenture trustee has or shall acquire any conflicting interest as hereinafter defined, (i) such trustee shall, within 90 days after ascertaining that it has such conflicting interest, either eliminate such conflicting interest or resign, such resignation to become effective upon the appointment of a successor trustee and such successor's acceptance of such appointment, and the obligor upon the indenture securities shall take prompt steps to have a successor appointed in the manner provided in the indenture; and (ii) in the event that such trustee shall fail to comply with the provisions of clause (i) of this subsection, such trustee shall, within 10 days after the expiration of such 90-day period, transmit notice of such failure to the indenture security holders in the manner and to the extent provided in subsection (c) of section 313; and (iii) subject to the provisions of subsection (e) of section 315, any security holder who has been a bona fide holder of indenture securities for at least 6 months may, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, petition any court of competent jurisdiction for the removal of such trustee, and the appointment of a successor, if such trustee fails, after written request therefor by such holder, to comply with the provisions of clause (i) of this subsection. For the purposes of this subsection, an indenture trustee shall be deemed to have a conflicting interest if—

"(1) such trustee is trustee under another indenture under which any other securities, or certificates of interest or participation in any other securities, of an obligor upon the indenture securities are outstanding unless (A) the indenture securities are collateral trust notes under which the only collateral consists of securities issued under such other indenture, or (B) such other indenture is a collateral trust indenture under which the only collateral consists of indenture securities, or (C) such obligor has no substantial unmortgaged assets and is engaged primarily in the business of owning, or of owning and developing and/or operating, real estate, and the indenture to be qualified and such other indenture are secured by wholly separate and distinct parcels of real estate: Provided, That the indenture to be qualified may contain a provision excluding from the operation of this paragraph another indenture or indentures under which other securities, or certificates of interest or participation in other securities, of such an obligor are outstanding, if (i) the indenture to be qualified and such other indenture or indentures are wholly unsecured, and such other indenture or indentures are specifically described in the indenture to be qualified or are thereafter qualified under this title, unless the Commission shall have found and declared by order pursuant to subsection (b) of section 305 or subsection (c) of section 307 that differences exist between the provisions of the indenture to be qualified and the provisions of such other indenture or indentures which are so likely to involve a material conflict of interest as to make it necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors to disqualify such trustee from acting as such under one of such indentures, or (ii) the issuer shall have sustained the burden of proving, on application to the Commission and after opportunity for hearing thereon, that trusteeship under the indenture to be qualified and such other indenture is not so likely to involve a material conflict of interest as to make it necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors to disqualify such trustee from acting as such under one of such indentures;

"(2) such trustee or any of its directors or executive officers is an obligor upon the indenture securities or an underwriter for such an obligor;

"(3) such trustee directly or indirectly controls or is directly or indirectly controlled by or is under direct or indirect common control with an obligor upon the indenture securities or an underwriter for such an obligor;

"(4) such trustee or any of its directors or executive officers is a director, officer, partner, employee, appointee, or representative of an obligor upon the indenture securities, or of an underwriter (other than the trustee itself) for such an obligor who is currently engaged in the business of underwriting, except that (A) one individual may be a director and/or an executive officer of the trustee and a director and/or an executive officer of such obligor, but may not be at the same time an executive officer of both the trustee and of such obligor, and (B) if and so long as the number of directors of the trustee in office is more than nine, one additional individual may be a director and/or an executive officer of the trustee and a director of such obligor, and (C) such trustee may be designated by any such obligor or by any underwriter for any such obligor, to act in the capacity of transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent, escrow agent, or depositary, or in any other similar capacity, or, subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, to act as trustee, whether under an indenture or otherwise;

"(5) 10 percent or more of the voting securities of such trustee is beneficially owned either by an obligor upon the indenture securities or by any director, partner, or executive officer thereof, or 20 percent or more of such voting securities is beneficially owned, collectively, by any two or more of such persons; or 10 percent or more of the voting securities of such trustee is beneficially owned either by an underwriter for any such obligor or by any director, partner, or executive officer thereof, or is beneficially owned, collectively, by any two or more such persons;

"(6) such trustee is the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, (A) 5 percent or more of the voting securities, or 10 percent or more of any other class of security, of an obligor upon the indenture securities, not including indenture securities and securities issued under any other indenture under which such trustee is also trustee, or (B) 10 percent or more of any class of security of an underwriter for any such obligor;

"(7) such trustee is the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, 5 percent or more of the voting securities of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 10 percent or more of the voting securities of, or controls directly or indirectly or is under direct or indirect common control with, an obligor upon the indenture securities;

"(8) such trustee is the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, 10 percent or more of any class of security of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 50 percent or more of the voting securities of an obligor upon the indenture securities; or

"(9) such trustee owns, on May 15 in any calendar year, in the capacity of executor, administrator, testamentary or inter vivos trustee, guardian, committee or conservator, or in any other similar capacity, an aggregate of 25 percent or more of the voting securities, or of any class of security, of any person, the beneficial ownership of a specified percentage of which would have constituted a conflicting interest under paragraph (6), (7), or (8), of this subsection. The indenture to be qualified may provide, as to any such securities of which the indenture trustee acquired ownership through becoming executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee of an estate which included them, that the provisions of the preceding sentence shall not apply, for a period of not more than 2 years from the date of such acquisition, to the extent that such securities included in such estate do not exceed 25 percent of such voting securities or 25 percent of any such class of security. The indenture to be qualified shall provide that promptly after May 15 in each calendar year, the trustee shall make a check of its holdings of such securities in any of the above-mentioned capacities as of such May 15. Such indenture shall also provide that if the obligor upon the indenture securities fails to make payment in full of principal or interest under such indenture when and as the same becomes due and payable, and such failure continues for 30 days thereafter, the trustee shall make a prompt check of its holdings of such securities in any of the above-mentioned capacities as of the date of the expiration of such 30-day period, and after such date, notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, all such securities so held by the trustee, with sole or joint control over such securities vested in it, shall be considered as though beneficially owned by such trustee, for the purposes of paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) of this subsection.

"The indenture to be qualified shall provide that the specification of percentages in paragraphs (5) to (9), inclusive, of this subsection shall not be construed as indicating that the ownership of such percentages of the securities of a person is or is not necessary or sufficient to constitute direct or indirect control for the purposes of paragraph (3) or (7) of this subsection.

"For the purposes of paragraphs (6), (7), (8), and (9) of this subsection, (A) the terms 'security' and 'securities' shall include only such securities as are generally known as corporate securities, but shall not include any note or other evidence of indebtedness issued to evidence an obligation to repay moneys lent to a person by one or more banks, trust companies, or banking firms, or any certificate of interest or participation in any such note or evidence of indebtedness; (B) an obligation shall be deemed to be in default when a default in payment of principal shall have continued for 30 days or more, and shall not have been cured; and (C) the indenture trustee shall not be deemed the owner or holder of (i) any security which it holds as collateral security (as trustee or otherwise) for an obligation which is not in default as above defined, or (ii) any security which it holds as collateral security under the indenture to be qualified, irrespective of any default thereunder, or (iii) any security which it holds as agent for collection, or as custodian, escrow agent, or depositary, or in any similar representative capacity.

"For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'underwriter' when used with reference to an obligor upon the indenture securities means every person who, within 3 years prior to the time as of which the determination is made, was an underwriter of any security of such obligor outstanding at such time.

"Applicability of Section

"(c) The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 shall not be held to establish or authorize the establishment of any standards regarding the eligibility and qualifications of any trustee or prospective trustee under an indenture to be qualified under this title, or regarding the provisions to be included in any such indenture with respect to the eligibility and qualifications of the trustee thereunder, other than those established by the provisions of this section.

"PREFERENTIAL COLLECTION OF CLAIMS AGAINST OBLIGOR

"SEC. 311. (a) Subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, the indenture to be qualified shall provide that if the indenture trustee shall be, or shall become, a creditor, directly or indirectly, secured or unsecured, of an obligor upon the indenture securities, within 4 months prior to a default as defined in the last paragraph of this subsection, or subsequent to such a default, then, unless and until such default shall be cured, such trustee shall set apart and hold in a special account for the benefit of the trustee individually and the indenture security holders—

"(1) an amount equal to any and all reductions in the amount due and owing upon any claim as such creditor in respect of principal or interest, effected after the beginning of such 4 months' period and valid as against such obligor, and its other creditors, except any such reduction resulting from the receipt or disposition of any property described in paragraph (2) of this subsection, or from the exercise of any right of set-off which the trustee could have exercised if a petition in bankruptcy had been filed by or against such obligor upon the date of such default; and

"(2) all property received in respect of any claim as such creditor, either as security therefor, or in satisfaction or composition thereof, or otherwise, after the beginning of such 4 months' period, or an amount equal to the proceeds of any such property, if disposed of, subject, however, to the rights, if any, of such obligor and its other creditors in such property or such proceeds.

"Nothing herein contained shall affect the right of the indenture trustee—

"(A) to retain for its own account (i) payments made on account of any such claim by any person (other than such obligor) who is liable thereon, and (ii) the proceeds of the bona fide sale of any such claim by the trustee to a third person, and (iii) distributions made in cash, securities, or other property in respect of claims filed against such obligor in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law;

"(B) to realize, for its own account, upon any property held by it as security for any such claim, if such property was so held prior to the beginning of such 4 months' period;

"(C) to realize, for its own account, but only to the extent of the claim hereinafter mentioned, upon any property held by it as security for any such claim, if such claim was created after the beginning of such 4 months' period and such property was received as security therefor simultaneously with the creation thereof, and if the trustee shall sustain the burden of proving that at the time such property was so received the trustee had no reasonable cause to believe that a default as defined in the last paragraph of this subsection would occur within 4 months; or

"(D) to receive payment on any claim referred to in paragraph (B) or (C), against the release of any property held as security for such claim as provided in paragraph (B) or (C), as the case may be, to the extent of the fair value of such property.

For the purposes of paragraphs (B), (C), and (D), property substituted after the beginning of such 4 months' period for property held as security at the time of such substitution shall, to the extent of the fair value of the property released, have the same status as the property released, and, to the extent that any claim referred to in any of such paragraphs is created in renewal of or in substitution for or for the purpose of repaying or refunding any preexisting claim of the indenture trustee as such creditor, such claim shall have the same status as such preexisting claim.

"The indenture to be qualified shall provide that, if the trustee shall be required to account, the funds and property held in such special account and the proceeds thereof shall be apportioned between the trustee and the indenture security holders in such manner that the trustee and the indenture security holders realize, as a result of payments from such special account and payments of dividends on claims filed against such obligor in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law, the same percentage of their respective claims, figured before crediting to the claim of the trustee anything on account of the receipt by it from such obligor of the funds and property in such special account and before crediting to the respective claims of the trustee and the indenture security holders dividends on claims filed against such obligor in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law, but after crediting thereon receipts on account of the indebtedness represented by their respective claims from all sources other than from such dividends and from the funds and property so held in such special account. As used in this paragraph, with respect to any claim, the term 'dividends' shall include any distribution with respect to such claim, in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law, whether such distribution is made in cash, securities, or other property, but shall not include any such distribution with respect to the secured portion, if any, of such claim. The court in which such bankruptcy, receivership, or proceeding for reorganization is pending shall have jurisdiction (i) to apportion between the indenture trustee and the indenture security holders, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, the funds and property held in such special account and the proceeds thereof, or (ii) in lieu of such apportionment, in whole or in part, to give to the provisions of this paragraph due consideration in determining the fairness of the distributions to be made to the indenture trustee and the indenture security holders with respect to their respective claims, in which event it shall not be necessary to liquidate or to appraise the value of any securities or other property held in such special account or as security for any such claim, or to make a specific allocation of such distributions as between the secured and unsecured portions of such claims, or otherwise to apply the provisions of this paragraph as a mathematical formula.

"Any indenture trustee who has resigned or been removed after the beginning of such 4 months' period shall be subject to the provisions of this subsection as though such resignation or removal had not occurred. Any indenture trustee who has resigned or been removed prior to the beginning of such 4 months' period shall be subject to the provisions of this subsection if and only if the following conditions exist—

"(i) the receipt of property or reduction of claim which would have given rise to the obligation to account, if such indenture trustee had continued as trustee, occurred after the beginning of such 4 months' period; and

"(ii) such receipt of property or reduction of claim occurred within 4 months after such resignation or removal.

"As used in this subsection, the term 'default' means any failure to make payment in full of principal or interest, when and as the same becomes due and payable, under any indenture which has been qualified under this title, and under which the indenture trustee is trustee and the person of whom the indenture trustee is directly or indirectly a creditor is an obligor; and the term 'indenture security holder' means all holders of securities outstanding under any such indenture under which any such default exists.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified may contain provisions excluding from the operation of subsection (a) of this section a creditor relationship arising from—

"(1) the ownership or acquisition of securities issued under any indenture, or any security or securities having a maturity of 1 year or more at the time of acquisition by the indenture trustee;

"(2) advances authorized by a receivership or bankruptcy court of competent jurisdiction, or by the indenture, for the purpose of preserving the property subject to the lien of the indenture or of discharging tax liens or other prior liens or encumbranches on the trust estate, if notice of such advance and of the circumstances surrounding the making thereof is given to the indenture security holders, at the time and in the manner provided in the indenture;

"(3) disbursements made in the ordinary course of business in the capacity of trustee under an indenture, transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent or depositary, or other similar capacity;

"(4) an indebtedness created as a result of services rendered or premises rented; or an indebtedness created as a result of goods or securities sold in a cash transaction as defined in the indenture;

"(5) the ownership of stock or of other securities of a corporation organized under the provisions of section 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, which is directly or indirectly a creditor of an obligor upon the indenture securities; or

"(6) the acquisition, ownership, acceptance, or negotiation of any drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, or obligations which fall within the classification of self-liquidating paper as defined in the indenture.

"(c) In the exercise by the Commission of any jurisdiction under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 regarding the issue or sale, by any registered holding company or a subsidiary company thereof, of any security of such issuer or seller or of any other company to a person which is trustee under an indenture or indentures of such issuer or seller or other company, or of a subsidiary or associate company or affiliate of such issuer or seller or other company (whether or not such indenture or indentures are qualified or to be qualified under this title), the fact that such trustee will thereby become a creditor, directly or indirectly, of any of the foregoing shall not constitute a ground for the Commission taking adverse action with respect to any application or declaration, or limiting the scope of any rule or regulation which would otherwise permit such transaction to take effect; but in any case in which such trustee is trustee under an indenture of the company of which it will thereby become a creditor, or of any subsidiary company thereof, this subsection shall not prevent the Commission from requiring (if such requirement would be authorized under the provisions of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935) that such trustee, as such, shall effectively and irrevocably agree in writing, for the benefit of the holders from time to time of the securities from time to time outstanding under such indenture, to be bound by the provisions of this section, subsection (c) of section 315, and, in case of default (as such term is defined in such indenture), subsection (d) of section 315, as fully as though such provisions were included in such indenture. For the purposes of this subsection the terms 'registered holding company,' 'subsidiary company,' 'associate company,' and 'affiliate' shall have the respective meanings assigned to such terms in section 2 (a) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.

"BONDHOLDERS' LISTS

"SEC. 312. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring each obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish or cause to be furnished to the institutional trustee thereunder at stated intervals of not more than 6 months, and at such other times as such trustee may request in writing, all information in the possession or control of such obligor, or of any of its paying agents, as to the names and addresses of the indenture security holders, and requiring such trustee to preserve, in as current a form as is reasonably practicable, all such information so furnished to it or received by it in the capacity of paying agent.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall also contain provisions requiring that, within 5 business days after the receipt by the institutional trustee of a written application by any three or more indenture security holders stating that the applicants desire to communicate with other indenture security holders with respect to their rights under such indenture or under the indenture securities, and accompanied by a copy of the form of proxy or other communication which such applicants propose to transmit, and by reasonable proof that each such applicant has owned an indenture security for a period of at least 6 months preceding the date of such application, such institutional trustee shall, at its election, either—

"(1) afford to such applicants access to all information so furnished to or received by such trustee; or

"(2) inform such applicants as to the approximate number of indenture security holders according to the most recent information so furnished to or received by such trustee, and as to the approximate cost of mailing to such indenture security holders the form of proxy or other communication, if any, specified in such application.

If such trustee shall elect not to afford to such applicants access to such information, such trustee shall, upon the written request of such applicants, mail to all such indenture security holders copies of the form of proxy or other communication which is specified in such request, with reasonable promptness after a tender to such trustee of the material to be mailed and of payment, or provision for the payment, of the reasonable expenses of such mailing, unless within 5 days after such tender, such trustee shall mail to such applicants, and file with the Commission together with a copy of the material to be mailed, a written statement to the effect that, in the opinion of such trustee, such mailing would be contrary to the best interests of the indenture security holders or would be in violation of applicable law. Such written statement shall specify the basis of such opinion. After opportunity for hearing upon the objections specified in the written statement so filed, the Commission may, and if demanded by such trustee or by such applicants shall, enter an order either sustaining one or more of such objections or refusing to sustain any of them. If the Commission shall enter an order refusing to sustain any of such objections, or if, after the entry of an order sustaining one or more of such objections, the Commission shall find, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that all objections so sustained have been met, and shall enter an order so declaring, such trustee shall mail copies of such material to all such indenture security holders with reasonable promptness after the entry of such order and the renewal of such tender.

"(c) The disclosure of any such information as to the names and addresses of the indenture security holders in accordance with the provisions of this section, regardless of the source from which such information was derived, shall not be deemed to be a violation of any existing law, or of any law hereafter enacted which does not specifically refer to this section, nor shall such trustee be held accountable by reason of mailing any material pursuant to a request made under subsection (b) of this section."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be read and considered together because they relate to the same subject matter and to the same portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 102, line 24, strike out the word "its" and the remainder of line 25 and insert "the election of such indenture security holders."

Page 103, line 2, after the word "trustee", strike out the semicolon and insert "including the names, addresses, and holdings of all indenture security holders under such indenture."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from Maryland that this is a matter we discussed earlier in the day. I have a deep conviction this language ought to go into the bill.

As the bill now stands, here is what will happen in practice: Let us assume that a theater has been built and $250,000 in securities have been issued against the theater. Let us assume also that that issue goes in default through nonpayment of interest and principal. The trustee comes into effect and exercises his responsibility. He may or he may not do so. The holders of $250,000 in securities are scattered around the same State perhaps, but more often in four or five States. If they could get together they could probably perfect a plan of reorganization more often than not, but there can be no concerted action until they know where the security holders are, who they are, what their listings are, in order to perfect some kind of organization. Under the bill as it stands now three holders of securities can go to the trustee and say to him, at the election, of course, of the trustee, not the security holders, that they would like to have a list; in other words, they would like to have the trustee send out copies of a proxy to the holders that are of record on the trustee's list.

My notion is that this is the great weakness in the bill. It is the great weakness in bond indentures today. Unless we make it possible for bona fide holders for value to get together and pool their interests and determine what they should do with the property and with the equity we will not have gotten at the very root of the problem. The Securities and Exchange Commission realize that fact, as evidenced by the report they made. Some of their statements I indicated before to the Committee, but let me direct attention again to their report. In another place they refer to these lists of bondholders.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Under the provisions of this bill cannot the three do that now unless in the judgment of the Commission it is bad for the bondholders to allow it to be done?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; because in the language of the bill, at the election of the institutional trustee two things can happen, but it gives the trustee power to elect which of the two shall happen. The first one might be to supply the list. The second one might be in the language of the bill, to—

Inform such applicants as to the approximate number of indenture security holders according to the most recent information so furnished to or received by such trustee, and as to the approximate cost of mailing to such indenture security holders the form of proxy or other communication, if any, specified in such application.

But the material that will go out will be that which the trustee will permit to go to the bondholders. He will not supply a list to those who are parties in interest. The Securities and Exchange Commission has fully recognized that fact.

Mr. MAPES. The original provision gave that authority to one bondholder. The committee endeavored to protect everyone from the fellow who was just trying to stir up trouble, and put in the bill the requirement that three bondholders must cooperate. I wonder if the gentleman's amendment would not still make it possible for fellows who are just troublemakers to step in.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us see what the Securities and Exchange Commission had to say about this matter of the lists:

These lists in the possession of the bond houses were the only ones in existence. No one else could possibly compile them.

That is No. 1. Secondly:

The houses of issue took every precaution to keep them secret.

The Straus indentures contained this provision, and I quote again:

It is expressly agreed and understood, however, by the said mortgagor that it shall not be entitled at any time to the names or addresses of any holder or holders of the bonds at any time outstanding secured by this indenture.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman is reading from a report of the Commission about the situation as it existed before this legislation was before the House?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely.

Mr. MAPES. This legislation tries to remedy that situation in a reasonable way but not go to an unreasonable extreme.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to my friend from Michigan that in my humble judgment it does not remedy that difficulty because in the language of the bill you still give the institutional trustee the power to elect which of two things he shall do. If three bona fide bondholders come and say, "Give us a list," he will say, "Well, I would rather not give you a list, but I will tell you what I will do. I will comply with paragraph 2 of the bill and I will accept any proxy that you hand me and I will send it out to the security holders." This is exactly as good as nothing as far as getting at the root of the trouble is concerned and, in my judgment, is a very vital weakness in the bill that is now before us. There is, in my judgment, only one way in which that situation can be met so that the trustee can never stalemate the real parties in interest, namely, the holders of the bond, and that is to permit three or more of the bondholders, under the language of the bill, first having proved that they were bondholders for a period of 6 months or more, to go to the trustee and say, "We will take a list. We want to find out who the other cocreditors are. We are going to get together with them." But they can never do it unless the list is made available. Under this bill you do not make the list available. You permit the trustee to say whether he is going to give them a list or whether he will simply take a proxy that they have filed within 5 days before and send it out without disclosing the names of the bondholders under that indenture.

I say to you very frankly, Mr. Chairman, this is a weakness and it ought to be cured by amendment today. The amendment on the desk will cure this weakness and I sincerely hope it will be adopted by this Committee. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in support of the position taken by the gentleman from Michigan, I believe that the purpose of this amendment is clear to the Committee. As I read the amendment, if the amendment to page 102 is adopted it will virtually counteract the effect of the language on page 103 and undo what the committee feels is essential in this line. While the request of three bondholders will ordinarily, we believe, be met by the trustee with the delivery of a list, there has been a lot of shyster practice in this field. I believe the gentleman from Illinois well knows of some of those practices. It is the desire of the committee to protect the trustees, as an illustration, against publicity such as was given to income-tax returns. You know how that was abused by certain shysters, as we call them. The same practice has been prevalent in this field. If the trustee feels that that type of request is presented, we provide that the trustee shall pass on to the Commission briefly the set-up as it is, and the Commission will then say whether the trustee should grant the application.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Very gladly.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to the Committee there can be no analogy between a morbid and curious interest in the amount of income tax a man pays and the fact that here you have to have three holders and they must have been holders of record for at least 6 months. If anybody has an interest in the property, certainly it ought to be a bona fide holder for value when you take three of them together. There should not be any denial of their right to look at the list of creditors in the hope that some sort of remedial plan or remedial legislation or remedial action can be perfected in order to pull the property out of default.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois knows that I cited the income-tax list merely as an illustration of how the availability of such lists can be abused, and the gentleman knows very well what I had in mind when I referred to the list getting into the hands of certain persons.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I realize the fact that there may be shyster practices in that regard, but over a period of 3 years we found that the real shystering was on the other side and this is certainly the lesser of two evils in that respect.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. When the gentleman refers to the fact that the shystering was on the other side, he realizes the fact that there were no rights of the bondholders affected by that action and under this bill, if the trustee denies the application, he has a very easy remedy with the Securities and Exchange Commission, and, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and believe it should be adopted notwithstanding the opposition of the chairman of the subcommittee.

I believe if the chairman of the subcommittee were as well informed of the abuses as the gentleman from Illinois or as I am, he would not oppose this amendment. We learned that in nearly every instance where these protective committees came into power, they had not a dollar invested in the property. They were appointed by the houses of issue or their lawyers and they had control over the list of bondholders and security holders. They refused the bondholders or the people who had invested their money in the purchase of the bonds a list so they could find out from the other bondholders what steps were being taken to protect their interests and investments.

I concede that there were shyster lawyers representing the little investors, but for every shyster lawyer who appeared to defend the little bondholder, we had the big law firms representing the houses of issue that had charged such excessive fees against the bondholders that it was criminal.

In one instance, the fees that were charged amounted to $960,000 and in other instances as much as $500,000. In many cases the lawyers' fees, trustees' fees, and committees' fees absorbed nearly the entire income, and in some instances equaled the value of the property.

I hope the gentleman will not continue to oppose these amendments giving an honest investor an opportunity to join with others in the same position to familiarize themselves with respect to the question of whether or not their money is being properly handled.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I want to say to the gentleman with respect to the phase of this problem that the gentleman is complaining about, exorbitant fees of committees, attorneys, and so forth, upon the adoption of this measure as a law those practices are a thing of the past, and the gentleman must know that.

Mr. SABATH. I hope so. We thought when we passed section 77 (b) that the investors would be protected, but that section gave to the lawyers and many of these professional bondholders' committees a loophole to continue to rob and impose upon the investors, and the gentleman knows that the section did not help in that respect. I am afraid that this restriction, which denies these people the right to obtain the list, will have the same effect. Why should they be denied that right? Why should anyone who invested five or ten or fifteen thousand dollars be deprived of the right of knowing the identity of the persons who invested with them in a bond issue?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 24, noes 28.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

"REPORTS BY INDENTURE TRUSTEE

"SEC. 313. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to transmit to the indenture security holders as hereinafter provided, at stated intervals of not more than 12 months, a brief report with respect to—

"(1) its eligibility and its qualifications under section 310, or in lieu thereof, if to the best of its knowledge it has continued to be eligible and qualified under such section, a written statement to such effect;

"(2) the character and amount of any advances made by it, as indenture trustee, which remain unpaid on the date of such report, and for the reimbursement of which it claims or may claim a lien or charge, prior to that of the indenture securities, on the trust estate or on property or funds held or collected by it as such trustee, if such advances so remaining unpaid aggregate more than one-half of 1 percent of the principal amount of the indenture securities outstanding on such date;

"(3) the amount, interest rate, and maturity date of all other indebtedness owing to it in its individual capacity, on the date of such report, by the obligor upon the indenture securities, with a brief description of any property held as collateral security therefor, except an indebtedness based upon a creditor relationship arising in any manner described in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), or (6) of subsection (b) of section 311;

"(4) the property and funds physically in its possession as indenture trustee on the date of such report;

"(5) any release, or release and substitution, of property subject to the lien of the indenture (and the consideration therefor, if any) which it has not previously reported;

"(6) any additional issue of indenture securities which it has not previously reported; and

"(7) any action taken by it in the performance of its duties under the indenture which it has not previously reported and which in its opinion materially affects the indenture securities or the trust estate, except action in respect of a default, notice of which has been or is to be withheld by it in accordance with an indenture provision authorized by subsection (b) of section 315.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall also contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to transmit to the indenture security holders as hereinafter provided, within the times hereinafter specified, a brief report with respect to—

"(1) the release, or release and substitution, of property subject to the lien of the indenture (and the consideration therefor, if any) unless the fair value of such property, as set forth in the certificate or opinion required by paragraph (1) of subsection (d) of section 314, is less than 10 percent of the principal amount of indenture securities outstanding at the time of such release, or such release and substitution, such report to be so transmitted within 90 days after such time; and

"(2) the character and amount of any advances made by it as such since the date of the last report transmitted pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) (or if no such report has yet been so transmitted, since the date of execution of the indenture), for the reimbursement of which it claims or may claim a lien or charge, prior to that of the indenture securities, on the trust estate or on property or funds held or collected by it as such trustee, and which it has not previously reported pursuant to this paragraph, if such advances remaining unpaid at any time aggregate more than 10 percent of the principal amount of indenture securities outstanding at such time, such report to be so transmitted within 90 days after such time.

"(c) The indenture to be qualified shall also provide that reports pursuant to this section shall be transmitted by mail—

"(1) to all registered holders of indenture securities, as the names and addresses of such holders appear upon the registration books of the obligor upon the indenture securities;

"(2) to such holders of indenture securities as have, within the 2 years preceding such transmission, filed their names and addresses with the indenture trustee for that purpose; and

"(3) except in the case of reports pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, to all holders of indenture securities whose names and addresses have been furnished to or received by the indenture trustee pursuant to section 312.

"(d) The indenture to be qualified shall also provide that a copy of each such report shall, at the time of such transmission to indenture security holders, be filed with each stock exchange upon which the indenture securities are listed, and also with the Commission.

"REPORTS BY OBLIGOR; EVIDENCE OF COMPLIANCE WITH INDENTURE PROVISIONS

"Periodic reports

"SEC. 314. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring each person who, as set forth in the registration statement or application, is or is to be an obligor upon the indenture securities covered thereby—

"(1) to file with the indenture trustee copies of the annual reports and of the information, documents, and other reports (or copies of such portions of any of the foregoing as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe) which such obligor is required to file with the Commission pursuant to section 13 or section 15 (d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; or, if the obligor is not required to file information, documents, or reports pursuant to either of such sections, then to file with the indenture trustee and the Commission, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission, such of the supplementary and periodic information, documents, and reports which may be required pursuant to section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, in respect of a security listed and registered on a national securities exchange as may be prescribed in such rules and regulations;

"(2) to file with the indenture trustee and the Commission, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission, such additional information, documents, and reports with respect to compliance by such obligor with the conditions and covenants provided for in the indenture, as may be required by such rules and regulations, including, in the case of annual reports, if required by such rules and regulations, certificates or opinions of independent public accountants, conforming to the requirements of subsection (e) of this section, as to compliance with conditions or covenants, compliance with which is subject to verification by accountants, but no such certificate or opinion shall be required as to any matter specified in clauses (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (3) of subsection (c); and

"(3) to transmit to the holders of the indenture securities upon which such person is an obligor, in the manner and to the extent provided in subsection (c) of section 313, such summaries of any information documents, and reports required to be filed by such obligor pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection as may be required by rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission."

The rules and regulations prescribed under this subsection shall be such as are necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, having due regard to the types of indentures, and the nature of the business of the class of obligors affected thereby, and the amount of indenture securities outstanding under such indentures, and, in the case of any such rules and regulations prescribed after the indentures to which they apply have been qualified under this title, the additional expense, if any, of complying with such rules and regulations. Such rules and regulations may be prescribed either before or after qualification becomes effective as to any such indenture.

"Evidence of Recording of Indenture

"(b) If the indenture to be qualified is or is to be secured by the mortgage or pledge of property, such indenture shall contain provisions requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee—

"(1) promptly after the execution and delivery of the indenture, an opinion of counsel (who may be of counsel for such obligor) either stating that in the opinion of such counsel the indenture has been properly recorded and filed so as to make effective the lien intended to be created thereby, and reciting the details of such action, or stating that in the opinion of such counsel no such action is necessary to make such lien effective; and

"(2) at least annually after the execution and delivery of the indenture, an opinion of counsel (who may be of counsel for such obligor) either stating that in the opinion of such counsel such action has been taken with respect to the recording, filing, re-recording, and refiling of the indenture as is necessary to maintain the lien of such indenture, and reciting the details of such action, or stating that in the opinion of such counsel no such action is necessary to maintain such lien.

"Evidence of Compliance With Conditions Precedent

"(c) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee evidence of compliance with the conditions precedent, if any, provided for in the indenture (including any covenants compliance with which constitutes a condition precedent) which relate to the authentication and delivery of the indenture securities, to the release or the release and substitution of property subject to the lien of the indenture, to the satisfaction and discharge of the indenture, or to any other action to be taken by the indenture trustee at the request or upon the application of such obligor. Such evidence shall consist of the following:

"(1) certificates or opinions made by officers of such obligor who are specified in the indenture, stating that such conditions precedent have been complied with;

"(2) an opinion of counsel (who may be of counsel for such obligor) stating that in his opinion such conditions precedent have been complied with; and

"(3) in the case of conditions precedent compliance with which is subject to verification by accountants (such as conditions with respect to the preservation of specified ratios, the amount of net quick assets, negative-pledge clauses, and other similar specific conditions), a certificate or opinion of an accountant, who, in the case of any such conditions precedent to the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, and not otherwise, shall be an independent public accountant selected or approved by the indenture trustee in the exercise of reasonable care, if the aggregate principal amount of such indenture securities and of other indenture securities authenticated and delivered since the commencement of the then current calendar year (other than those with respect to which a certificate or opinion of an accountant is not required, or with respect to which a certificate or opinion of an independent public accountant has previously been furnished) is 10 percent or more of the aggregate amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding; but no certificate or opinion need be made by any person other than an officer or employee of such obligor who is specified in the indenture, as to (A) dates or periods not covered by annual reports required to be filed by the obligor, in the case of conditions precedent which depend upon a state of facts as of a date or dates or for a period or periods different from that required to be covered by such annual reports, or (B) the amount and value of property additions, except as provided in paragraph (3) of subsection (d), or (C) the adequacy of depreciation, maintenance, or repairs.

"Certificates of Fair Value

"(d) If the indenture to be qualified is or is to be secured by the mortgage or pledge of property or securities, such indenture shall contain provisions—

"(1) requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee a certificate or opinion of an engineer, appraiser, or other expert as to the fair value of any property or securities to be released from the lien of the indenture, which certificate or opinion shall state that in the opinion of the person making the same the proposed release will not impair the security under such indenture in contravention of the provisions thereof, and requiring further that such certificate or opinion shall be made by an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert, if the fair value of such property or securities and of all other property or securities released since the commencement of the then current calendar year, as set forth in the certificates or opinions required by this paragraph, is 10 percent or more of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding; but such a certificate or opinion of an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert shall not be required in the case of any release of property or securities, if the fair value thereof as set forth in the certificate or opinion required by this paragraph is less than $25,000 or less than 1 percent of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding;

"(3) requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee a certificate or opinion of an engineer, appraiser, or other expert as to the fair value to such obligor of any property the subjection of which to the lien of the indenture is to be made the basis for the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, the withdrawal of cash constituting a part of the trust estate, or the release of property or securities subject to the lien of the indenture, and requiring further that if

"(A) within 6 months prior to the date of acquisition thereof by such obligor, such property has been used or operated, by a person or persons other than such obligor, in a business similar to that in which it has been or is to be used or operated by such obligor, and

In such cases, such certificate or opinion shall be made by an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert selected or approved by the indenture trustee in the exercise of reasonable care.
